"OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND"
19 West 44th Street, New York

GENTLEMEN: I want to do my part to help the American soldiers who are fighting my battle in France. If tobacco will do it, I'm for tobacco. (Check below how you desire to contribute.)

I enclose $1.00. I will adopt a soldier and send you $1.00 a month to supply him with "smokes" for the duration of the war.

I send you herewith ....., my contribution towards the purchase of tobacco for American soldiers. This does not obligate me to contribute more.

MORTIMER FILM CLEANER

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook

for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Third Edition

The most complete, exhaustive and instructive work ever published on the projection of moving pictures. Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A real help and business builder for exhibitors, theatre managers and owners. It tells all about theatre advertising, type, printing and paper, house programs, lobby displays, newspaper advertising, posters, heralds, etc., etc. 300 pages. $2.00, postage paid. P. S.—Mr. Sargent conducts a weekly department in this same style in the Moving Picture World, which contains many up-to-date business-getting ideas.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

An up-to-date work on the electrical equipment of picture theatres by a practical electrical expert. Contains chapters on electricity, D.C. and A.C. current, resistance and resistance devices, electric service, wiring, lighting, etc. Also contains practical suggestions and all necessary reference tables on wire sizes and capacity, weights and measures, heat units, etc., etc. 260 pages, illustrated. $2.50, postage paid.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Our newest book is one that will fill a long-felt want to those contemplating the building of a theatre. This is a very complete and exhaustive work by an architect with many years of practical experience in theatre and studio construction. Fully illustrated, with considerable data as to requirements, construction cost, building laws, etc. $3.00, postage paid.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Third Edition

Complete instruction in photoplay writing, including study of plots, how to obtain and how to develop; writing the synopsis; studio requirements; script preparation and marketing; technical terms; examples of actual scripts in facsimile typewriting, etc. 400 pages. $3.00, postage paid.

Screencraft

or the Making of a Photoplay

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

A comprehensive and thought-provoking treatment of the subject in a series of chapters, similar to a university course of lectures, by a successful writer of photoplays. Also contains a complete working scenario and several sample pages of manuscript. 150 pages; illustrated. $2.00, postage paid.

BEWARE OF CERTAIN EXCHANGE PROPOSITIONS

(To Remind You, Look on Page 1207, M. P. World, May 25, 1918)

You know that your Power's Machine gives the best picture when in proper condition. When your Power's machine is worn out do not let a foxy salesman compare your Power's projection with that of a new machine of other make. A new Power's will do more for you than any other make. Besides you will take no chances in experimenting and breaking in your operator on another make machine. The Power's can't be beaten. That is a fact proven by the big majority of prominent exhibitors.

FRED J. DOLLINGER writes to us as follows:

Three years ago you equipped our theatre with a complete outfit—two Power's 6-A projecting machines which I am pleased to state have given us good service and are still in good condition. Nevertheless, I want to be up to date and I herewith place my order for two more Power's machines, latest type, and I am willing to pay the regular price—although I have been offered two complete projection machines from other manufacturers without charge. The reason I prefer the Power's machine is that I have a 165½ foot throw, and the size of my picture is 16½ x 20½', on a plaster wall, and I use only 45 to 50 amperes—and have perfect projection. Please let me know when you will be able to install the new machines.

Very truly yours,

CLAREMONT THEATRE,
FRED J. DOLLINGER, Manager.

New York, Dec. 2nd, 1917.

He did not fall for the Salesman's (?) statement that HIS machine is used in the Best Theatres on Broadway, New York. Dollinger told him that his Power's Projection is the best one in New York City. Therefore Dollinger sticks to Power's, the Better Projector.

A Veritable Rain of Money

"I believe I have hung up a record," writes C. E. Miller of La Salle, Colo., "and you may think I am foolish when I tell you that I'm going to play a return engagement. Statistics would appear to prove that every person living in La Salle saw 'The Kaiser' on the first showing. I am willing to gamble that they want to see it again. I charged an admission of $1 all over the house. I will also charge $1 the next time. Please let me have a print as soon as possible."

La Salle has a population of 300. Mr. Miller's receipts for the day were $301—or an average of a trifle more than a dollar for every resident of the town. If this isn't a record we'd like to know just what it is.

Out in Cherokee, Iowa, the American Theatre says: "Our audiences forgot they were looking at a picture and they did all that New York said they would. They hissed, they yelled, they whistled, they cheered and stamped. It is in our opinion the greatest play that was ever in our house. It also made us more money than any other picture."

"The KAISER The Beast of Berlin"

"It gave more satisfaction at our Liberty Theatre and made more clear money for us than any other production we have ever played," says J. S. McGill of Vancouver. "We have only one regret—that we didn't get it for a full week instead of only two days. Anybody but Jewel, with such a picture, would have made it a state rights production and would not have given the regular exhibitor a chance on the big money-making possibilities of the film. We know this to be a fact—that it is one picture in a thousand for drawing power, because during its run at the Liberty it was shown to scores of people who seldom, if ever, make it a practice to go to shows. If exhibitors will take our tip, they will play 'The Kaiser' at advanced prices." A good tip; but our own tip is to first get your reservation. Your competitor is acting today.

What has the young man just done?

He has shot another who, he thinks, has ruined the girl he loves.

Will the victim recover?

That rests with the other man in the picture—the greatest surgeon in the country, now in disgrace, but in love with the same woman as the other two.

If you were this great surgeon, would you help one rival escape and bring the other back to life—or would you—?

I'd go first to see how this torturing problem was solved in the big, tense picture made from Mary Roberts Rinehart's famous "K" as published by Houghton, Mifflin Co.—

A statement from Mr. De Mille—

"I chose the David Graham Phillips novel 'Old Wive for New', because "It has a big human appeal; it deals with intima phases of marriage and divorce; every phase a humor of a woman is in it.

"It shows that a wife must compete with other wom if she wishes to keep her husband, and that by su competition she benefits physically, morally a mentally.

"It is a real object lesson for wives, who are taug by the story that merely being virtuous is not, as may have been at one time, enough in these day

A Money Picture Needs

"The human note is self-sacrifice and renunciation though the ending is satisfactory.

"It gives a wonderful chance for gorgeous costuming and scenes with wide diversity.

"It mirrors night life of Broadway but shows the evil results of Broadway life, in the effects upon the highly contrasted characters.

"The moral is obvious and convincing but there is not a trace of preaching.

"It has fine advertising possibilities with name of author, splendid gown stuff, marriage and divorce problem, catch phrases such as 'Why husbands leave home,' and so on.

A Special Opportunity—
"THE VICTIM"

INTER-OCEAN has been selected to distribute in all foreign markets a feature play of such unique dramatic appeal that a trial showing has already resulted in several sales. To see "The Victim" is to want to exploit it. The effect on the spectator is simply tremendous. It is a "repeat" picture. Even the veteran buyer—the "wise" film man—wants a second look. It is just punch! punch! PUNCH! The priestly hero, in facing the electric chair, risks all for a principle—and we all of us care for that sort of chap. The picture is an absolute succession of thrills. There has never been a melodrama like it! And it challenges solution up to the last few feet of the sizzling finish. Can be worked as a "special," with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller.

WILSON HAILS UNITY OF COMMAND
In Cable to General Foch, Declares It Most Hopeful Augury of Success
WASHINGTON, March 30—President Wilson today cabled General Foch, upon his appointment, as Supreme Commander of the Allied forces, as follows:
"May I not convey to you my sincere congratulations on your new authority? Such unity of command is a most hopeful augury of ultimate success."
THE VALUE OF A SUPREME COMMAND
Just as President Wilson and the Allies welcomed a "Supreme Command," so responsible exhibitors today all over the country are supporting the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan, as the ONE FORCE in the motion picture field, organized to co-ordinate the interests of exhibitor and producer.

WOLFVILLE TALES

"Tucson Jennie's Heart"

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

The Humor and Chivalry of the West

WOLFVILLE TALES are as far removed from the crude "chase" type of western as brains can make them—the author's and the producer's. They are literature transferred to the screen. Theirs is the punch of true atmosphere and human characters.

They class properly with the O. Henry stories, and alternate with them as releases.

TULSA DEMOCRAT

TELLING THE TRUTH IN PICTURES.

FORMER AMBASSADOR GERARD HAS TOLD the truth about Germany in his book and the incidents he relates have been picturized, making a film that should be seen by every American. These pictures show history in the making. They do even more, for they awaken in the breast of every right thinking person a determination to do all that can be done to crush out German militarism and have no more of Hohenzollern ambition on earth.

It will not be possible for every American to read the book written by former Ambassador Gerard, "My Four Years in Germany," but the pictures tell the story. It is in brief form and more compact than the book, but it is all there and it is undisputed history. It places before the people of the world the duplicity and the cruelty of German militarism. It does more—it makes the blood of Americans heat up to the boiling point. The pictures show only the bare truth at that.

The startling statements made in Ambassador Gerard's book have not been disputed, and fortunately there comes at this time from an unexpected source full and complete corroboration in the publication of the secret memorandum of Prince Lichnowsky, former German ambassador to Great Britain. If the Gerard book left any doubt in the public mind as to whether Germany deliberately provoked the war, Lichnowsky's statements remove that doubt and make the truth stand out in all its hideousness.

Prince Lichnowsky is now a prisoner and no doubt will pay the extreme penalty for the disclosures he has made. He has added proof to the Gerard accusation that Germany is the greatest traitor of all time and that the German kaiser stands alone responsible for those four years of horror and bloodshed.

There is one brief statement on the screen in the Gerard pictures that will cause the world to revolt against the German kaiser. It states that if all the dead in this war were laid end to end they would reach from New York to San Francisco and back again as far as Denver. It is added that if the man responsible for their deaths could be scourged every step of the way on that long line the punishment would not be severe enough.

ONE OF THE 3 BIGGEST MONEY MAKERS

DETROIT TIMES

There Is a Great Lesson In the Washington For this Picture Applause

The other day we dropped into the Washington theater, to see the picture there.

It was not an ordinary picture show and it had attracted an unusually large audience.

These people had not come to pass an idle hour or to indulge in a laugh at the antics of Charlie Chaplin.

They had come to see history—history vitalized and made real in a manner which no printed page, no matter what the artistry of the author, could ever achieve.

The film we saw was Girard's book "My Four Years in Germany" transferred to the screen.

There were no laughs in it. It held the attention of its audience from beginning to end.

It made the sometimes too vaguely understood crimes of Germany real to many who had previously thot of them only in a detached manner.

And there was a lesson, too, for our government.

The most loudly applauded incident was the scene showing the famous retort of Gerard to the German official who boasted that Germany had 500,000 trained reservists in the United States who would crush any American hostility to Germany.

Gerard's reply, our readers may recall, was:

"We have five hundred thousand and one lamp-posts to which they will soon find themselves hanging if they attempt trouble."

The applause which greeted this sentiment was a real demonstration.

It goes to show how popular the idea of lamp-posts in connection with pro-Germans and traitors is becoming among the people.

And it ought to suggest to our Washington authorities the necessity of stringent laws which will insure adequate punishment for the enemies within our gates.

Otherwise, the people will have recourse to the lamp-posts.

MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY.

An Open Letter to Exhibitors Who Run Old Films Under New Titles

They're Using You for a Catspaw

When you book old pictures under new titles, you know what you are paying for. When you advertise old pictures to your patrons under new titles, you lay yourself open to an imputation of fraud, for they don't know what they are to see until you have taken their money.

The men who sell the faked titles don't care a Tinker's dam what your patrons think of you. The fact that they have virtually made a swindler of you doesn't hurt them any because you went into the dishonest deal with your eyes open.

The big point, so far as you are concerned, is: Are you going to allow these men to make a dupe of you for their own selfish ends?

If you want to run re-issues, all right; they are entirely legitimate. But don't be foolish enough to cheat with false titles the people whose dimes and nickels buy your bread and butter.

"WILD BABIES"

The young of wild animals are as attractive in their way as human infants, but it is hard to present them under natural conditions and get a true study. Professor Raymond Ditmars, however, promises an absolutely realistic picture of "Wild Babies" in the short "Living Book of Nature" film at the ..... next ..... The picture begins with the evolution of the tiny tadpole into the frog. Next the baby porcupines are shown, sticking out their infant bristles, yet guarded just as jealously by Mamma as if they were spineless infants. Next the aoudad teaches its young to climb. This playful animal lives among the rocks, and the sole ambition of the mothers is to make their children mountaineers. Ditmars has an unerring vision, a deft directoral touch, and it will be a pleasure to see him put the Educational's "Wild Babies" through their stunts.

TRIANGLE

That Hot Weather Bogie

EVERY wise exhibitor should anticipate the hot summer season. Now is the time to make plans that will assure good business during the coming warm weather.

The wise exhibitor realizes that he must compete with amusement parks, lake and ocean resorts and with all open air amusements for the next few months. He should also realize, however, that people do not stay by their "firesides" in the summer and that, although competition is stronger, yet the opportunity for business is much greater.

Exhibitors who provide a cool and comfortable theatre, good music, courteous attendants and, most important of all, good pictures, should have no trouble in making money during the summer.

TRIANGLE exhibitors have a decided advantage during the summer season. They are assured of a consistent program of high quality productions that is bound to please their patrons; a program that has won its way into the hearts and judgment of thousands of exhibitors from Maine to California; a program whose lure can be pitted successfully against the lure of the outdoors and bring old and young to the box office of any well conducted theatre.

No matter what pictures you have been showing, no matter what the trade mark, stars or producers—to exhibitors not showing TRIANGLE productions we address this question, "Why not anticipate your summer business by making a contract now for TRIANGLE service?"

We realize that in inviting you to run TRIANGLE pictures during the unfavorable season of the year, we are subjecting our pictures to the most rigid and exacting test which any service can sustain. TRIANGLE gladly extends this challenge knowing that TRIANGLE pictures are bound to make good.

There's a TRIANGLE Exchange near you that is waiting to hear from YOU.

ALAN DALE

says:

"I saw an extremely interesting and vividly gripping picture the other day. It was "THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN," with Miss Grace Valentine as the star. Miss Valentine is unforgetably authoritative, marvelously subtle, cynical and intriguing. I either like a picture for its story and its actors or —I don't like it. In the case of "THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN" I appreciated the film for the sake of the Anspacher story, and for the unusually illuminative acting of Miss Grace Valentine."

T. E. OLIPHANT

says:

"As a screen entertainment 'The Unchastened Woman' is the best play of the season.

"The heroine will enjoy a screen career quite as successful, if indeed not more so, than rewarded her appearance on the spoken stage. Miss Valentine's brand of acting is excellent."

in the DRAMATIC MIRROR says:

"The brilliant performance of Grace Valentine in the title role, and the excellent support given her by a large, capable and representative cast stands out strongly. A thoroughly interesting story, mounted to its best advantage.

"It is a masterful character study of a woman who is chaste in body, but whose soul is just the reverse."

HARRIET UNDERHILL

in the NEW YORK TRIBUNE says:

"The most interesting thing that has been done on the screen this season. We never dreamed Grace Valentine could act like that. She was so convincing and compelling."

The play from which the picture was evolved was a New York sensation, and like all the Morosco productions enjoyed a long run on Broadway. As evinced by the enthusiasm the picture evoked, "The Unchastened Woman" will continue in popularity and grow in the hearts of the picture fans everywhere.

Facts and Comments

PLEASE observe for a moment Dr. Ellis P. Oberholzer. The doctor is secretary of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, well known to motion picture producers, and the man who, in his official capacity, has endeavored to stop the showing in Pennsylvania of such propaganada pictures as "My Four Years in Germany," not to mention others offered in the general run of business. In his authoritative position as censor for the people of Pennsylvania the trade has managed to get along notwithstanding the Doctor's decisions, but we do not understand where he comes in to spread the pernicious doctrine of censorship to other states and cities.

We refer to the activities of Dr. Oberholzer at the biennial session of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, held during the first week in May at Hot Springs, Ark., at which time he made a strenuous effort to secure the adoption of a resolution favoring legalized censorship throughout the country. As we understand the law it provides that Dr. Oberholzer shall view and pass judgment upon such motion pictures as are to be shown at picture theaters in Pennsylvania and that his activities end just there. Where he finds it within the scope of his duty to go gallivanting about the country to lecture in favor of censorship we do not understand. Who pays the expenses of such jaunts?

However that may be it shall stand to the everlasting credit of the General Federation of Women's Clubs that its members promptly squelched the efforts of the energetic doctor and sent him home a wiser man. Whatever may be said about Major Funkhouser he at least attends to his appointed business.

HERE'S a good live tip to American producers, for which we must give credit to the editor of the Cinema, a British motion picture trade paper. Cinema regrets that there are not British propaganda pictures such as "My Four Years In Germany," produced in the United States, and suggests the reason to be that the "official mind is as dull as dishwater" and "shackled by antiquated conceptions of what is fit and proper." Continuing Cinema intimates that the British Blue Books are filled with subjects for such pictures. In view of this bit of information it might be well for some of our American producers to take a look at some of the aforesaid Blue Books. Something "fit and proper" might be found.

THE publication of the letters that passed between Sydney Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors League, and Charles C. Pettijohn of the American Exhibitors' Association, published in last week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has led to the belief by some that Mr. Cohen is a candidate for the office of president of the National League at the Boston convention. Mr. Cohen hastens to inform us that he has no desire to become president of the National League and, consequently, is not a candidate. His sole desire is, he says, to see the league separated from every form of business except that of building up the organization along legitimate lines. In this commendable ambition the MOVING PICTURE WORLD desires to second his efforts. There is a demand for a strong and effective trade organization to look after the interests of motion pictures and the men who have made investments in theaters. Such an organization, properly administered, will become of great assistance to the business at large. It is up to the exhibitor to perfect such a trade organization, but the exhibitor who dabbles in the business of production and distribution is almost certain to lose out in his proper calling. Cut out the "side issues" and give us a national organization without them.

If exhibitors will do a little thinking they will discover that no profit has come to them through the side issues that have been started by the leaders of the League in the past year for their especial benefit. How much money has the trade paper business paid them? Yet they were told that a large portion of the profits of that venture was to go into the coffers of the League. What has it all amounted to? If there were any profits, who got them? Since the launching of the trade paper scheme another proposition has been offered to exhibitors by officials of the League and the exhibitor has been asked to assist in its financing. Does any one of them believe any of the alleged profits of the new scheme will ever reach their pockets? Yet it is all being done in the name of the exhibitor and the League.

Let us hope that Mr. Cohen and his associates will be able to defeat any candidate for president of the National League who has the least interest in any of these propositions. The slate should be wiped clean and the men who are elected to office should be pledged to run the organization for the benefit of its members generally and not for the purpose of backing up the private ambitions of any individual.

IT is unfortunate that the Government method of accounting as applied to the collection of revenues does not segregate the sums collected from various sources so that we might have an exact statement of the money paid by the motion picture industry for the support of the war. Estimates of license fees, admission and footage taxes indicate that the total sum derived from those sources will approach $60,000,000, of which the greater part will be paid by picture theaters and picture producers. This would seem to indicate that the motion picture industry was something more than a non-essential calling.

Aiding the Exhibitor

By Edward Weitzel.

Always Take Obvious Advice.

ONE of the most touching and inspiring incidents connected with the moving picture is the willingness of a certain grade of trade journal to teach the exhibitor how to conduct all departments of his business. Occasionally the advice offered is good. More often it is just the reverse. Frequently the exhibitor is asked to set aside practical knowledge acquired by experience and to pay heed only to the instruction of versatile and profoundly self-confident young gentlemen, whose grasp of the show business is as limited as was the reasoning power of Barnum's What-Is-It.

A considerable portion of the first-aids offered the proprietor of the moving picture theater put him in the managerial infant class.

Take this gem of wisdom from an advertising aid published recently: "Use the star's name and pictures freely." Hundreds of such brilliant thoughts have illuminated the sections devoted to teaching the exhibitor how to arrange his advertising campaigns.

"Always Take Mother's Advice" was the catch line in the old song. "Always Take Obvious Advice" is the theme of this class of advertising "helps."

The Universal Forecaster.

The Universal Forecaster is another valuable first aid to the exhibitor—if the U. F. happens to guess right on the drawing powers of a picture for a fair percentage of the dates booked. Fortunately there are more than one of these gifted seers, and they frequently disagree. However, by absorbing the advice of them all the exhibitor will have the satisfaction of knowing that one of the number has given him the correct prognostication.

A rude awakening awaits the exhibitor who relies on any judgment but his own in selecting his programs.

The writer recalls being connected with a play that was booked in a western city for a week following a week of one-night stands. At the Friday one-night stand the audience, as they say in Wisconsin, "Did not wish to care" for the performance. The one-night stand manager telegraphed the week stand manager that the show was no good. That worthy individual was furious and swore if the paper wasn't already up he'd cancel the play. It filled the date and broke the house record for the season. The next year it went out again—and broke its owner.

Classifying the Exhibitor.

It would be foolish to contend that the moving picture has not brought new angles and novel publicity schemes into the show business. A casual glance through the publications covering the moving picture field will reveal a wide range in the articles in the different journals and also in the style in which they are written.

From the tone of some of the trade papers it is evident that they are endeavoring to address themselves to only one class of exhibitors, and expect their statements to be received without question and with no appeal to common sense. By following the Tammany rule of claiming everything in sight and blowing their own horns continuously each one hopes to dominate the trade in spite of the fact that its methods restrict it to the support of only a limited portion of motion picture theater managers.

Some of the "stunts" invented by the editor of one publication resemble the efforts of a Shanghai rooster just after he has suffered decapitation—energetic, but futile.

"How Far That Little Candle Throws His Beams!"

The variety of styles in which the articles in the different papers are written include the exploitation of favored persons in words of almost honeyed sweetness and palpitating editorials, penned with the emotional stress of a sob sister's seventh son.

Who that read it can forget the fervor with which one seventh son poured forth his soul to his subscribers and reminded them of how the light from his editorial window streamed into Times Square "like a good deed in a naughty world" while he toiled far into the night that they might not be denied the priceless benefit of his unerring judgment and command of easy speech? That little candle no longer rivals in brightness the light-jeweled center of Broadway's night life, but the beam from that window will long be remembered. In ages to come, no doubt, when the building itself is a crumbling ruin, parents will bring their offspring and point to the spot as hallowed ground.

"Here, my children," they will say in voices choked with emotion, "toiled one whose unselfish devotion to and mastery of his profession made him a unique figure in the century when the moving picture was given to the races of the earth."

Bunkum and Slang.

The progress of the screen has been steadily upward in all branches of its development except in the tone of some of its trade journals. Why put a club into the hands of its enemies by spreading the impression that the only mediums of expression that appeal to the men engaged in the exhibition of the silent drama are bunkum and slang? They are continually treated with the familiarity common to a bunch of rough-necks on a spree or inflicted with a brand of painfully labored humor long since discarded by the regular stage. To judge from this kind of getting down to the reader's level the mental development of the exhibitor does not include the rudiments of a common school education nor the slightest trace of natural refinement.

The fallacy of such a conclusion is readily understood by the men who control the screen theaters, and who have learned to solve their individual problems with the aid given them by competent and reliable trade publications that set down no more than they know.

From the Depths

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE success has attended the production and performance of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" at all times, particularly the recent version released by Fox, showing the immortality of its theme. This is embodied in the novelist's own preface.

"So long as there shall exist, by reason of law and custom, a social condemnation, which, in the face of civilization, artificially creates hells on earth, and complicates a destiny that is divine with human fatality; so long as the three problems of the age—the degradation of man by poverty, the ruin of women by starvation, and the dwarfing of children by physical and spiritual night—are not soltened; so long as, in certain regions, social asphyxia shall be possible; in other words, and from a yet more extended point of view, so long as ignorance and misery remain on earth, books like this cannot be useless."

"Les Miserables" still has a powerful appeal. It may be immortal, as are all works which show how pregnant is human life with power, yet how unavailingly it is expended. That the high spirit is in us has been recently shown by our splendid response to the appeals of struggling France and despairing Belgium. Though selfishness may whisper in one ear and ignorance sneer at the other, there is plenty of heroic stuff in us all; great thoughts and noble impulses lurk in all the depths of human nature.

Flowers of the heart are they!
Let them not like weeds pass away!
Their heritage a sunless day!

In the midst of such reiteration of the commonplace as we are getting on the screen really great plays give us a spiritual awakening, stir us out of our overfed lethargy, our easy indifference to injustice doled out to others. In the abstract every American revolts against wrong done to the helpless and unfortunate, but he was enjoying the calm routine of peace when came the call for help from his brothers across the sea, and it was not an easy matter to arouse him. To show how little we know our real selves we are amazed at the tremendous sacrifices made by those who stay at home and the greater risks bravely taken by those who stake their lives for the cause of liberty. Martyrs and heroes rise by millions.

True freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And, with heart and hand, to be
Earnest to make others free.

The simplest mission of comedy is to divert our minds, and it should have its place on every program. Its higher purpose is to laugh human weakness to scorn, and it is probably the most effective weapon for that purpose, but let us not ignore the heart appeal of serious drama. These are serious times. We are in mood to sympathize with anxious hearts of the poor, to see that justice is done those close at hand whose lives and labor seems spent in vain, to enforce the vital rights of mankind where we dwell.

Let us have plays that inspire.

None of us would deny little children the privilege to live right, work according to inclination and natural fitness, to enjoy both labor and leisure. In those few words lie a thousand beautiful themes. None of us would deny the creators of little children, their mothers, from whose fonts of affection flows the influence which purifies existence. To mother and children many a man is giving all he can earn by his utmost effort and hardest self denial. Why not consider him also? On the screen can be intensely shown how his increasing burdens and mental slavery can be mitigated in one case and abolished in the other. In serious drama only can his cry be heard and appreciated. The whole idea of human liberty is marvelously incorporated in the famous poem by "Bobby" Burns, a message which humanized the English-speaking world.

Then let us pray that come it may
(As come it will for a' that),
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth
May bear the gree and a' that
For a' that and a' that—
It's coming yet, for a' that,
When man to man, the warld o'er
Shall brithers be for a' that.

Keep the War Reels Turning

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE campaign for subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan has come to a successful termination. Approximately twenty million people in the United States are said to have subscribed. The figure may be high or low, but it gives an idea of the sweeping work accomplished during the period set for raising funds.

We wish there were some definite way of determining just how great a share of these subscriptions moving pictures were responsible for gathering in. It must have been very great; we may be sure of that.

Aside from the daily press, moving pictures rank as the world's greatest publicist and educator at the present moment. Their message is swift and illuminating; it spreads definite knowledge to both the learned and the unlearned. As a means of strengthening the war arm of the Government the moving picture is a thing of priceless value. It rouses the minds of unawakened people to the magnitude of the task we have undertaken, and the actual scenes from the front bring us close to the great conflict.

This annihilation of distance is one of the most valuable accomplishments of the screen. When we see actual pictures of our men in France, mingling with their comrades of other nations, it brings the situation home to us.

Let us keep a plentiful supply of these war subjects going. It is the right thing to do from every standpoint. It is patriotism of the best sort and it is also good business. The people of this country who have grasped the significance of the situation are no longer trying to escape the labors of war. Instead, they are bending every effort to press the war to a successful conclusion by whipping the Hun. They are also trying to wake up other people and spur them on toward doing their share of war work.

It is the sluggish elements of humanity that are most easily wrought upon by misleading peace propaganda. They do not wish to be disturbed by war and its rude alarms; they feel no sense of personal responsibility in the situation. Such people, by their mere failure to act, have a detrimental effect upon others. These are the real pacifists and pro-Germans—the sluggish, the idle, the contented slackers who do no actual work and love to sit and talk. They are advocates of a false peace without realizing it, for they have not learned the tremendous price that must be paid for victory.

Moving pictures have shocked more than one of these dull souls into something of a comprehension of what is going on in the world; they have awakened a proper sense of responsibility in many indifferent individuals and set them to working and talking the right way.

Let us continue to make an inspiring war message a part of every program in the moving picture theaters of the country, so far as is possible. Producers are doing excellent work in turning out the subjects, and exhibitors have a wide range of choice. There is a constant menace of pro-German propaganda to be offset in this country, and moving pictures do much in keeping the truth before the people. We have seen what this insidious pro-German propaganda accomplished in Russia and Italy. It weakened the morale of the people at home and led to immediate disaster on the battlefield. May the sons of America never have occasion to reproach those at home for failure to squelch premature talk of peace. There can be no peace for the world until America and her Allies have won victory on the battlefield. It will come.

Keep the war reels turning!

Program Building

By Epes W. Sargent.

PROGRAM release of films seems to militate against program building, yet the real measure of entertainment will never be reached until every exhibitor of motion pictures comes to understand at least the rudiments of programming.

To take one five-reel feature of a certain brand and exhibit it with one comedy of another brand and a scenic of a third, no matter what these releases may be, is not program making. It is trusting to blind luck. Last week one house in New York, a part of a leading circuit, advertised Chaplin in "A Night Out" and De Mille's "The Whispering Chorus." Because the latter was billed without a star the two-reel Chaplin was put in the place of honor. The contrast in such a bill is startling. The crude comedy of this Essanay Chaplin, about the last made before he developed his craze for a touch of pathos, was disgusting to those who were appealed to by the psychology of "The Whispering Chorus," while the latter was regarded with disfavor by a majority of those who were drawn in by the Chaplin name and found him to be but two-sevenths of the show. At other houses on the same circuit the Chaplin was linked with a Hart feature, a much better coupling, but the damage had been done in those houses in which the first combination had been played.

Everything lies in the combination of the individual features of a program, and this business will never reach its proper level until it is possible to select and arrange the programs. Vaudeville managers are successful in the degree of skill with which they put their programs together. Some hire the requisite number of acts and put them in some semblance of order according to the salaries paid. Others even go so far as to book acts for their special place on the bill, a turn perhaps being billed to appear in number five position three months before the engagement is to be played, and the acts for the four and six positions are engaged to match this billing. A really clever manager can make $1,500 worth of acts look like twice as much and another can put $3,000 worth of talent in such a combination that each turn kills the other and nothing affords entertainment.

It is the same condition that should prevail in filmland. The exhibitor, who can, should be given a chance to build a program from material that will work well together. For such a play as "The Whispering Chorus" a Drew comedy would seem to be indicated, and rough melodrama should be coupled with the Chaplin farce reissues. Then at least one element of the audience would be appealed to, but with mismatched attractions everyone is apt to go away dissatisfied.

Some rough attempt was made by the General Film back in 1911 with the system of "locked" releases, but this was not real program making, since the releases had to be handled by dates, but it still remains about the only effort made on the part of anyone to solve a problem that is the foundation of business success. It is time that something more practical should be attempted toward this end.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of May 26 at New York's Principal New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE RIALTO.—"The Yellow Ticket," a Pathe production of Michael Morton's powerful play, with Fannie Ward as Anna Mirrel, was the leading screen attraction at the Rialto the week of May 26. Milton Sills and Warner Oland are in the cast. "Winter Scenes in Southern France," "Wild Women and Tame Lions," and the Animated Magazine were also shown. Greek Evans was the soloist.

THE STRAND.—Madge Kennedy in a photo-comedy, "The Fair Pretender," a Goldwyn production, held the honor position on the Strand program. Bob Baker appeared in person and explained motion pictures, showing how he captures mountain lions single handed. The fifth of the Chester-Outing scenics, the Topical Review and James Montgomery Flagg's "The Spoiled Girl" completed the screen features. Betty Brown was the soloist.

THE RIVOLI.—Frank Keenan in "More Trouble." a comedy, produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company and adapted by Ouida Bergere from a story by Edgar Franklin, was the fature picture at the Rivoli. A Mexican scenic, the Katzenjammer Kids and the Animated Pictorial were included in the program. Jeanne Gordon, vocalist, and Rita Lee, dancer, appeared.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—Enid Bennett in "The Biggest Show on Earth," and a new chapter of "The Eagle Eye," first half. Henry B. Walthall in "With Hoops of Steel," last half.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Eighth week of "Hearts of the World."

LYRIC.—"Pershing's Crusaders."

BROADWAY.—Dorothy Phillips in "A Soul for Sale." Second week.

PATHE ELECTRICIAN WINS MILITARY MEDAL.

Maurice Astier, electrician of the house of Pathe at the big factory in Bound Brook, N. J., who left for France to join his regiment in August, 1914, has been named in army orders with the following official mention.

"Military Medal, Maurice Astier, adjutant of the Eighth Engineers' Telegraph Section, accomplished in the midst of battle the construction and operation of an improvised telephone during a period of five days and five nights, without a moment of rest, with extraordinary courage and under continual artillery fire. He himself directed the groups of construction and repair. He rendered great service in 1917, in constructing a telephone buried in a bombarded zone and he is for every one an example of calm courage and self sacrifice."

Mr. Astier had already received the War Cross in 1915.

EDITH STOREY RETURNING TO NEW YORK.

Edith Storey, Metro star, will return to New York from California, where she has been engaged in the production of Metro features and Screen Classics, as soon as she completes her work in "As the Sun Went Down."

Miss Storey will work in the East during the summer, returning to the Coast in the fall.

OLD GENERAL FILM MAN ENTERS ARMY.

V. Carroll, booker at the Albany exchange of General Film, has entered the selective army and is now a member of the 311th Infantry at Camp Dix. Mr. Carroll had served General Film four years in the New York, Syracuse, Buffalo and Albany exchanges.

LEARNING TO SOAK 'EM AT SLOCUM.

George Landy, since last fall a member of Select's Publicity Department, left last week to join the army. The speed and adaptability with which he grew into the picture industry lead his friends to entertain high hopes for his latest job. He went to Fort Slocum.

Los Angeles Film Men Alarmed

At Mass Meeting Measures are Taken to Combat Situation that Is Closing Theaters and Reducing Attendance

MOTION picture exhibitors in Los Angeles face at present time a most alarming situation. Teachers in the public schools, it is reported, are requesting children not to attend picture theaters but save their money for other purposes. The result of this is that many theaters have been forced out of business. A mass meeting of exhibitors, exchangemen, producers and others interested in the trade was called at the Mutual Exchange on Saturday, May 18, to discuss the serious situation. Nearly a hundred people from various branches of the industry attended the meeting.

Testimony was given by many of the exhibitors present that their receipts had dropped fully from 30 to 50 per cent. in the last two months and that very few children are patronizing the picture theaters. It was reported by several exhibitors that teachers in some public schools even went so far as pledging children on their word of honor not to go to picture shows, with the result also of a considerable decrease of patronage from parents who have been going to shows with their children. The smaller theaters, particularly those in the residence districts, had suffered the most. The chairman of the meeting, F. A. MacDonald, who is president of the local league, threw a bombshell in the assembly by the astounding statement that on account of this thrift campaign not less than 32 theaters had been forced to close in the last few weeks.

Mr. MacDonald also stated that it had been hinted that insidious German propaganda might be responsible for these abnormal conditions. It had been suggested that the consistent boosting of Government activities through special trailers and slides, and also the active work of the Four-Minute men, and active assistance of producers and exhibitors in carrying out the policy of the Government might have incensed the German element to the extent of carrying on a campaign which would take away the people from the theaters with the end in view that the efforts of speakers and the screen would have less effect.

Several of the producers were present at the meeting, including Jesse L. Lasky, Samuel Goldfish, Thomas H. Ince and D. E. Robbin, representing D. W. Griffith.

Mr. Goldfish stated that he had already taken up the matter with New York and had wired, among others, W. A. Brady. He had received an answer from Mr. Brady, and the Los Angeles exhibitors could be assured of the assistance of the New York organizations. Mr. Goldfish, however, was of the opinion that the condition was only local and suggested that before making a national issue of it the exhibitors should leave the matter to the local producers. The studios here had considerable influence and could approach the Chambers of Commerce, Board of Education and other civic bodies and impress upon them the unfair and precarious situation for the moving picture theaters.

Whitson Denies That Situation Is Local.

Mr. Whitson, of the Plaza Theater in San Diego, took exception to Mr. Goldfish's statement that the condition was only local. He said it was the same thing in San Diego and many other cities all over the country. He said the producers as yet did not realize the seriousness of the situation and that the attitude of the schools is the same in almost every city in the United States. He would suggest the producers take immediate action and get in touch with the authorities at Washington.

Mr. Hepburn, local manager of the Vitagraph office, testified that conditions were very bad in Salt Lake City.

Mr. Lustig of the Metro exchange said the same conditions existed in the state of Washington, and that exhibitors there had already got together and advertised full pages in the newspapers.

Mr. Robbin said Mr. Griffith was sorry that he could not attend in person, but that he had received a wire from Mr. Brady in which he was requested to make investigation regarding the attitude of the Board of Education. He was informed that officially the Board of Education had made no statement to teachers with regard to telling children to stay away from the theaters. However, they had advised the children not to throw away money or buy candy. Mr. Griffith stated he would stand by any action taken by the exhibitors.

Mr. Lasky said business is far from normal and that there was much unrest and agitation. He said he would keep in touch with New York and Washington and follow developments closely.

Mr. Ince suggested that the exhibitors enlist the support of the local newspapers. The exhibitors spend a lot of money for advertising and could expect a friendly attitude from the press. There should be started a regular campaign in papers and on billboards. Tell the people it is patriotic to patronize picture shows. Mr. Ince also offered the co-operation of the producers to the extent of making special trailers for the houses to tell the people on the screen that the picture theater is the most wholesome amusement and relaxation, and in thus reaching the people urge them not to forget the many things done by the producers, actors, picture theater owners and exhibitors in behalf of the Liberty Loan and Red Cross.

J. A. Quinn of the Rialto Theater said no better time could be found than the present moment to establish a strong campaign in behalf of theaters, to go to the teachers and school board and ask them to correct any impression that might have been made on children as to staying away from the theater. He pointed to the fact that President Wilson at one time said: "The moving picture is helping win the war"; that public information comes to a great extent from the weekly news reels of the various producers and that the Public Information Bureau in Washington relies heavily upon the moving picture screens of the country to bring before the people the activities of the army and navy, etc. He suggested that action be takn at once.

An exhibitor from Pasadena said the only salvation for this business would be to get President Wilson to do something.

Mr. MacDonald said he was in favor of Mr. Ince's suggestion of an efficient publicity campaign. Mr. Lasky offered the services of his publicity department. A resolution was passed immediately to launch a campaign. A committee was appointed with J. A. Quinn as chairman. The campaign will interview the Chambers of Commerce, Board of Education and consult with the newspapers. Another mass meeting will be called within a few days. G. P. H.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY EXCHANGE PROMOTIONS.

A number of changes in the personnel of exchange offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the country resulted in many recent promotions for members of the organization. Among these are J. W. Allen to special representative, C. Lang Cobb to special representative, temporarily managing the Buffalo exchange; Oscar Morgan to manager of the Washington office, M. H. Cohn to manager of the Denver branch, F. B. McCracken to manager of the Salt Lake City branch, P. C. Wreath to manager of St. Louis exchange, M. H. Lewis to manager of the San Francisco office and J. J. Halsted to manager of Los Angeles branch. Several new appointments include H. H. Buxbaum as special representative, R. R. Rich as assistant manager of the Cincinnati office, G. E. McKean as special salesman in Kansas City district and L. Rogers as assistant manager of the New York exchange.

SELECT TO HAVE CANADIAN EXCHANGES.

Announcement has been made in Toronto that the Select Pictures Corporation of New York has made arrangements for its own distribution throughout Canada. Phil Kauffman, sales manager of the Regal Films, Limited, is named as general manager for Canada for the Select interests, and he has visited New York City to arrange for the opening of direct branches in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vaucouver and St. John.

Mr. Kaufman was at one time sales manager for the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, former Canadian distributors for Select releases.

BERST WITH DIVISION OF FILMS.

J. A. Berst, formerly vice president and general manager of Pathe, has been engaged to manage the distribution of the pictures distributed by the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information. He takes the place of G. A. Smith, who has been called to the service.

Canadians Talk of National Organization

Conferences Have Been Held by Film Men Looking Toward Formation of Militant Body.

A MOVEMENT has been started in Toronto, Ontario, for the formation of a country-wide association for all exhibitors in Canada. It is believed the federal and provincial authorities will soon try to find more ways in which to tax the Canadian film industry and moral reformers have also been paying considerable attention to the subject of moving pictures. For these and other reasons it is felt the exhibitors of the Dominion should band themselves together for their mutual protection. Several important conferences have already been held in Toronto to discuss arrangements for a campaign to secure the co-operation of every Canadian film man.

At the present time there are local associations of exhibitors in various cities, including Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and other leading centres. There are exchange managers' organizations in these and other cities, including St. John, N. B., Calgary and Vancouver. All these could be used as local units of the national film association, it is pointed out. It is felt many exhibitors are ripe for such an organization because of the manner in which the rights of the picture men have been trampled upon. As an indication of the spirit it is only necessary to point out that in a recent round-up President Baillie of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, Toronto, secured twenty new members by personal effort and without much trouble. Mr. Baillie, who is a prominent Toronto exhibitor, is one of those who are behind the movement to organize a Canadian association.

There are one thousand moving picture theaters in Canada. This is not an unwieldly number, it is asserted, and with at least a majority of the Canadian exhibitors in one organization the industry could go a long way in protecting its own interests.

Atlantans Attend Florida Convention

Many Exhibitors and Film Men Are Present at the Four Sessions and the Banquet.

ATLANTA motion picture men are back from the Florida State Exhibitors' convention, held at Daytona on May 7 and 8, with Judge Henry T. Titus, the motion picture man of Daytona and Daytona Beach as the host.

The convention was the largest gathering of exhibitors and exchange men ever held in Florida. President Charles D. Cooney, of Tampa, presided over the four business meetings. At the big banquet of the convention Mrs. Louis Kalbfield, of Palatka, presided as toastmistress.

Among those present were E. J. Sparks, of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Jacksonville; Jesse Clark, Arcade theater, Jacksonville; W. L. Whitehead, Republic theater, Jacksonville; L. D. Joel, Casino and Liberty, Jacksonville; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kalbfield, the Grand, Palatka; Mr. Jones, representing the Sanger interests, Pensacola; Thomas J. Hayes, Princess, Deland; A. A. Tano, the Rialto, West Palm Beach; Barney Beacham, Jr., the Grand, Orlando; C. D. Cooley, the Strand and Grand, Tampa; Al H. LaBelle, the Nationa, Spanish theater, Ybor City; F. M. Catron, the Bonita, Tampa; Aurelio Torres, the San Carlos, Key West; Burt Mank, the Airdrome, Miami; Carl Kettler, Jr., the Bijou, West Palm Beach; "Dad" Sutherland, the Bijou, West Palm Beach; Henry T. Titus, the Crystal, Daytona; Paul I. Majewski, the Star, West Palm Beach.

The manufacturers were represented by "Diamond Dick" Anderson and J. Oliver Levy, of Pathe; Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain, Paramount; R. M. Simril and G. N. Tyler, General and Paralta; C. G. Jordan, Universal; E. E. Jerallie, of George Kleine, and B. S. Bryan and Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Nininger, Vitagraph.

Oregon League Elects Officers

Ruffner Is Chosen President and Bradt Secretary—To Organize Local Committees.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of Oregon, of which most of the exhibitors of Portland are members, held a meeting at the league rooms at the Majestic Theater building May 15, at which officers were elected for the ensuing year. Abraham Nelson, secretary of the Majestic Amusement Company, presided. The following Portland men were elected officers of the association:

President, Ralph Ruffner, Columbia Theater; vice-presidents, W. E. Tibbets, Alhambra; J. J. Parker, Majestic; J. B. Washtock, Victoria; treasurer, Joe Bradt, Echo; secretary, W. A. Ayres, Sunnyside; chairman executive committee, W. A. Graeper, Union Avenue; executive committee, J. C. Stille, Peoples; J. J. Parker, Majestic; W. E. Tebbetts, Alhambra; J. B. Washtock, Victoria; chairman of house committee, Hugh McCredie, Multnomah; chairman of membership committee, H. C. Phillips, Tivoli; chairman entertainment committee, J. A. Jennings, Sunset.

It is planned to appoint executive committees among the theater man in different parts of the state, with exhibitors in the local communities as presiding officers. This will be done by the organization under the new regime. Retiring Manager Nelson reported the association busy with war activities. The use of slides on the screens except for purposes sanctioned by Government authorities will hereafter be curtailed.

The finances of the organization were reported to be in excellent shape, with a goodly balance in the treasury and no debts outstanding.

The League is preparing to move to newer and larger quarters in the basement of the Strand Theater building. Arrangements toward this end were made by H. C. Phillips of a committee appointed for the purpose.

Ochs Issues Supplementary Call

Notifies State and Local Organizations That Per Capita Must Be Paid to Secure Representation.

IN a supplementary call to the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, President Lee A. Ochs reminded all state and local organizations that the by-laws of that body provided that no such organizations should have representation in or be allowed to participate in the deliberations of the annual convention, to be held this year in Boston from July 13 to 20, unless the per capita tax of the organization shall have been paid to the national treasurer. In view of the extraordinary importance of this year's convention, he urged that every effort be made to secure the attendance of full quotas of delegates and alternates.

Mr. Ochs also called a meeting of the national executive committee of the league to be held at the Copley Plaza Hotel in Boston three days prior to the opening of the convention, in accordance with the by-laws of the league.

Reports from the various committees in charge of the preparations for the Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry indicate that they are receiving universal support in their efforts to make the Exposition bigger and greater than any that has been held hitherto.

Hinz Protests Minneapolis Election

Exhibitor Claims Recent Choice of President Is Illegal on Account of No Quorum.

EDWARD F. HINZ, owner of the Cozy and Alhambra theaters in Minneapolis, has served an injunction on the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest claiming that the election of the board of directors at the recent convention is illegal due to the failure of a quorum to be present at election time. Mr. Hinz maintains that a majority of the 257 stockholders were not represented at election time. Convention minutes show that 87 stockholders out of 173 in good standing at convention time voted. Exhibitors' opinions vary as to the advisability of carrying such a point into court.

EXPOSITION MANAGER GRANT VISITS NEW YORK.

The preparations for the National Convention that is to be held in Boston July 13 to 20 are going ahead full speed with the hearty support of all the Boston newspapers. Manager Samuel Grant, of the Exposition, stated in an interview that the large amount of space that was given to his get-together dinner by both the newspapers and trade journals was greatly beyond his expectation.

Mr. Grant has been in New York conferring with the New York manager, Frederick H. Elliott, after which he will proceed to Washington to take part in an international conference with the object of gaining the attendance of President Wilson for at least one day at the Boston exposition.

VIRGINIA EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

There will be a convention of Virginia exhibitors at Gray's Armory, Richmond, Va., on June 13 to 15. On the night of Saturday, June 15, there will be a movie star ball. Henry Bernstein, chairman, has charge of the arrangements. It is expected that there will be a large turnout of exhibitors from all parts of the state. Plans for the movie star ball are said to be elaborate and a big attendance is promised.

Millions in Tax Paid by Theaters

Treasury Department's Figures Show License Fees and Admission and Footage Tax Amounts Will Be Larger Part of $60,000,000.

THE motion picture and other theaters of the country are going to pour a lot of money into the United States treasury during the next few months as a contribution to our war needs under the provisions of the several internal revenue laws. The Senate, curious to know where all the money needed to run the war was coming from, and probably with a view to developing additional sources of income, called upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to how much had been collected and how much would be paid by the various industries and on the various matters covered in the several laws.

It is not the practice at the Treasury Department to separate the various classes of taxes coming under one particular head. For instance, there is grouped under "special taxes, miscellaneous," brokers, theaters, bowling alleys, pool and billiard tables. The theaters would, of course, be the heaviest contributors under this and there has been collected under this title between July 1, 1917, and March 31, 1918, $1,417,000. Secretary McAdoo expects a total of $3,237,000 for twelve months, and so it is estimated there will be collected between March 31 and June 30, 1918, $1,820,000.

"Admissions and dues" include the penny tax assessed against seats in theaters, concert halls and other places of amusement of this type, and the assessment levied on club dues. The theaters here also are the heaviest contributors, and were it possible to dissect the figures given it would be found that they paid by far the heaviest part of the $14,798,000 collected between October 3, 1917, and March 31, 1918, and will pay a correspondingly large part of the $16,000,000 additional to be collected between the latter date and June 30, to make the estimated $30,798,000 to come from that source.

The footage taxes are buried in the group covering automobiles, jewelry, piano players, sporting goods, cosmetics, proprietary medicines, chewing gum, cameras, boats and yachts. From this source there was collected between October 3, 1917, and March 31, 1918, $19,573,000, and there is expected to come in between the latter date and June 30, next, another $16,500,000.

The moving picture trades will also pay heavily under the income tax and excess profits tax provisions. It also contributes through the purchase of transportation for its people and for its property and on long distance telephone and telegraph messages. Truly, one can but say that the motion picture industry is paying its share. LINZ.

Universal's Footage Tax Runs High

Less Than Tenth of Year and Reckoned on Quiet Period Yields $45,600.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company on Wednesday, May 22, sent a check calling for the payment of $45,600 to the United States Government as its initial remittance for film tax footage made mandatory in the war revenue measure last fall. The $45,600 is the amount of tax due for a period of ten weeks ending December 12.

That this figure does not in any way represent collections for the future is demonstrated by the statement made at the offices of the Universal Company that the production at Universal City during the ten weeks represented by the payment was the smallest in footage for a long period

For a time during the ten weeks' prior to December 12 the big producing center on the West Coast—Universal City—was being used by but three and four companies as against sixteen and seventeen when production is proceeding at the usual rate.

The records of the Universal show that the fifteen cents a reel tax required from the exhibitors does not take care of the footage tax demanded by the Government. Notwithstanding this the Universal Company announces that it purposes to stand on the original figure and will not request the exhibitors to pay more unless the difference between the payment by the exhibitors and the sum demanded by the Government is so great as to make an increase in the reel tax absolutely necessary.

THEATER BREAKS RECORD WITH GERARD FILM.

The first motion picture theaters in Pennsylvania to show "My Four Years in Germany" are Charles F. Oldt's Third Street theater of Easton, and L. F. Heilberger's Lorenz theater of Bethlehem and Lehigh Orpheum of South Bethlehem. Mr. Oldt has run the Gerard picture for a full week, beginning May 20, to big business, this being the first time in the history of his house that he has played one attraction for that length of time. "My Four Years in Germany" will begin its run at the Heilberger theaters on June 6, and will continue until the 12th.

In Louisville the picture met with such a reception during its first week at the Mary Anderson theater that manager Lee Goldberg was obliged to hold it over for a second week. According to reviews in the Louisville newspapers, Ambassador Gerard's revelations have aroused more discussion than any motion picture material that has been shown in the Kentucky city in many years.

BOWMAN TO ASSIST DIRECTOR BALSHOFER.

In the making of Metro's screen version of Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, "A King in Khaki," which has been selected for immediate production as a starring vehicle for Harold Lockwood, Director Fred J. Balshofer will have the assistance of William J. Bowman, who has just been added to the personnel of the Metro-Yorke forces. Bowman's experience has been gained both on the stage and in the studio. When he joined Thanhouser in 1912 he played leads, but after that engagement he joined the American Film Company in Chicago as a director, later going to that firm's studios in Santa Barbara. Successively he was directing with the New York Motion Picture Company, Quality Pictures Corporation and Vitagraph, where he remained for three years.

Another addition to the forces of the Lockwood company is Edward J. Hass, who has been engaged as technical director.

Adding to the Pictures

By Epes W. Sargent

Opera, Concert, Ballet and Productions Used by S. Barret McCormick to Add Effect to the Pictures

ENTERPRISING managers long since realized that the presentation of the motion picture meant something more than sending the cans to the projection room and seeing that the screen was dusted more or less regularly, yet this means "long since" only as time is counted in this branch of the amusement business, for it is not more than five or six years since Rothapfel startled his brother exhibitors by making "productions" of the films with added effects, pictorial prologues and the like.

Live wires were not long in taking the hint, and now dead stages are scarce in the better class of houses. They are at least tastefully set, and in many instances there is a production of some sort, perhaps only a singer, but something to give life to the otherwise silent stage. Of the hustlers none seems to have worked out the scheme more thoroughly than S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle theater, Indianapolis. Since he came on from Denver to assume the management of this house he has worked out the scheme of additions to include five branches. These include the ballet, the production, the opera, the prologue and the singer.

Booking well ahead, and knowing what he is to have, it is possible to give orders to the scenic artists well in advance, and two weeks are generally allowed for the production of an effect in the studio. As soon as the Saturday night house is out the stage crew strike and remove the current production and start to install the new scenery. From the fact that this sometimes keeps them until just before the Sunday matinee (twelve hours) it can be seen that the productions are by no means light. Often mechanical effects are used, which must be got just right, and the crews are rehearsed in setting and striking the effects that a smooth performance may be given at the opening.

Mr. McCormick is fortunate in that there is a school for the ballet in Indianapolis, and for more than a year he has been working in conjunction with the instructors to devise dances to fit the productions, using the advanced pupils as his seconds, with trained dancers in the solo numbers. The photograph shows a set for "The Primeval Forest," used as an opening to "Tarzan of the Apes" at its recent showing. A blue cyclorama is used, against which the vivid coloring of the tropical forests shows to advantage. The painting was done in the manner of the modernish school, with broad strokes rather than intricate detail; not to save work, but to accord with the spirit of the play. The story of the ballet is thrown upon the screen before the overture that the audience may be able to follow the allegory, in which the emotions of the heart were symbolized by the dancers.

The second cut shows the stage setting for a tabloid production of "The Mikado," done last October. A Japanese artist was employed in the Circle's scenic studios to do the set, which shows a teahouse garden. Only the most popular numbers of the opera are sung with a small chorus, but the setting is as carefully done as though for a season's run. Bits from other operas are given from time to time, alternating with the other features, the forest scene from "Robin Hood," for example, being given with the Armorer's song.

Sometimes merely a song is given a scenic setting, as is shown in this set for "The Two Grenadiers," sung by an operatic basso. As the close of the song is reached the back drop is taken up to disclose a battlefield. Back of the set wall, which remains in place, a truck is slowly moved. This is covered with French flags of all sizes, more than a hundred being used, to give the effect of a marching army passing behind the wall. An old effect, but one strikingly effective when the flags of our gallant allies were shown. A thirty-six-inch fan was used to keep the flags fluttering, and twenty or thirty explosions sent up their fire and smoke to give the effect of an assault. Songs not relevant to the film production are used only when the picture does not lend itself to special treatment.

On the other hand, many of the plays lend themselves unusually well to scenic treatment. For "The Barrier" an Alaskan setting was used with a "real" waterfall. The rise of the curtain disclosed 'Poleon standing beside his canoe singing "The Song of the North," with "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling" for an encore. That 'Poleon, with his red and white voyager's cap and mackinaw, looks more like the hero of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is due to the photography. It might be added that all of these photographs but imperfectly do justice to their subjects because of the improper recording of color values.

Prologues of this sort are useful in getting the audience into a proper frame of mind, and are by no means unusual; but more daring was the recent experiment of stopping the film to play a scene with living figures. This was done and very successfully with the Goldwyn production of "The Auction Block." The film was started upon the screen, but when the ancient slave market scene was reached the screen was taken up and in its place the scene was enacted as shown, then the screen dropped and the run of the film was resumed. The experiment might not be so successful where players in their own character are to be reproduced, but this scene was extraneous to the play proper and its actual enactment made for effect.

The special production is featured in the newspaper advertising, as may be noted in the many examples of Mr. McCormick's work shown in Advertising for Exhibitors; but it is never permitted to overshadow the film announcements, nor, save in the case of some notable musical star, to gain equal prominence. It is treated merely as the Circle's way of showing film, and explains why Circle productions make for regular and satisfied patrons.

MRS. McCONNELL PLAYING WITH METRO.

Mollie McConnell, widow of Will A. McConnell, former editor of the New York Morning Telegraph, is playing in her second picture with the Metro forces at the company's west coast studios in Hollywood. Mrs. McConnell at present is in the support of Bert Lytell, appearing before the camera in the role of Mrs. Brayton in "No Man's Land."

HARDEN SELLS E. & H. INTERESTS TO ENGLER.

Ownership of the E. & H. Film Distributing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., changed hands last week when Charles W. Harden arrived in New York City. In order to devote his entire time to another end of the industry, Mr. Harden disposed of his holdings in the E. & H. to P. A. Engler, another of the old southern film men.

Red Cross Drive "Over the Top"

Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, Led by William Fox, Does Heroic Work.

THE total amount secured by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team is not available as this issue of the Moving Picture World goes to press, but it is certain that the forces led by William Fox have rolled up a vast sum toward the national proceeds of the second Red Cross drive. Various entertainments were held throughout the week ending May 25 and on Monday evening, May 27, the operatic festival at the Metropolitan Opera House brought the drive to a brilliant conclusion.

Sunday evening, May 26, there was a carnival of vaudeville at the Century theater; Saturday evening, May 25, the gold ballroom at the Hotel Astor was the scene of a ball and fashion show; Friday evening, May 24, at Madison Square Garden, a boxing carnival was held, and on Thursday evening, May 23, "Cheer Up" was revived for one performance at the Hippodrome. In every theater and motion picture house throughout the boroughs of Greater New York special efforts were made, every afternon and evening, to swell the totals secured through volunteer contributions.

The grand ball at the Astor was the most popular of all the entertainments provided by the William Fox team. To attempt an adequate description of the event would require a skillful force of fashion experts and to list the names of those in attendance would call into requisition a directory of the theatrical and Metropolitan fraternity. It was observed, however, that screen stars outnumbered and outshone their sisters from the legitimate stage—and it was a big night for "pictures."

R. Sidney Drew Falls in Battle

Machine Driven by Talented Young Actor Makes Safe Landing in German Territory.

CORPORAL R. Sidney Drew, son of Sidney Drew, and a nephew of John Drew, who enlisted in the French aviation corps in 1917, was shot down in a fight with an enemy plane inside the German lines on May 23, according to information received in New York.

It is believed that he is a prisoner, as his plane apparently landed safely.

R. Sidney Drew is thirty years old. Three months before the United States entered the war he was working for the Metro Pictures Company as a director and player in leading parts. He joined the French ambulance service and went to France and had not been there long when he was moved to write his father the result of his experience with an expression of his intention to get into the "action." After what he had seen he said he felt ashamed to be in the ambulance service and he announced his intention of asking for active service with the Lafayette Escadrille.

He was accepted for training and in the course of a very short time he was with the fighting planes. Since last April he has been in continuous service. The younger Drew had risen quickly in the moving picture field, which he entered at the beginning of his career. For many years he was acting in and directing Vitagraph productions. His mother was the late Georgia Cameron, long known as a player and also a writer of note.

Major Funkhouser Suspended

Second Deputy Superintendent of Police and Censor of Pictures of Chicago Relieved from Duty—Charges Not Revealed.

Chicago, May 26.

ACTING Chief of Police Alcock of Chicago, with the sanction of Mayor Thompson, suspended Major Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police and morals censor of Chicago, on Saturday, May 25. Two of Funkhouser's aids in the morals department were also suspended. William H. Luthardt, secretary to the Chief of Police, was named as second deputy to succeed Funkhouser.

The charges against the second deputy are kept secret for the present. Acting Superintendent Alcock has thirty days in which to file them before the Civil Service Commission. Alcock has hinted that Major Funkhouser was not giving him proper support in police matters connected with the morals department. Major Funkhouser also refuses to make any statement until his trial comes up.

PETE LOBRAICO JOINS CANADIANS.

Pete Lobraico, who has been in charge of the poster department of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., for some years, left on May 11 to join the Canadian Expeditionary Force. The staff of the Toronto office presented him with a military wrist watch on the eve of his departure.

Getting Out of the Well Beaten Track

By Sam Spedon

World Correspondent Looks In on Some of the Smaller Cities Near St. Paul and Minneapolis

DEPARTING from the usual custom of only visiting the larger cities and judging conditions from that viewpoint, we dropped in on some of the smaller centers and got an ear and an eye full from their way of looking at things.

At Stillwater, Minn., about twenty-five miles from St. Paul, we talked with F. W. Boll, the owner and manager of the Majestic theater, which seats 400. The Majestic is the only regular motion picture theater in the town and caters to a population of 12,000. There are three shows of six or seven reels given every night, at 15 cents admission, matinees only on Saturday and Sunday. There is an auditorium in Stillwater where legitimate performances and large meetings are held occasionally and where a special picture is featured now and then. The Majestic is well ventilated and employs a women's orchestra of three pieces: piano, violin and traps. These musicians have been in the employ of Mr. Boll for nine years, here and other places where he has exploited theaters. He has had control of the Majestic for five months and has finally decided to locate in Stillwater. He keeps his house in good shape, his pictures standard and his music excellent. Everything indicated he is a regular showman.

Stillwater is characteristic of all towns of its size. There is a sashweight factory, and recently a munition factory has been established there. It is surrounded by a great farming country.

Mr. Boll told us business is good, but he finds that the war has drafted about 1,800 of the young men who were all theatergoers, and that number is considerable and means a large percentage of patronage and a big attraction to the girls, now minus their escorts, who used to take them to the show almost every night. Just now the weather is fine and automobiling is popular pastime in this section.

Another reason, which is general in these smaller places, for the falling off of business, is the daylight saving. Most people work in their war gardens until 9 P. M. now, which makes the second performance better than the first, at the same time many are so tired after their labors they do not go out at all.

Canning the Town.

Mr. Boll told us of a very good advertising stunt he pulled off. He announced he was going to clean up the town, a startling statement. To make good, he offered prizes to the three youngsters who would collect the largest number of old tin cans scattered about the city and deliver them in front of his theater. One youngster collected 1,963 and so on down the line.

The winner of the first prize received $3, the second $2 and the third $1, and to all the rest he gave a ticket of admission. The Mayor was so pleased with the result he gave $3 additional to the winners. The sashweight factory bought the old cans, carted away five double truck loads, and Mr. Bolls gave the proceeds to the Red Cross Society. This only goes to show what a real enterprising showman with ideas can do to help his town, popularize his theater and do another little bit towards winning the war.

Overinvested.

At Eau Claire, Wis., we found a peculiar state of affairs. There are five theaters, the Unique, Oklare, Lyric, Grand and Orpheum. The first two are open all the time, the second Saturday and Sunday, the Orpheum is permanently closed and the Grand is used for stage productions and special features. All five are owned by the Eau Claire Theater Company. We did not see Mr. Schwann, the manager, he was out of town, but we saw B. J. Bostick, his assistant. He told us business was good, but decreasing as the fine weather progressed. He assigned the same reasons for the decline as Mr. Boll of Stillwater. Out of a population of eighteen or twenty thousand an unusually large proportion of the men were in the army. Standard and quite recent pictures are run here. We attended the matinee performance at the Unique. It was poorly attended, at admissions of 10 and 15 cents. In the evening there was a full attendance.

A Town of Retired Farmers.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., a town of 9,700, twelve miles from Eau Claire, has four theaters, all owned by the Chippewa Theaters Company, Inc., and controlled by C. M. Waterbury. All of them are well equipped, showing best pictures. The Rex, seating about 500, is thoroughly up to date, with a six thousand dollar organ. This and the Lyric are the only ones running. The Palace and the Empire are closed. We attended the evening shows. When we asked Mr. Waterbury "How's business?" he said: "Judge for yourself. It couldn't be much worse."

"Over 800 young men of this town have been drafted," Mr. Waterbury continued. "They all spent money on the girls and now the girls don't attend the shows. We have the greatest water power in the country, but no munition plants, which are a boon to most towns and would be to this.

"Sunday is our big day, that's all. That doesn't pay our overhead on all the theaters. The daylight saving is a drawback to us. We used to have a large attendance of farmers and their families from the surrounding country. The cows won't change their habits. Daylight saving means nothing in their young lives, and they won't come in to get milked until 6 o'clock (7 now) and the farmers can't get through their milking until it is too late to get in town. Last September, when I got control, everything was booming here. Now it is different. I will be doing well to keep my two places going. During the summer I think I shall shut down altogether."

It appears that both Eau Claire and Chippewa Falls have overinvested. They have too many theaters for the patronage of the towns. The foregoing information gives us a different angle to small-town conditions than we get by sitting on our swivel chairs in the home office or by visiting metropolitan centers and getting it second hand. It is worth careful consideration and all the time and travel to get it direct from the source. It was most gratifying to note in our journeyings the thriving crops and their progress, which are indicative of a prosperous fall and winter.

Quiet, but Hopeful.

At Winona, Minn., 18,000 population, we met L. G. Roesner, president of the Colonial Amusement Company, which owns the Colonial, the Opera House and did own the Princess theater, recently sold to be converted into a business house. The Colonial is a large house of 1,200 seats, built on theatrical lines and thoroughly equipped. Mr. Roesner reported business as very bad since last September. He runs the best pictures that cost on an average of $50 a feature, and says he has hardly covered his overhead for the past two months. The Dream theater is closed, the Opera House is used for stage performances.

There is another house in Winona of 500 seats, the Unique, with a three-piece orchestra, run by L. Bolvieki. While the Colonial charges a regular admission of 15 cents and 20 for special features, the Unique charges 11 cents. Mr. Bolvieki said his business was satisfactory. We were informed that Bolvieki is going to build another house at the east end of Winona, a residential section, from which the town theaters draw much patronage. Both the Colonial and the Unique are well kept houses. Bolvieki is not an experienced showman, while Roesner is a thorough and systematic manager of long service.

The owner of the Unique, we understand, has been a keen competitor of the Colonial, with his lower prices, together with the advantage of owning the building and living above the theater, also having the assistance of his two sons in running the place. We heard the same plaint at Winona as elsewhere, that war conditions and interests hurt the business. There are 800 young men drafted from Winona and no industries that hold them there.

Between Eau Claire and La Crosse we noted two small towns—Durand, Wis., 1,700 population, and Wabasha, Minn., 2,500 inhabitants. Each has a small theater. At Durand, A. N. Storey is manager of the Durand, 250 seats, running every evening except Friday, at 20 cents admission, and making a living business. At Wabasha the house, seating 500, is run occasionally. The manager has another business there.

Normal and Seasonable.

La Crosse, thirty to thirty-two thousand, has eight theaters: Majestic, Bijou, Casino, Rex, Star, Dreamland, Strand and La Cross Opera House. The latter is used occasionally for special features, principally for stage performances. The Majestic, owned by F. L. Koppelberger, who also controls the Opera House, is the largest motion picture house in the city, seating 1,400, originally a vaudeville theater. It is efficiently managed by W. Freise. We called on H. H. Burford, who runs the Bijou and many more houses in Wisconsin. The Bijou has 500 seats, is well managed and thoroughly equipped with a pipe organ and an up-to-date operating booth. We had the pleasure of listening to his blind organist play. He is a marvelous musician.

All the other theaters are smaller. Two of them are suburban houses in North and South La Crosse. While affected by war and warm weather conditions, La Crosse upon the whole is enjoying a fair business. We were impressed with the new and novel decorations instituted in the Majestic, particularly the cages of canary birds hung in the lobby and interior. They seemed to sing in harmony with the orchestra. Mr. Freise was redecorating the lobby for the summer with hanging baskets of flowers, plants and ferns. He was also making provisions for two fountains of flowing water to give the place an air of coolness and outdoor atmosphere.

From these reports of our visits you can probably get a general idea of the motion picture situation in these communities. The summer months concern the exhibitors most and their main anxiety is to get through them at an even break. They are all sanguine about a general revival in the fall.

First Lady of the Land to See "Joan"

Goldwyn Patriotic Comedy-Drama Given Invitation Showing Before Children's Year Campaign Association.

"JOAN of Plattsburg," Goldwyn's great patriotic comedy-drama starring Mabel Normand, is to have a private showing in Washington Tuesday, June 4, under distinguished auspices. It will be presented to an invited audience at the Knickerbocker theater by the Children's Year Campaign Association, and among the guests will be Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the president, and ladies of the Cabinet. It is possible that President Wilson also will be present.

In connection with the presentation of the picture Miss Normand will make a personal appearance as part of a program of patriotic numbers especially arranged to give the production an appropriate setting as the story of the unswerving faith of the nation's women in time of war.

The performance will be staged under the personal direction of Harry M. Crandall, owner of the theater, and Arthur Robb, his manager. One of the Cabinet officers—probably Secretary Wilson of the Department of the Interior—will begin the afternoon's program with a short address. He will be followed by a Canadian officer direct from the battlefields of France, who will sing some of the trench songs of the soldiers. Colonel Barry Bulkley, a Washington lecturer, then will recite "The Star Spangled Banner" in an appropriate stage setting, and a Washington society woman will sing "Joan of Arc." R. W. Bingham will sing "The Vacant Chair," and a soldier's quartet from Camp Meade will be heard in "Tenting Tonight on the Old Camp Ground" and other field melodies. Then will come the picture and the personal appearance of the star.

The ushers will be chosen from among this year's Washington debutantes. Members of the Cabinet, the War and Navy Departments and representative figures in all of official Washington have been invited to attend.

The Children's Year Campaign Association, with which George F. Lenehan, Goldwyn's Washington manager, is arranging the details of the affair, has the indorsement of President Wilson and Mrs. Wilson is one of the patronesses.

MACNULTY WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS.

The settings appearing in Paramount and Artcraft pictures now being produced in the Fort Lee, N. J., studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are the work of William MacNulty, who has been appointed technical and art director. Mr. MacNulty comes to his new post well equipped for the exacting duties required, with knowledge and experience gained from ten years spent in the motion picture business following a thorough artistic and dramatic training.

Previous to his association with the silent drama Mr. MacNulty had gained prominence as a cartoonist, artist and draftsman and was an interior decorator for a large Chicago firm, and selected the furnishing and appointments for many palatial homes in the Windy City.

Hal Roach in New York

Rolin's Director General Planning Bigger Productions for Harold Lloyd Comedies.

HAL ROACH, director general of Rolin studios, arrived in New York from Los Angeles last week. He will remain in the big town a fortnight perfecting plans with Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, for bigger productions for the Harold Lloyd one-reel laughmakers.

"It isn't so surprising that Lloyd is going so big in his new work," said Mr. Roach. "I firmly believe the vogue of the screen comedians who depend largely upon grotesque make-up or physical infirmities to get them over is going out. I believe that more legitimate methods will be demanded by the public even in slapstick."

Rolin is spending a large appropriation on studio extensions, Mr. Roach said, preparatory to increasing production facilities.

Hobart Henley, Director

THE reason for Hobart Henley's skill as a director is no secret to those who know his methods. It is sympathy which gives him power and perception. He is as acutely alive to the feelings of the player of a "bit," as he is to the star's conception of a role, and labors as diligently to bring out the best in a child as he does to surround a leading player with appeal. His striking success with Goldwyn Pictures starring Mae Marsh is evidence of this. They are perfect examples of Hobart Henley's art.

Immediately a script is handed to him he reads it as he would a novel, for enjoyment only. It takes form in his brain as a narrative. He looks upon it almost impersonally. Then, as the story begins to digest in his mind, it assumes the aspect of a photoplay, with the high lights visualized. From this moment the production may be said to start.

Hobart Henley.

Once again Mr. Henley reads the scenario, slowly, carefully, visualizing every moment of the play and every detail, making copious notes as to costume, business and the development of the drama of the story. He repeats this process several times, adding notes, strengthening impressions until finally he sees the play exactly as it will appear when it is photographed. He leaves nothing to the inspiration of the moment, nothing to chance and little to the exigencies of actual direction. For this reason he produces rapidly, smoothly and with the least appreciable delay. His value to Goldwyn is enhanced by this thoroughness and facility.

The success of Hobart Henley in directing Mae Marsh, now in the midst of her third production with him, has occasioned no little comment among those in touch with Goldwyn activities. Heretofore Miss Marsh has had a new director for each of her productions, Goldwyn feeling that the summit of Miss Marsh's delicate art had not been reached.

Shy, elusive and inclined to retire within herself, Miss Marsh responds only under intelligence, sympathetic understanding and a sense of dramatic values as keen as her own. In Mr. Henley she recognized all these essentials at their first meeting, and with characteristic wholeheartedness enthusiastically accepted him as her ideal director. At once she corroborated her judgment by doing the best work of her career in their first production, "The Face in the Dark," and in "All Woman," released June 2, Mae Marsh has given even more of her many-sided self, according to those who have seen an advance showing of the story of "a good girl who tamed a bad town."

Business "Better Than Usual" in Panama

By Clarke Irvine

War Influences Not Felt in Canal Zone, Where Pictures Are the Main Diversion of Americans and Natives

This letter has been received from Clarke Irvine, formerly Los Angeles correspondent of the Moving Picture World, a young man who possesses a host of friends among the picture colony of the West Coast. The Navy Department has given its consent to the publication of the story. Mr. Irvine may be addressed U. S. S. Cheyenne, via New York.

THE moving picture business in the torrid zone is not suffering from the effects of the great war. On the contrary, "business as usual" here is not applicable, but "better than usual" prevails. Before dropping down in the Southern cross country, let me explain how I got there.

Shortly after the draft I dropped my work in Los Angeles and shipped in the navy. I traded my motor to my sister for her ukelele, for a machine on board a fighting ship would never do, while the Hawaiian fox-trot orchestra is tolerated. So I departed the sunny moving picture capital last October on the good ship Cheyenne, and a few days later found myself in Acapulco, Mexico, a small and typical bean port where the sun beats down worse than in the famous Sahara.

Although I could not get ashore here I procured a program of the Teatro Salon Rojo. From what I could learn here the photoplay is about the only amusement, and business is good, only it is difficult to secure pictures. The program told the tale.

I believe that when Mexican affairs are settled once more the United States will have a rich field for operations. The same obtains in most of the lower and Central American states. The more interesting picture situation is in the Canal Zone, which is made up of Panama, the old city, Balboa, the sister city, which is run by the government, on the Pacific side, and Cristobal and Colon, the two on the Atlantic side.

Pictures Main Diversion of Canal Country.

The Zone theaters are, in the majority, operated under the supervision of Robert Wilcox, of New York, who maintains his own exchange, the Tropical Film Exchange, in New Orleans. This concern supplies the Zone theaters, several in Jamaica, and the twenty-five odd army, navy and Y. M. C. A. houses throughout the Canal country. The base of operations is located in Colon, where F. L. Scott is representative, in addition to managing the theaters on the Atlantic side. On the other side of the Isthmus is A. I. Corinaldi, who runs the Cecilie, the new 1,500-seat house just opened, and the Amador.

The canal country likes pictures. They are the main diversion, outside of the lottery, which is not patronized by all, but then that is another story. At that Sunday morning in Panama is interesting, especially in the plaza, where the $10,000 capital prize is awarded, together with the hundreds of other cash payments. The lottery is an institution, maintained by everybody from the highest to those who scrape 50 centimos a week to contribute, always losing. But sometimes a poor man wins, and then his affairs change, which means a motor, a house to live in, and lots of other things.

Panama is a wonderful city. It is cosmopolitan, Parisian, New Yorky, and antiquated modernish. Life is seen in all its phases. I never visited so large a city on such a small area where so many large and luxurious cars were to be seen. The main street has Los Angeles' Broadway backed away off the boards when it comes to traffic. And in all this chaotic mass of business is the moving picture, the main attraction by night and the afternoon diversion of women and children and underworked business men, to say nothing of the service men.

When I visited the Panamanian capital the Amador theater was the Strand of the city, which has since been superceded by the Cecilie. Manager Corinaldi, a genial Panamanian who has been to New York and everything, and who seems to have stepped from Broadway, took me up to his office when I met him in the lobby of the ancient theater. He said he considered himself lucky to meet a picture man, and especially one who had been with the Moving Picture World, as that was his only film magazine, as was proved by the stacks of Worlds in his office. And here I might say that in all my travels I have seen the World wherever pictures held mention. My faith in it has more than been substantiated by the dip into foreign parts.

Mr. Corinaldi is a progressive exhibitor and a fine fellow to meet. He said, "Man, we want pictures down here. The Zone is pretty well supplied, but it is the land down South and Central America that is in need of films. I know dozens of theater men who are begging for pictures. The people have nothing to do, and the photoplay has supplied that eternal wish of everybody for something that they did not know how to describe—something that they wanted—and our screen stars have filled the bill, especially the women.

Exhibitor Accuses Manufacturers of Practicing "Manana."

"These southerners want live virile stories, played by real strong men and women. Bill Hart captures the crowd. Louise Glaum is a riot, and Chaplin gives them the breezy stuff they have ached for these centuries. I tell you," and he pounded the desk with his fist, "we want pictures. There are millions down south, and the Americans seem to have taken the 'manana' standpoint as far as going after it is concerned." I was surprised to hear so vehement an appeal.

Mr. Corinaldi runs at this house of a thousand seats, a daily change of Paramount, Artcraft, and Triangle features, at the "gold" 10, 20 and 30 rate. One is surprised at the volume of business. Every house is jammed; daily matinee and two-a-night. The audience is divided about 60 per cent. Americans and 40 per cent. Panamanian. One strange thing is that no Spanish sub-titles are run, everybody seeming to understand without translations. The latest pictures are shown, and the fans are more rabid than in the States, their applause at times being terrific. Hart and the outdoor, western, athletic stars are supreme. Fairbanks, Rawlinson and Walsh are well liked. The women are more popular, however, as the Panamanian goes wild over Glaum, Dalton, and those types. These southern people like the more virile, red-blooded action plays than the meek and innocent heart-interest stuff. Frank Keenan pulls well and Roscoe Arbuckle is making a hit, but as yet Chaplin holds the hearts, even to the mite of a bootblack who discards his portable shoestand for an entry to see "Chully Cheplin."

One night in the place, for the prize of a dime I had seven such kiddies imitating Chaplin's famous walk, and if it could have been filmed beholders would have had to visit a hospital to have their ribs set in plaster. I fell off a bench laughing at their antics, and all I had to quench with was real limeade. The people are just like the kids—picture fans, unadulterated, so you see that business as usual is better than usual here.

Mr. Corinaldi says that when Selig came to make "The Ne'er Do Well" Panama turned out en masse to see it, some participating. The Amador theater was used in the film. When the picture was shown the whole city saw it, and the run was prolonged, at top prices.

Cecilie Is a Surprise to the Traveler.

The new and beautiful Cecilie theater is a little Strand removed from New York. It seats 1,500, is fireproof, has complete and modern equipment, is well situated just off the main plaza, and is a real surprise to the traveler in this ancient city of the isthmus. It has two new Power's machines, a mirroroid screen and a late Fotoplayer. The shipments were delayed many months, which held up the opening. This is about all they feel the war down below the Southern Cross.

There are two smaller theaters in Panama, running mostly American pictures, and some foreign, but the two I described are the principal ones. On the Atlantic side Mr. Scott runs the America theater, which seats 1,180, and which is equipped almost identically as the others. Here a daily change is shown, with matinee thrice weekly. There is not the activity at Colon that there is at Panama, hence the lesser volume of business. The Broadway, also under the Wilcox control, seats 1,080, but is not open all the time on account of the business, which is good, but the city does not warrant it. This house was built by a competitor some time ago, who failed, and the house was taken over by the Wilcox concern and is now run intermittently. It is well equipped for road shows and any like attraction. It is used for concerts and public events now. It has complete stage and projection equipment. The other house in Colon is the Strand, which is doing a comfortable business.

I was fortunate in seeing Panama as a citizen more than as a tourist, as the guest of Mr. Corinaldi, who took me in and around the historical old city and the new, below the superficial. I also had the pleasure of dining with Arthur W. Concklin (with whom I had corresponded in Los Angeles on film topics), an executive in the big administration building, who explained the working of the giant waterway, and showed me through the building housing the models, working plans, miniatures, and maps of the canal. Mr. Concklin is in his leisure hours a writer and scenariost of some note and is tapping out modern American comedies and dramas while helping to run the United States' business in the Zone.

America has improved the country in the vicinity of the big ditch. Balboa is a small modern city in itself, run by the government, and is healthier than most cities in the States. The houses are set off the ground. There is not a trace of rubbish; no alleys, no fly-breeding garbage cans, no hidden vacant lots with trash overflowing, but a clean-as-a-whistle town with robust men and women and sturdy children. The government employes make good money, and eat well, at wholesale prices, even though old H.-C-L is abroad in the land. The municipal cafeterias are wonders when it comes to cooking, quality and conservation of the contents of the wallet.

Government Conducts Picture House.

"If the Canal employe," says Mr. Concklin, "wishes to take a bus or a carriage to town he goes and sees a picture, but if he is tired and wants to see one just around the hill, the Ancon theater, run by the government, shows pictures one day later than the downtown houses." He went on to explain about pictures and their future in the southland. "It has been a puzzle to me why American distributors do not go after this South American business more than they have," he remarked. "All the central and southern people crave the photoplay, and it remains for the States man to come and get the money. Since the war started, foreign pictures have been replaced here by American-made films, and the people like them much more. What the photoplay fans of the torrid zone want are real live pictures of life; the romantic west and its picturesque characters—especially the women." And he concluded with, "You can say that I am always a faithful devotee of the World, and when you get to New York give my regards to those who are supplying the real news of the industry. There is one scribbler down south who appreciates the only real picture journal—I would be utterly lost without the Moving Picture World."

I hope this little traveltalk will get by the Navy censor without much amputation. The trip was made some time ago, but the picture information is timely. I have since gathered some material from Key West, the coral island city that came back to life with the war, where two picture houses are running all the time with the good old S. R. O. sign nailed permanently to the lobby and lighted with the electrics.

The Sailorman's Angle of "Home Fires."

One admonition to you at home: Keep the home fires out (to save coal) as much as you can; buy Liberty Bonds—till it hurts; save food, wish and pray, and the good old Stars and Stripes will float from a housetop in Berlin some of these days. I wish it!

Keeney Will Continue Making Pictures

Corporation Denies It Is Going Out of Producing Business, as Intimated by New Publication.

AN article recently printed on May 22 in a daily publication conveys the erroneous impression that the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation has gone out of the producing business. The facts are that a three months' lease was taken on the Pathe Studio at Park avenue and 134th street by the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation for the purpose of producing two pictures, "Marriage" and a picture tentatively entitled "Out of the Night," according to a formal statement by the company. Both pictures have been completed, except for the cutting and titling, and Mr. Keeney has given up the studio, in accordance with his original intention. He had previously used the Biograph Studios under the short-term lease for the production of "A Romance of the Underworld." All three pictures star Catherine Calvert, who is under a long-term contract with the corporation. The work of production is to be resumed after the first of the Keeney pictures is placed on the market.

Arthur Hotaling, who has been directing the Lyons-Moran comedies, has been assigned as a director to the L-KO Company.

Essanay Announces Real Novelty

Muggsy, Mose and Mike Will Perform in Half-Length Reels as Movie Marionettes.

ESSANAY has nearly completed a series of ten pictures which it claims are the most unique ever produced. The chief characters are Muggsy, Mose and Mike, movie marionettes, although in some of the pictures human characters take minor parts.

These dolls are fourteen inches high and act before the camera just as human beings act. They run the gamut of facial expressions, depicting grief, joy, anger, terror, jealousy, hate, love or any other emotion.

They move on the screen as human beings, walking, running, etc. They have been so perfected that there is scarcely any perceptible hesitancy in their movements. Each film carries a distinct plot just as any picture in which real players enact their roles.

Muggsy, Mose and Mike, Three Chief Actors in Essanay's Marionette Pictures.

The making of these pictures has entailed months of work on the part of Directors Howard S. Moss and Charles B. Bennes. Frequently it is necessary for the men manipulating the dolls to hold one position for hours at a time, to time the action perfectly so that there be no jerkiness in the movements of the marionettes.

The making of the many dolls to get the various facial expressions also entails long, tedious work. This is the first time in doll pictures in which the dolls were able to show a change of countenance.

Among the first releases will be "Cracked Ice," "Ups and Downs," "All Balled Up," "Drafted," "Angel's Food" and "Their Jonah Day."

The pictures run five hundred feet each. Their release dates will be announced shortly.

BERNARD McCONVILLE WITH UNIVERSAL.

Bernard McConville, well known screen author, has been added to the staff of scenario writers at the Bluebird studios and is now preparing the working script from "Turn About Eleanor," Ethel M. Kelley's novel, which is to be used by Bluebird as Ella Hall's next photoplay.

Foreign Trade News

Conducted by F. G. ORTEGA.

Kent Heads Foreign Organization

New Exchange Will Distribute Films in the Antilles, Central America, Venezuela and Colombia.

ARCH G. KENT, representing the Central American Film Company, a corporation with main offices in Havana recently formed for the purpose of distributing American pictures throughout Cuba, Santo Domingo, Porto Rico, Jamaica, Venezuela, Colombia, Panama and all the Central American republics, has been in New York for the past four weeks closing contracts and making purchases—and he certainly has not wasted his time.

Arch G. Kent.

"We have closed contracts," said Mr. Kent to a representative of the Moving Picture World, "with David P. Howells for the First National Exhibitors' pictures and with William M. Vogel for the new Chaplin series; with Edna Williams of the Robertson-Cole Company for the various productions controlled by this firm; and from Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., we have purchased 'The Natural Law' and 'The Liar.' 'The Triumph of Venus' (Victory) and 'Don Quixote' (Triangle) were also bought through A. J. Bimberg and Hiller & Wilk respectively.

"The Central American Film Company is a new partnership formed by Torvaldo Hoff, an influential business man of Havana, and myself. We will endeavor—and the connections already made proves it—to present the best photoplays produced in the United States to the different markets covered by our firm, some of which have been sadly neglected by American producers and distributors."

Mr. Kent, who is also the manager of the Fausto theater in Havana, owned by the Caribbean Film Company, is already on his way back to the tropics. Before leaving, an office was established in New York, at Room 1101, 729 Seventh avenue, with Chester E. Sawyer in charge, for the purpose of keeping in closer contact with the producers.

It is understood that the Central American Film Company will release its films in Cuba and Porto Rico through the exchanges organized by the Caribbean Film Company, of Havana.

Lamy Agrees and Disagrees

Holds That Duping Should Be Allowed in the United Kingdom Only Under Certain Restrictions.

THE question of allowing "duping" privileges to European buyers while the war lasts has created quite a stir among the New York exporters. When asked for his opinion on the subject, Joseph Lamy, of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, was rather inclined to favor a middle course. However, we will let Mr. Lamy discuss the matter in his own way.

"I read with much interest the opinions on the 'duping question' of my friends, Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and Paul Cromelin, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

"First of all, I wish to state that I am practically entirely in accord with the statement of Mr. Cromelin, who, as an expert in the film export trade, recognized at once the danger of duping subjects should it become a common practice. All film men can easily see the difference between a positive print taken from an original negative and one taken from a dupe-negative, and in many instances, if the duping is not done by experts or if the original positive is not of absolutely first class photographic quality, the results are far from encouraging. However, it has become a common practice with the manufacturers to have two original negatives, both made at the time of taking the picture, and those manufacturers who have this advantage can, of course, easily ship one negative abroad. However, for those who have only one negative I would not advocate the duping for any other country than the United Kingdom, and only then in case the dupe-negative remains the property of the manufacturer to be returned immediately after the necessary prints for Great Britain have been taken off same.

"In such cases as this, I rather try to consider the film business from the public's point of view than as a business proposition. I believe that the moving picture house, as a cheap public entertainment, is essential in all countries today involved in the great conflict, because it has been proved on many former occasions that in war times the nations need wholesome and inexpensive amusements.

"If, therefore, the Government should be unable to spare space on the ships for the shipment of films in general, I would still be of the opinion that with the right restrictions duping should be allowed. However, the manufacturer ought to have the duping made in laboratories where the printing receives the most careful handling by an expert and he should not try to dupe any films, the photographic quality of which does not justify it.

Burlingham Fears Unwarranted, Says Cromelin

The International Film Market Cannot Be Monopolized by Conducting Business at a Loss.

PAUL H. CROMELIN, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, considered among leading American experts on international film conditions, has given out the following statement as the result of the warning of Frederick Burlingham, who recently reached the United States from Switzerland, that Germany was preparing to control the world's film business. "I have no doubt that a German Film Trust has actually been formed," says Mr. Cromelin. "But I really doubt that it will become the world menace its projectors expect it to be."

"I absolutely agree with Mr. Burlingham that the Germans would like to control the international film business if for no other purpose than propaganda use. The World has time and again published stories calling the attention of America to the development of films-for-propaganda-use by Germany, and if our officials have not heeded it, it is not for the want of sufficient publicity on the part of our trade press.

"But how can Germany monopolize the international film market by mere willingness to conduct their film business at a loss? Even if theaters were willing to show certain makes of pictures because they were cheap, that does not mean that the public will patronize these houses. I am sure that in this country exhibitors can get films that 'are given away' so to speak, and yet they pass them up to pay big prices for the films they actually use. And the publics of all countries are the final judges of the films and they will not support theaters that do not show the best, regardless of price. If Mr. Burlingham would fully realize this, he would not take his fears nearly as seriously as he does.

"Then as to keeping American films out of the lands of the Central Empires and Allies, it is simply to be done the way Mr. Burlingham believes the Germans have decided to go about it. When peace comes the publics of the Central Empires, too, will only go to see the films that most en-

Motion Picture Sub-Titles

By R. J. Huntington

Some Observations and Suggestions for the Benefit of Those Who Write Them

THE word sub-title is a rather loose term, commonly used to designate all reading matter, except the main or lead title, which appears on the screen. A more correct designation divides the term into two sub-headings: Captions, meaning all explanatory reading matter, and Spoken Titles, meaning all words put into the mouths of the characters and indicated by quotation marks.

When, where and why is a sub-title necessary or desirable? Some of the reasons for their use are:

1. To explain the purpose or indicate the main theme of the picture.
2. To give the picture coherency by using them as links, which join the scenes and help to carry the thread of the story.
3. To name and characterize the principal roles portrayed; to identify settings or location, and sometimes to fix the time of the story or any of its component parts.
4. To illuminate and interpret the picture or any of its situations by implanting ideas which the action does not or cannot register.
5. To inject comedy, pathos, or other sentiments which may be entirely arbitrary into the picture.
6. To indicate lapses of time, or cover jumps in the continuity.
7. To economize footage or save production costs by substituting them for scenes not shown.

Some of these uses, as I have tried to indicate them, may appear to be similar and some of them may overlap—that is, one sub-title may serve two or more of these purposes. But, on the other hand, a sub-title may be required for only one of these definite reasons.

There are as many ways of wording or phrasing a given sub-title of moderate length as there are individuals who may write it, and perhaps each one would consider his style and wording the best. It is certain that no two would write it exactly the same. There is and can be no set rules to govern its composition and no definite standard by which it may be measured, therefore its final form must be dictated by the intelligence, judgment and experience of the writer who creates it. Hence the wide diversity of opinion as to what constitutes a good and sufficient sub-title. Some people favor a florid or high sounding style, while others advocate a condensed, almost abbreviated form. As a matter of fact each kind may have its proper uses, depending upon the character of the story and the interpretation given it in the picture. The sub-title writer should endeavor to sense the atmosphere and characterizations of the picture as they are shown on the screen and write his material to fit the scenes as played, not as he thinks they should, or as he wishes they might, have been portrayed.

Sub-titles should be fitted into a picture so that, instead of interrupting or irritating, they help the natural flow of the story and add to its interest. If they are too few or too short and abrupt they may defeat this purpose as effectually as when they are too numerous or too long. Everybody knows how interesting a spoken or written story may be when told by a master and how flat or insipid the same tale may be when related by one unskilled in the art.

It is often much more difficult and takes more time and study to decide not to insert a sub-title than to write one. If a sub-title will not help a scene, or if one is not really needed, it is a safe rule to leave it out. It is not always as simple and easy to write a suitable sub-title to fit a given scene as it might seem to one who views the finished picture. It is much easier to write something long and flowery than one which is terse and expressive. A caption of moderate length, designed to cover several points, is often revised and rewritten a dozen times before it assumes satisfactory form. Sub-title writing has its nuisances as well as music and art. Words that may express the desired thought must sometimes be discarded because they are too long or not familiar enough to the average motion picture patron. The best captions and the most difficult to formulate are those in simple, correct and expressive English, devoid of technical or uncommon terms, which register the desired thought in the fewest words.

Captions covering a considerable lapse of time should not be too short. There is a psychological reason for this. It may seem sufficient to cover a lapse of time by simply flashing "A Year Later" on the screen, but if this short caption follows intense action or suspense the mind of the audience should be given a little longer time in which to relax and to grasp the new thought before the next scene is shown. Therefore a caption containing from six to ten words may sway the trend of thought smoothly and pleasantly and without the mental wrench that the shorter caption might give to the average person. Of course this does not apply when surprise is desired.

Spoken titles often present many difficulties. Witness the mushy, inane speeches often put into the mouths of some characters in love scenes—speech such as no regular human being would ever make. The effort should be to write spoken titles that will seem natural and at the same time in keeping with the character supposedly talking. A speech that may sound all right when actually spoken, with the advantage of inflection and emphasis, may seem very flat when thrown upon the screen.

Dialect spoken titles are tricky things, and should be used sparingly. They are usually difficult to read and often fail to impress. Very few people can write any dialect with great success, especially for pictures, and probably no one can write all dialects with any approach to satisfaction.

Long spoken titles should be avoided as much as possible. Better to have two or three short ones than a single long speech, provided the scene will carry more than one. As a rule it is better to confine them to one sentence, worded, punctuated and spaced to read as smoothly as possible. Many spoken titles containing two or more sentences could be condensed into one by a little thought and study. But brevity may, in some cases, be overdone. It is often easier to catch the sense of a well-rounded sentence than one which has been clipped too short.

Title cards should be edited carefully by the title writer before they are photographed. The idea contained in a sub-title is often obscured by crowding, bad spacing, the incorrect or unnecessary division of a word at the end of a line, caused by the exercise of poor judgment on the part of the man who letters the cards, making the words hard to read or difficult to interpret readily.

Spoken titles should not be cut into long shots if it can be avoided because it is often difficult to be sure which person is speaking. If possible flash to a close-up of the person talking, cut in the title, another flash of the close-up and then back to the long shot. A very short piece before and after the spoken title will accomplish this purpose and add very little to the footage. If a close-up is not available and the spoken title is essential to the scene then write it so that the audience may be sure as to which person speaks. Do not leave it to them to guess.

In writing sub-titles and also in cutting a picture keep the audience constantly in mind. Try to work from the point of view of the person who is going to look at your picture in the theater. Remember that the people seeing the picture but once will not be as familiar with it as those who have run it over and over while working on it, and that the public may not catch the fine points that have become quite familiar and obvious to you.

While a certain amount of latitude in language is allowable in spoken titles, captions should be written in good English and be grammatically correct. Study, analysis, judgment and experience are as necessary in writing good sub-titles as in any other department of picture production. Ability to write stories, advertising copy, letters or other forms of composition does not necessarily imply qualification to write satisfactory sub-titles.

CHAPLIN RESENTS EXEMPTION SLUR.

The announcement in the current issue of a Los Angeles film magazine that Charlie Chaplin has circulated petitions among women's clubs throughout the nation in his endeavor to gain exemption from military service has aroused the comedian. Chaplin, as well as his associates and attorneys, considers the article exploited for the purpose of placing him in a false and unpatriotic light with the public. Chaplin and his studio manager declare the entire story to be untrue.

Chaplin registered under the rules of the selective service law. He has been placed in Class 5. He has never claimed exemption nor has he sought it, and will willingly respond when called.

Williams Roasts "The Grave Diggers"

Wants a Commission of Film Men to Decide What Punishment Shall be Meted Out to Them.

J. D. WILLIAMS, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has drawn a strong indictment against the men in the picture business who make a practice of digging up old subjects and, furbishing them up with new titles and sub-titles, and offering them to the trade. Mr. Williams has no objection to reissues of old subjects under their original titles, but he objects to the practice of making the old subjects look like new pictures, thus deceiving the patrons of the theater which shows them. His argument against the practice follows.

The practice that has lately come into vogue of reissuing well-known films of the past under new titles is the most sinister move that has been developed within the film industry for many years. And unless the men of this country who have raised the business to its present high plane immediately express their disapproval of such questionable methods, the matter is likely to produce results of far-reaching evil, and permanently damage its prestige.

The people who are now digging up the successes of four and five years ago from the graveyard of the past and trying to animate them with new life under new names are guilty of bare-faced fraud, and are trying to get away with tactics that would not be tolerated for an instant in any other industry or profession that I can call to mind.

Suppose, for instance, that after Jack London's great story, "The Sea Wolf," had temporarily exhausted its popularity in its original $1.35 edition, do you imagine that MacMillan & Company would even consider the idea of getting out a cheap edition under the title, say, of "The Blond Beast," with new chapter headings to fool the unwary into the supposition that it was a brand new novel from London's pen?

Doesn't sound very probable, does it?

Yet that is exactly what these grave diggers in the film field are doing when they reissue pictures that have already served their full duty from the standpoint of both entertainment and money-making.

They offer the alibi that the exhibitor books the stuff with his eyes open, and that if the man who runs the theater is willing to take a chance on fooling his patrons into the belief that they are going to see one of their favorite stars in a new production, why, they will print up all the old material in the storehouse and ship it out under new labels so long as the office thesaurus of words and phrases will supply them with new titles.

This is passing the buck with a vengeance, and if I am not greatly mistaken, will turn out to be a boomerang-throwing act that will sooner or later knock the parties who evolved the scheme into the discard, along with the gentry who used to fake labels on well-known articles of merchandise and misbrand cattle on the open range.

Any theater manager who once gets the reputation of luring the crowds into his house under false pretenses is going to find himself without any crowds to lure before he has pulled the stunt more than two or three times.

And without the co-operation of the ultimate consumer where is the money going to come from to keep the film industry in a live, progressive state, anyway?

Reissues that are put out frankly as reissues are not objectionable in any sense. There is no reason why acknowledged screen classics should not live as long as literary or musical classics. But when titles are deliberately changed, and "new prints from original negatives" are gotten out under a camouflage of "up-to-date sub-titles," rewritten press books and newly designed posters and advertising accessories, the scheme degenerates into a deliberate effort to mislead.

"The old title is given as well as the new one in the trade paper advertising," say the apologists of the men who are trying to float the proposition.

So it is—in the advertising pages of the trade papers—but NOT ON THE ADVERTISING MATERIAL AND THE LITHOGRAPHIC STANDS THAT ARE BEING PUT OUT TO ATTRACT THE PUBLIC AT LARGE.

In fact, so flagrant and so well calculated is the effort to deceive in this respect, that I believe the department that has legal jurisdiction over the selling of goods under fraudulent names in any community could be made to stop the showing of such films, if the proper steps were taken.

I hereby call for a commission of seven of the leading producers and distributors of motion pictures—to be selected by the editors of the Moving Picture World, the Motion Picture News and the Exhibitors' Trade Review—to meet at the earliest convenient date that can be agreed upon and decide upon the proper action to be taken to stamp out this despicable form of counterfeiting.

Do Exhibitors Undervalue News Weeklies?

That Is the Contention of the Makers—Campaign On to Convince Theater Men of Intrinsic Worth.

JUST how much is the news weekly worth to the motion picture theater? Under the leadership of Jack Cohn, manager of the Universal News Weekly department, the manufacturers and distributors of the weekly picturization of the current events have been conducting an investigation in the theaters of New York with the result that they have made reports to the heads of their companies tending to prove that the value of the news weeklies is so undervalued by exhibitors in general as to warrant the statement that many exhibitors have failed to keep their fingers on the public pulse.

The investigations have been conducted through personal investigation by members of the manufacturing company staffs who were instructed to attend the theaters and make observations on the applause given for each unit of the show. The reports on this phase show that the applause given the news weeklies was more spontaneous and in greater volume than the applause given other parts of the program. This did not apply in every instance, but was the fact when the feature presented was about the average production.

The second test consisted of personal interviews with members of the audiences. This test would seem to prove even more conclusively the popularity of the news reel. While members of the audiences were divided on their opinion of the feature and the comedy they were a unit in praising the news reel.

As a result of the investigation exhibitors throughout the country will be asked to give more attention to the news weeklies and to meet the producers at least half way in assisting in defraying the expense of getting them out by paying a legitimate rental price.

It is a fact well known to the exhibitors that the life of a news weekly is very short. Every print must work continually to even pay the print cost, to say nothing of the office and production overhead.

Paralta Changes Due to Army Demands

With Kane in Service and Brown Soon to Be, Anderson Decided to Release Holdings.

THE transfer of Paralta stock, which has just been consummated in Los Angeles, as told in the World last week, provides for the release of the Carl Anderson, Nat I. Brown and Robert Kane interests in all of the eight corporations of which they have been officers and directors. Mr. Anderson was, prior to his sale of stock, president of these eight companies and Mr. Brown was general manager.

The principal reason which prompted the transfer of stock was the practical disorganization of the Anderson, Brown and Kane faction, due to both Mr. Kane and Mr. Brown being called into the service of the United States Army. Mr. Kane has just been commissioned an officer at American Lake, Washington, while Mr. Brown will report at camp this month. This left only Mr. Anderson to represent the original group of organizers and business heads of the Paralta company, and, consequently when the others found it necessary to dispose of their interests due to their enforced resignation as active executives, Mr. Anderson decided to release his own holdings to Herman Katz and John E. De Wolf.

In the terms of the agreement of purchase, however, Mr. Anderson has consented to remain with the company temporarily in order to allow Mr. Katz and Mr. De Wolf ample time to affect a reorganization capable of carrying on successfully the business created by him.

In an interview this week it was pointed out to Mr. Anderson that his success with Paralta should be of benefit to the world of pictures, inasmuch as it will inject assurance and confidence into many men who have been fearful regarding the reported financial depression in the business.

"Motion pictures are now an industry—they are no longer an enterprise," replied Mr. Anderson. That means that every man connected with films today must be a business man; he cannot be a money-mad prospector. The only reason that there has been a lot of calamity-howling resounding in the industry is that the incompetents are being forced out by the men who belong in the amusement field by right of knowledge, and it is these, the incompetents, who are doing the shouting, and it is really a good sign and not a bad one. It is a sign that the industry is finding itself and is becoming established upon solid foundation.

"It is said that the poor will always be with us. It is a fact that as long as we have the poor we shall have motion pictures. There is just as much money in them now as there ever was, and the secret of success is really not a secret at all. It consists merely of business acumen. Our success with the Paralta company is gratifying, but it is not astonishing. It simply verifies what I have said—that there is money in the industry for those who understand the business."

HENDERSON JOINS ADVERTISING AGENCY STAFF.

Daniel M. Henderson has resigned from the staff of McClure's Magazine to become a member of the Ruthrauff and Ryan Advertising Agency of New York City.

Mr. Henderson, in addition to his duties as promotion manager for McClure Publications, was also advertising director for McClure Pictures and Petrova Pictures, conducting the nation-wide exploitation campaigns on "Seven Deadly Sins" and Petrova Pictures. The latter campaign was specially commented upon by the trade for its artistic and attention-attracting qualities.

In his new position Mr. Henderson will devote himself to mail-order advertising.

Ralph Ince at Head of New Company

Contract Executed Between Director and Sawyer and Lubin for Making of Special Feature Attractions.

AN important combination of interests in production and distribution is announced. On May 20 contracts were entered into between Ralph Ince, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, whereby a series of big special feature attractions will be produced, marketed and exploited, bearing the brand name of "Ralph Ince Film Attractions."

In addition to the three men mentioned the name of one of the leading figures of the industry, which is withheld for the present, will be linked in all of the activities of the combination.

The agreement brings together the much discussed angles of production and distribution in the closest kind of contract. The plans of the combination are comprehensive. They embrace the production of a series of specially picturized versions of stage successes and the works of famous authors, bearing the stamp of Ralph Ince's name.

When the details attendant on the first offering are made public, it is said surprise is in store, inasmuch as they will present an innovation in the matter of the type of attraction and the method of staging. The plans call for the use of all-star casts, embracing the names of film and stage favorites.

The name of Ralph Ince is familiar to the public by reason of the successful screen productions to which it has been attached as director. Prior to becoming a producer, Ince was a film player of note. His characterization of Lincoln is still remembered. During his several years with the Vitagraph Company he directed such successes as "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413,' 'etc. More recently he has to his credit the making of "The Eleventh Commandment" and "Ninety and Nine," both presenting Lucille Lee Stewart; "To Day," starring Florence Reed; "The Woman Eternal," starring Elaine Hammerstein; "Fields of Honor," starring Mae Marsh, and a series of pictures featuring Madame Olga Petrova.

Herbert Lubin bears a reputation as exchange man, state right specialist and organizer of big financial projects. The former holder of the Metro franchise for Canada for several years, Mr. Lubin possesses a wide knowledge of the exhibitor's problems and requirements. He has been responsible for many innovations in the field of state right distribution during the past twelve months. A member of the firm of General Enterprises, Inc., which scored a success in its handling of "The Warrior" and "Mother," he is known to practically every showman in the United States and Canada. In addition to his activities in the fields mentioned herein, Mr. Lubin also negotiated and consummated the contract whereby Madame Olga Petrova became the head of her own organization.

Arthur H. Sawyer is one of the pioneers of the picture business, having been prominently identified for the past fifteen years with every branch of the industry. Originally an exhibitor, and afterward owner of one of the first chain of picture theaters in the United States, Mr. Sawyer became interested in the matter of production about ten years ago.

Mr. Lubin announces that a special department of publicity and exploitation had been created, to be administered by Bert Ennis. The latter has had a varied career in the theatrical and motion picture business.

Think Cantonment Will Boost Business

San Juan Picture Men Believe New Soldiers Will Bring Much Money to Theaters.

San Juan, Porto Rico, U. S. A., May 18, 1918.

MOVING picture men are looking forward to a large increase in business as a result of the calling for military training of 13,000 men from the island, who will be stationed at Camp Las Casas, a suburb of San Juan. While it is not known just yet whether the moving picture men will have an opportunity to establish theaters near the cantonment, the Y. M. C. A. will have three large huts in the encampment, each with a theater with a seating capacity of 700. In addition to this the committee on camp activities will provide other amusements for the men, in which moving pictures will play a large part.

For most of the men who are called into military service their pay as soldiers will mean to them more money than they have ever regularly had before, so that whether they spend it within the cantonment or scatter it over the city the picture theaters expect to have a very great increase in business.

An addition is to be made very shortly to the moving picture theater at Borinquen Park. For several months the theater—at least one night a week—has had to turn people away after providing all of the extra seating capacity the house will hold. As high as 400 people, it is said, have been turned away on Sunday night, the big night of the week.

More people have seen Mary Pickford in "The Little American" than in any other film that has ever come to Porto Rico, according to Manager Donahue of the Caribbean Film Company. "The Little American" was released here on March 1, and up to the 10th of May had been shown thirty-five times to 30,000 people. At Ponce the film has been shown nine times, three times in each of the three houses, and Ponce is still asking for repeats on the film. It is expected this film is good for at least three months more in the island. So far only the largest cities have had the film. In every theater in San Juan it has been shown, in most cases for two performances.

Broadway Will Have Seating Capacity of 2,700.

What is to be the largest and finest moving picture theater in the island is now being constructed at Ponce by Antonio Arias, who also owns and operates the Cine Delicias, Cine Apolo and Cine Mundial in that city. The new theater will be called the Broadway, and it is now planned to arrange for a seating capacity of 2,700. This will be double the capacity of any house in the island.

The Universal Film Company is planning to release "The Kaiser, or the Beast of Berlin" for six performances on Memorial Day, May 30, which will be a holiday here. Already "The Kaiser" is being extensively advertised, and Manager Goldman has been getting some good publicity for the picture. It was first shown at a private performance at Borinquen Park ten days ago for the special benefit of Governor Yager.

The Caribbean Film Company has two features which it is planning to release soon. The first of these is "Joan of Arc," which is now being held up on account of lack of advertising material. The Caribbean is also expecting to receive this week "The Woman God Forgot," which probably will be released within the next month.

Most of the exchanges and cine managers say that the moving picture business in Porto Rico is improving all of the time; that the demand for better pictures is more general, and that more people are going to the movies more nights a week than ever before.

This increase, however, is largely noticed in the larger towns; while in the smaller places, where there is competition, it is inclined to be of a ruinous nature. Almost any sort of a program will make money in almost every theater in almost any town on Sunday night, and if it were not for the Sunday night performance many of the smaller theaters would not be in existence.

In some of the smaller towns there is a tendency to cut prices on dull nights in the week, and the exchanges report that frequently they know of programs which are shown for the admission of one, three and five cents on dull week nights in theaters that charge fifteen cents or more for their Sunday night performance. Probably in no place in the world are prices cut so low as this.

WARNER OLAND TO APPEAR WITH WORLD.

Warner Oland has become affiliated with World Pictures and will play the principal Chinese role in "Mandarin's Gold," a World production featuring Miss Kitty Gordon and directed by Oscar Apfel.

Mr. Oland comes of Swedish stock and had a long experience on the stage. He played with Viola Allen, Sothern and Marlowe in Shakespearean repertoire and with Alla Nazimova in Ibsen's "The Master Builder" and "Doll's House."

In the camera world he was associated with Theda Bara and John Mason and Fanny Ward and appeared with Grace Castle in the serial "Patria" and then with Pearl White in "The Fatal Ring."

KATTERJOHN RESIGNS FROM PARALTA.

Monte M. Katterjohn, for some time past a leading author at the Paralta studios in Los Angeles, has resigned from the company. While with Paralta Mr. Katterjohn wrote "Carmen of the Klondike," the Alaskan production which was purchased by the State Rights Distributors, Inc., as well as "Madam Who?" and "Within the Cup," starring Bessie Barriscale. Mr. Katterjohn is also the author of "An Alien Enemy," which introduces Louise Glaum as a Paralta star, and which has proven a success on account of its timeliness and its powerful story. Mr. Katterjohn has received offers from four producing organizations in Los Angeles, but has not yet chosen his future affiliation.

Goldwyn Engages Two Directors

Giblyn and Barker, Both Former Ince Men, Have Made Good "On Their Own."

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has engaged two directors, both distinguished by excellent past achievements and whose names on the Goldwyn programs will be an addition that will attract notice in the trade. These are Reginald Barker and Charles Giblyn.

Mr. Barker is known as one of the most vigorous directors in the motion picture industry. He is a master craftsman possessed of a rare combination—a flawless technique and an unfailing sense of dramatic values as they are expressed for the screen. His engagement to direct Geraldine Farrar follows the natural conclusion of Goldwyn that few directors are Mr. Barker's equal, none his superiors, and his own conclusion that Goldwyn is in the forefront of the industries producing organizations and that it holds the largest promise for the future.

The first two plays for Miss Farrar's Goldwyn work are already in Mr. Barker's hands and he has expressed himself as highly pleased with the material selected for her. He says he regards his selection to direct the famous star of opera and motion pictures as the big achievement of his career. He signed his Goldwyn contract after negotiations in Los Angeles with Mr. Goldfish and other Goldwyn executives extending over a period of several months.

Mr. Barker's most distinguished work was done in his association with Thomas H. Ince, which began with the formation of Triangle and continued until the director cast his lot with Paralta. In his Ince-Triangle connection Mr. Barker directed such successes as "Thoroughbred," "Jim Grimsby's Boy," "The Market of Vain Desire," "Three of Many," "The Criminal," "Happiness" and a dozen others.

Among Mr. Barker's most recent and distinctive directorial achievements is "Carmen of the Klondike," a success of the winter and spring season. He also is responsible for "Madam Who," another Paralta picture starring Bessie Barriscale.

Mr. Giblyn is known for his able handling of many big and powerful motion picture productions. He will join the Fort Lee branch of the Goldwyn producing organization. He is already at work on a picture starring a personality about whom Goldwyn is making something of a mystery. Even the title is a secret.

Mr. Giblyn comes to Goldwyn with an enviable record. He is of the Ince-Triangle school, too. In his association with Mr. Ince he directed several of the most successful of the Frank Keenan pictures and others which stamped his work as distinctively capable. Later he directed Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge and Ann Pennington in productions which proved a tribute to his skill.

Mr. Giblyn is a director who has grown up with the industry. He was an actor of prominence for many years before he became interested in the screen form of dramatic expression and his first work in motion pictures was as a player. When the Fine Arts Company was organized as one corner of the Triangle Corporation Mr. Giblyn became one of its leading directors.

Among the more recent of Mr. Giblyn's successes are "The Vagabond Prince," "Somewhere in France," "The Price She Paid," "The Lesson," "Scandal" and "The Honeymoon."

Rudolph Goes to West Coast

Takes Trip to Consult with Harry I. Garson, His Chief, on Business Matters.

W. H. RUDOLPH, publicity manager and minister plenipotentiary to Harry I. Garson, has left for the coast on a "hurry up" call from his chief to go over important matters pertaining to Mr. Garson's interests.

Mr. Garson is one of the busiest men in filmdom. Under his management Clara Kimball Young is making one hit after another. Since going to California Miss Young has completed Cynthia Stockley's well-known novel "The Claw," which is soon to be released, and is said to surpass any of her former successes. Miss Young is now filming "The Savage Woman" (La Fille Sauvage), by Francois Curel.

In addition to Miss Young's interests Mr. Garson is engaged with his own producing company, headed by Blanche Sweet, in which are such well-known artists as Harry Northrup, Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson and Rosemary Theby. Miss Sweet's first picture, "The Hushed Hour," has just been completed. "Rudy" goes to consult on business matters pertaining to the two companies, both as to publicity for Miss Young and to decide on the publicity and marketing policy of "The Hushed Hour." It will probably be decided to state right the latter.

Mr. Garson has just purchased the rights to "Told in the Hills" by Marsh Ellis Ryan, for which he paid a sum said to be over $15,000, in which Blanche Sweet and House Peters will probably be co-starred.

Sherry Opens Headquarters in New York

Distributor of Keeney Pictures Will Have Exchanges at All Principal United States and Canadian Points.

THE recent announcement that William L. Sherry is to form his own distributing organization, with exchanges at all principal distribution points in the United States and Canada, is likely to cause talk in the film world. Mr. Sherry is known as a man of large ideas and vigorous and effective execution. He has associated with him in his new enterprise men well known and highly esteemed for their character, ability and experience. Exhibitors may therefore well realize what kind of service to expect from the new concern.

As the general headquarters of his New York exchange Mr. Sherry has rented half of the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building. He will take possession next Saturday. His new enterprise will be known as the William L. Sherry Service. His manager will be N. J. Sennott, who has been closely affiliated with Mr. Sherry in the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company and Paramount and Famous Players-Lasky. At the time Mr. Sherry resigned as vice president of Paramount Mr. Sennott also resigned, to be with Mr. Sherry in whatever enterprise he might engage.

Daniel J. Savage, formerly manager of the First National exchange in Buffalo, will be general sales manager. Howard Brink, who was general salesman for the same exchange, will be in charge of one of the Sherry exchanges. Mr. Sherry also will have with him A. C. Novotny, formerly auditor of the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky, and Frank A. Lappan, well known to Long Island and up-State exhibitors. All of these men have been associated with Mr. Sherry at one time or other and he and they have reciprocally earned each other's confidence.

Mr. Sinnott left New York a few days ago, to open up exchanges in the territory east of Chicago. Mr. Savage is doing similar work in the section between Chicago and the Pacific. Mr. Sherry says that the new concern will be beginning operations on June 15.

The William L. Sherry Service was organized primarily to distribute the pictures of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. His first release will be "A Romance of the Underworld," the release date to be announced shortly. The second will be "Marriage" and the third a picture tentatively titled "Out of the Night." All of these are practically complete. Other Keeney productions are to be made after "A Romance of the Underworld" is placed on the market.

Gene Pallette Waits for Air Call

Popular West Coast Player Has Passed All Examinations and Is Taking Only Short Contracts.

EUGENE PALLETTE, a member of the cast supporting Bert Lytell in the Metro production, "No Man's Land," is subject to call on ten days' notice as an army student aviator. Although he is just under the draft age maximum, Mr. Pallette enlisted in the flying branch of the service at San Diego several months ago, but as yet has not been summoned to camp for instruction.

The screen actor passed the rigid physical and mental examinations for entrance into the aviation corps with a perfect rating. He has since been expecting the call momentarily. Because of the uncertainty as to when his services may be required, Mr. Pallette has abstained from signing a long term contract to appear in pictures.

In "No Man's Land" Mr. Pallette has the role of Sidney Dundas, a sycophant. He was last seen in a Metro production in "Breakers Ahead."

DIRECTOR REICHER BACK IN NEW YORK.

Frank Reicher, Metro director, has arrived in New York after having spent several months at Metro's Hollywood studios, where he directed Edith Storey in two pictures and Viola Dana in one. Mr. Reicher was accompanied by Mrs. Reicher. A slight token of the esteem in which he is held by his Coast associates took the form of a wrist watch, which was handed to him as he was about to board the train for New York.

Exhibitors' Booking Directors Hold Session

The Organization Being Rapidly Whipped Into Shape—Particulars of Selecting Films and Other Matters.

A MEETING of the board of directors of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Illinois (the title being changed from the Chicago Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, as given in my last letter) was held Monday, May 20, at headquarters of the M. P. T. O. Association, in the Mallers building, to elect officers for the ensuing year.

Joseph Hopp and Louis H. Frank were elected national directors and the following officers were also elected: President, William E. Heaney; vice president, William H. Burford; secretary, H. A. Gundling; treasurer, M. A. Choynski, the auditor, Sam Gold.

The next meeting of the organization was held Wednesday, May 22, at 1 P. M., in Fraternity Hall, and William E. Heaney occupied the chair. A thorough explanation was made of all questions where proper understanding had not been arrived at by certain members—Messrs. Hopp, Frank, Heaney, Burford and Choynski taking leading parts in the discussions.

The selection of the first picture that will be used through the various zones will take place some time during the week of June 3, in New York City. All the national directors from the various zones at that time formed will be present at this first meeting and all will have a voice in the selection of the first picture.

The selection of the second picture will be made at a meeting of five different directors chosen from the zones then in existence and this meeting also will be held in New York.

The third picture will be chosen by five different directors chosen from the various zones and the meeting will be held in Chicago.

Thereafter it will be arranged in what zone the next meeting of five other different directors will be held to select the fourth picture, and so on.

The selection of five different directors at the viewing of each picture is to prevent possible collusion. It is held in every case that when a picture has been selected by each of these sets of five different directors, their dictum must be accepted by every member of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation in the country.

The traveling expenses of these directors, when a picture is to be selected, are paid by the parent organization.

Fifty-five shares, at $100 per share, have now been purchased in the Illinois zone and an additional $2,500, making $10,000 in all, must be deposited in the bank before the first picture will be reviewed. Mr. Choynski, treasurer, has already filed his bond for $10,000 to meet the requirements.

Eight zones have already been formed at the time of writing throughout the country and there will be twenty such zones in all. Each zone is entitled to one national director for each 100 days' booking. This gives New York and Chicago, with their allotment of 200 booking days, two directors each.

The next meeting of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Illinois will be held Wednesday, May 29, in Fraternity Hall.

First Victory for Maypole Ordinance

It Passes the Judiciary Committee 11 to 5 and Will Be Called Up for Passage in Council June 3.

AT a meeting of the judiciary committee of the Chicago city council Tuesday, May 21, the ordinance governing the censorship of moving pictures as amended by Alderman Maypole was recommended for passage by a vote of 11 yeas and 5 nays.

The amended ordinance will be reported in the council Monday, May 27. It will then be published and deferred, and will be called up for passage Monday, June 3, following the usual order.

It has been learned that the statement concerning the Rev. Father Dinneen, that he represented Archbishop Mundelein in his attitude toward the Maypole ordinance, is without foundation and that he simply represents himself and his followers.

The chief supporter of Major Funkhouser as well as the most bitter opponent of the Maypole ordinance is Alderman A. A. McCormick. This alderman charges that the only object of the amended ordinance is to get rid of Funkhouser and that the moving picture men are back of it.

Alderman Maypole answers that his motive in introducing the amended ordinance is to do away with one man censorship. He stoutly denied to the meeting, in his reply to Alderman McCormick, that he had any connection with moving picture men and stated that his ordinance provides for majority rule by the censor board.

"Pershing's Crusaders" at Orchestra Hall.

"Pershing's Crusaders," the first of a series of engrossing war pictures released by the United States Government, opened a two weeks' run at Orchestra Hall, Monday evening, May 20. The same pictures are being shown contemporaneously in sixteen of the largest centers in the country, and it is the purpose of the Government, through the Bureau of Public Information, to release at intervals a continuation of this pictorial history of the great world war.

No American with red blood in his veins can fail to be enthused by "Pershing's Crusaders," or to be aroused to the cheering point by the might and majesty of Uncle Sam. The tremendous tasks which are being carried on successfully and concurrently by the nation, as viewed in these pictures, cheer and strengthen the beholder as no written words could do, while the conviction that the Hun will be wiped out settles down in every mind with a grim certainty.

Much snap is given the scenes by the carefully and happily constructed sub-titles throughout. Indeed, they fill the place of a lecturer without the accompanying disillusion. The general excellence of the pictures in assembling and titling is not to be wondered at when it is known that H. C. Hoagland, a pastmaster in such matters and an all-around expert in the making of moving pictures, is the editor of the film department of the bureau of public information at Washington, D. C.

Great crowds have attended Orchestra Hall every day since the opening, and eager interest is taken in the success of the pictures financially, as it is known that the balance remaining, after all expenses have been paid will go to the support and comfort of the boys over there.

The splendid Orchestra Hall symphony orchestra, under the magic wand of Director Dunham, plays the musical accompaniment to the pictures in a way that wins frequent applause.

Ascher Brothers Secure Site of Old Columbia.

In a recent conversation with Nate Ascher, of the Ascher Brothers, this city, he announced that his firm is figuring on securing the site of the old Inter Ocean at 55 West Monroe street, together with the site of the next building west of it, for the purpose of building a first-class moving picture theater. If the deal goes through, the new building will be four stories high, with a frontage of 100 feet on Monroe street, and it will provide three floors for offices. The seating capacity of the new theater will be about 3,000 and a stage will be built so that in case of need either dramatic or vaudeville attractions could be used as well as pictures. Mr. Ascher states that at the present outlook he expects only pictures will be shown in the house.

The site of the Inter Ocean was formerly occupied by the old Columbia theater, owned by Mrs. Lehman, of the Fair, who also owns the Majestic theater building on Monroe street. The Columbia was burned down in 1898 and the present unoccupied Inter Ocean building was built on the site. The location is a block and a half from State, and the fact that the Loop section, outside of State and Randolph streets, is poorly illuminated at night has deterred several others in years past from erecting a theater there. Mr. Ascher, however, believes that this can be overcome and that patrons will flock to his theater if the right attractions are offered. We wish the Ascher Brothers good luck on this venture.

Permit for "Rose of Blood" Under Advisement.

In December, 1917, the "Rose of Blood," a Fox film, was refused a permit by Major Funkhouser and the case was carried to the U. S. district court, before Judge Carpenter, for trial. Judge Carpenter refused to grant a permit and the case was appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The case was heard Tuesday, May 21, before Judges Baker, Evans and Geiger, with Charles P. Schwartz, of Friedman and Schwartz, counsel for the petitioner. For the benefit of the presiding judges the picture was presented on the screen in court, this being the first instance of the kind which has happened in the city. The case was taken under advisement and a decision will be rendered in the near future.

Thrilling British War Film at Coliseum.

The Canadian Club of Chicago presented the British official war film, "British Bulwarks," at the Coliseum, this city, Friday evening, May 24. F. E. Tapsfield, secretary of the club, announced that this new war picture, which shows actual fighting in Flanders and which has been taken under the direction of the British War Office, was loaned for the occasion in aid of the Western Relief Fund to assist dependents of Chicago men who have gone to the British front. The pictures depict scenes of actual warfare on the Flanders front, such as were never thrown on any screen in Chicago. Added features of the program for the occasion were dancing numbers by twenty-four Scotch lads and lassies and music by the Edison Symphony Orchestra, the latter having been secured for the occasion by Samuel Insull, chairman of the Illinois State Council of Defense. The admission was 50 cents, with the war tax added.

Harry Reichenbach Visits Chicago.

Harry Reichenbach, the human dynamo in firm circles, spent several busy days in the city during the week of Monday, May 20. His activities in the interests of "Tarzan of the Apes" were unusually brisk, even for him, and he indulged in considerable pyrotechnics in the way of publicity in the daily papers for that much-discussed production. While here Harry announced that he will sail for Italy on government propaganda work early in June, and that in addition to that work, he will take along "Tarzan of the Apes," "My Four Years in Germany," "My Own United States" and several Parsons comedies for distribution in Italy. He will represent the International Film organization, which is laying plans to neutralize German film activities when the war is over.

Another Fine Modern Theater on North Side.

A large, modern picture theater, which will seat about 2,000 people, is now nearing completion at Lincoln and Lawrence avenues, on the North Side. The name of the owner has not yet been given out, but it is stated on reliable authority that Tom Chamales, owner of the Green Mill Gardens in that vicinity, is the proprietor. It is said that the house has already been leased to the Balaban and Katz organization, which owns the big modern Central Park Theater, at 3535 West Twelfth street. The name of the new theater has not yet been given out, but it is said that it will be opened in about thirty days.

"Cleopatra" (Fox) Opens at Colonial.

"Cleopatra," the famous Fox production in which Theda Bara is featured and which has gained wide advertising through the litigation required to obtain a permit for its showing in Chicago, will begin an indefinite run at the Colonial theater Monday, May 27. James Grainger, representing the Fox Film Company from New York, will have charge of the presentations during its Colonial run. Two presentations will be given daily at the following admissions: matinees, 25 and 50 cents; evenings, 25, 50, 75 and $1.

Trade Review Sued by Funkhouser.

On Monday, May 20, Major M. L. C. Funkhouser filed a libel suit for $100,000 against the Exhibitors' Trade Review, of New York, and its editor, Leslie Mason. The major charges that the paper has impugned his honesty in the censorship of films. He further alleges that the publication in question printed purported interviews with the Kaiser, in which the latter thanked Funkhouser for his aid and comfort.

"Toys of Fate" (Metro) at the Playhouse.

Cresson E. Smith, Chicago manager for Metro, announces that "Toys of Fate," featuring Nazimova, has been granted a white permit by the censor board and that it will be shown at the Playhouse during the week of Sunday, May 26. "The Million Dollar Dollies," another Metro feature, with "Pay Day," a Sidney Drew comedy, have drawn fine business during the current week.

Louis J. Selznick Visits Chicago.

Louis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, came in from New York Monday, May 20. He remained for two days and then left to continue his tour of Select offices in the central western states.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Goes to Orpheum.

"Tarzan of the Apes," which had a successful two weeks' run at the Colonial, closed its engagement Sunday night, May 26, and will be shown at the Orpheum, at the regular admission prices there, from Tuesday, May 28, to Friday, May 31, inclusive.

Pathe Plans in Two Broadway Houses

Company Officials Elated Over Showing of "The Yellow Ticket" at Rialto and "More Trouble" at Rivoli.

PATHE dropped a bomb on Broadway last week with the announcement that two of the three biggest motion picture theaters in New York, the Rialto and Rivoli, would present Pathe feature photoplays for the week of May 26.

They are Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket," at the Rialto, and Frank Keenan, in More Trouble," at the Rivoli, marking the first time Pathe has figured as "the party of the first part" in such a deal, which is said to be the forerunner of important events in the film world of New York.

The rumor is considered well founded that other big things are pending between Pathe and all the big Broadway houses. The Rialto has put up a big paper showing on "The Yellow Ticket," further distributing two color booklets to all patrons during the past week, and "More Trouble" is looked upon as a novelty picture, S. L. Rothapfel having secured it despite the fact that the feature is scheduled for release in July.

"The Yellow Ticket" is the photoplay version of A. H. Woods' stage success of the same name by Michael Morton, in which Florence Reed, John Mason and John Barrymore played a long engagement at the Eltinge theater several seasons ago.

In the picture produced for Pathe by Astra, under the direction of William Parke, the cast includes Warner Oland, Milton Sills, Armand Kalisz, Leon Bary, Anna Lehr, Helene Chadwick, Nicholas Dunaew and J. H. Gilmour.

"More Trouble" is something entirely new, not only for Frank Keenan, but for the screen—a comedy-drama, almost a farce-comedy, in which there is not a single comedy character, in which every person is properly serious and in which the events that throw them together, following in rapid succession, create one laughable situation after another. It was produced for Pathe at the Paralta Studio in California, under the direction of Ernest C. Warde.

FAMOUS PLAYERS GET TOGETHER ON RED CROSS.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marshalled the forces of his organization in co-operation with the drive of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team for contributions to the Second Red Cross Fund. A meeting was held in the offices last week at which the four hundred employees were assembled, and Mr. Zukor made a plea for funds to further Red Cross work. He concluded his remarks with the statement that he would personally give $5,000. Arthur S. Friend, treasurer, made an appeal.

Marguerite Clark gave $1,000. John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity, who acted as master of ceremonies, advanced arguments in his brief talks presenting the speakers. Mr. Friend outlined a plan by which payment of contributions could be made in twelve monthly installments.

LUCAS VISITING NEW YORK.

Harry K. Lucas, of the Lucas Supply Company, Atlanta, has been a visitor in town the past week. He is on a vacation, but attending to a little business relating to his southern agency for the Simplex machine.

GEORGE STEVENSON IN FRANCE.

George Stevenson, long time with the Universal as a member of its publicity staff, who sailed recently from New York as a Y. M. C. A. worker, is reported as having safely arrived in France. Mr. Stevenson's duties will be in the line of his special experience, i. e., motion pictures and writing.

Filmusic Company Makes Its Bow

Los Angeles Concern Puts New Music Device on the Market —Demonstration at the Alhambra Theater to the Film Trade.

FILMUSIC COMPANY is the name of a Los Angeles concern which is exploiting a device for synchronizing music and pictures. This firm has been experimenting for several years. A demonstration was given to the Los Angeles trade at the Alhambra theater at 11 p. m. on May 15. The demonstration was held under the auspices of Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. De Mille, Thomas H. Ince, H. O. Davis, Robert Brunton, Reginald Barker and Raymond B. West. Over six hundred attended, including many stars and directors.

The performance opened with a prologue criticising music conditions in the majority of motion picture theaters in the United States, the claim being made that in the smaller theaters not enough attention was given to appropriate music. The Filmusic Company proposes to improve these conditions and has perfected its device in the music service so the operator may play a perfect music score to follow every shade of the picture. Complete scores are prepared for each production by the company's musical directors. There are two rolls of music to each reel. An electric synchronizing device has been invented by the company by which the machine operator automatically can regulate the picture and the music so the performance will synchronize. The company calls this synchronizing device a synchron-o-meter. The company won two gold medals at the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, in 1915.

The company has a factory on 1729 Highland avenue, Hollywood, where it makes its own rolls, and it is the only concern on the Pacific Coast to cut music rolls. The music score is produced on a masteroll similar to a motion picture negative and copies are made therefrom and sent with the picture to the theater owners, and can be played on any mechanical musical instrument, whether player piano, organ or photoplayer.

C. P. Bradshaw is the president and general manager of the company; F. H. Grannis is vice president; D. P. Simons, secretary and treasurer; W. A. Bishop, director of musical production, and W. W. Drum, sales and advertising manager.

The demonstration at the Alhambra theater was successful and the audience applauded the device.

Hart's Military Ball Is a Success.

The military ball given by William S. Hart, Artcraft star, at Hotel Coronado, May 11, in honor of the officers of the 159th California Infantry, "Bill Hart's Two-Gun Men," was a thorough success. Generals Tuthill, Strong, Young and Hall, with their wives; General Strong's staff and members of the British and French missions at Camp Kearny were in attendance in addition to the officers of Hart's regiment.

Hart took a carload of film stars from Los Angeles and from the time he landed in San Diego with his contingent of beauty and chivalry he owned the town. At the ball the grand march was led by Bill Hart and Mrs. Col. Farrell; Col. L. M. Farrell, commander of the 159th and Miss Katherine MacDonald, Hart's leading woman. Many film players were present.

Studios Subscribe $1,274,900 to Liberty Loan.

Chairman Charles Christie, in charge of the Studio Liberty Loan Campaign, announces that the grand total subscribed by the employes of Los Angeles motion picture studios for the Third Liberty Loan is $1,274,900. This amount does not include the hundreds and thousands of dollars raised by the stars from the exhibition tank in Central Park. The studio folks of Southern California have given more to the Liberty Loan than any other profession. Following is an itemized report showing the amount of Liberty Bonds purchased by each studio:

Lasky studio, $302,700; Fox, $141,700; Hart studio, $122,000; Universal, $102,400; Ince studio, $87,000; Triangle, $60,000; Pathe, $78,000; Paralta, $48,600; Vitagraph, $32,000; Mack Sennett studio, $48,000; National, $32,200; Chaplin studio, $52,000; Griffith, $40,000; Christie studio, $18,500; Lois Weber Company, $16,000; L-Ko, $11,000; Sunshine Comedies, $8,000; Metro, $39,000; King Bee, $3,600; Morosco, $27,000; George Beban Company, $5,200.

Samuel Goldfish on the Coast.

Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has arrived in Los Angeles. He was met at the station by a representative body of Los Angeles film folks, including J. A. Quinn, at whose Rialto theater Goldwyn pictures are receiving their local first-run exhibition.

Charlie Chaplin Is Back Again.

Charlie Chaplin is back again in Los Angeles. He arrived on the afternoon of May 12, after having sold bonds for the Third Liberty Loan. His tour, which started six weeks ago, included the Southern States, where he was a stranger in person.

At the time of his departure for the tour, Mr. Chaplin was not in the best of health. On returning to Los Angeles, however, he was in an improved condition.

On his tour, in which he personally "stumped" the South, Mr. Chaplin was not to be hindered by the irregularity of trains, and hence traveled considerably by automobile, sometimes covering as many as four and five towns in a day, making a speech in each.

Hayakawa Players Return from Japan.

Kamatsu Ori, Humri Ojato and Unjo Tamara, members of Sessue Hayakawa's company, sent to Japan to film native scenes for the initial Hayakawa production, are back in Los Angeles. They brought with them about four thousand feet of film taken in Tokio and Yokohama and in the beautiful Mount Fujiyama region.

The film, when exhibited in the projection theater at the studio, was greatly admired by Hayakawa, who said that excellent judgment had been used in the selection of the scenes, many of which will be incorporated in the present production. Others will be retained to be used in future creations of the company.

Triangle Studio Employes Doing Their "Bit."

With fifty former employes wearing blue and olive drab in Uncle Sam's service and more than $53,000 subscribers to the Third Liberty Loan, employes of the Triangle Film Corporation at Culver City are being congratulated on all sides on their patriotic showing, and with the girls of the playing forces using all their spare time to knit for the sailors and soldiers all are busy "doing their bit."

Colonel Bray Appointed Manager of Orpheum.

Colonel Charles Edward Bray, until recently assistant general manager of the Orpheum circuit of theaters, has been appointed resident manager of the Los Angeles Orpheum, succeeding Clarence Drown, former manager, who has been confined to his home by illness for the past six months. Mr. Drown will be retained in the personnel of the theater's organization, but will be assigned to other duties when his health permits.

Colonel Bray is an old connection with the Orpheum organization, having been the manager of the old theater at First and Main streets twenty-five years ago, when it was the second house of that name in the country. During his connection with the circuit he has held the positions of house manager, booking manager, press representative, European agent, superintendent of construction, auditor and assistant general manager.

Roscoe Arbuckle Takes a "Vacation."

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has been working his company so hard in the filming of "Good Night, Nurse," his latest comedy for Paramount release, that he decided they needed a rest or a change of scenery. Accordingly, the portly comedian and his supporting fun creators, Al St. John, Buster Keaton, Alice Lake and others have descended upon Arrowhead Hot Springs, which is just about the most famous health resort in Southern California.

Arbuckle immediately plunged into the finishing touches of "Good Night, Nurse." With the hundreds of healthseekers as "extras," the sanitarium and the mud baths for a background, Fatty Arbuckle promises to get considerable atmosphere for his picture.

Says Monkey Did Him $15,000 Damage.

Thomas G. Cockings May 16 filed suit in the Superior Court, through Attorney L. D. Collings, demanding that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company pay him damages for personal injuries to the extent of $15,000 because of an alleged attack made upon him by Joe Martin, an orang-outang owned by the film company. Cockings in his complain declares that he was attacked by the orang-outang on June 30 last while he was looking at the animals in the film company's zoo at Universal City and the large animal "bit, bruised and wounded" him severely before he could be subjugated.

Mary Pickford's Mother Ill.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, mother of the Artcraft star, is ill at the Sister's Hospital with a recurrence of the ear affection which made necessary an operation in Toronto on her recent trip east with her daughter during the Liberty Bond campaign.

Quinn Takes to Film Cutting.

J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto theater, has won such signal success in film editing that he is to be upon the advisory board of one of the largest film producing companies in the industry, having jurisdiction over the cutting of films and editing of the company's features.

Recently Mr. Quinn cut two reels out of a five-reel picture and, unlike most instances of this kind, the local manager of the exchange handling the feature agreed that it was materially improved and forwarded the film, as cut by Mr. Quinn, to the New York office of his company for their inspection.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Jean Hersholt, Triangle player, has been critically ill at the California Hospital in Los Angeles, where he recently underwent an operation for appendicitis. His case had reached such an advanced stage that the surgeons held out only a slight chance for his recovery. But Hersholt surprised them by his remarkable vitality, and his condition is now showing such improvement that the surgeons hold out strong hopes for him.

Julian Johnson has resigned as scenario editor of the Triangle Film Corporation and will leave Los Angeles June 1 to resume the editorship of Photoplay Magazine.

Miss Clayton in Cohan Support

MARGARET CLAYTON, the beautiful leading woman of the screen and stage, will be seen in the chief feminine role of George M. Cohan's Artcraft vehicle, "Hit the Trail Holliday," released the middle of June. The Cohan picture affords Miss Clayton a splendid opportunity to assert her talent and charm in the part of Edith Jason, the hotelkeeper's daughter, who wins the ex-bartender over to the prohibition cause. According to advance reports, Miss Clayton makes an ideal lead for the famous Yankee Doodle Boy. This is the first time that she has appeared in an Artcraft picture, although she has had wide experience in motion pictures covering a period of some six years, four of which she acted in important portrayals for Essanay, one with Paralta and the balance in special engagements. Among the films in which she met with particular favor are "The Great Divide," "Inside the Lines," "Prince of Graustark," "The Night Worker," with Taylor Holmes in "Two Bit Seats" and the "Is Marriage Sacred" series. Prior to her appearance on the screen Miss Clayton played in stock for three years in Salt Lake City, where she gained valuable training for the demands of the photoplay. As a result of her splendid work in "Hit the Trail Holliday" it is predicted that she will increase to a great extent her following among motion picture patrons.

Margaret Clayton.

"Hit the Trail Holliday" is one of the last films in which the late Russell Bassett appeared and also presents one of his finest characterizations in the role of Burr Jason, the father of Edith, played by Miss Clayton. Others in the supporting cast are Robert Broderick, Pat O'Malley, Richard Barthelmess and William Walcott. Marshall Neilan, the youthful master of film production, is the director of the new Cohan subject and John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for the script.

TRIANGLE WINS COPYRIGHT SUIT.

A suit brought by the executors of the estate of Richard Harding Davis for an injunction against the exhibition of "The Americano" has terminated favorably to Triangle. The suit was based on the claim that the novel "The White Mice" was copyrighted and that the Triangle Film Corporation, Triangle Distributing Corporation and others were infringing the copyright by the exhibition of "The Americano." The Triangle Film Corporation by its counsel, Walter N. Seligsberg, applied to the court to dismiss the case on the ground that the copyright was invalid. As a result the plaintiffs applied for a leave to discontinue the case, and this leave was granted.

State Rights Still Strong

"Gentleman from Tennessee" Says Business Gets Better With His Company—Winstock Backs Him Up.

Knoxville, Tenn., April 29, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World,

New York City.

Dear Sir: If you will allow me the space in your very valuable paper again I would like to say a few words which may help to show some few kickers that the state rights business has not gone to the "dumps" as bad as they state that it has.

Some weeks ago when "The Gentleman from Tennessee," as he has been referred to in your paper, wrote the article regarding the prolonged publicity for state rights productions he had my entire and most hearty endorsement. Why? Because I know that he is right in what he says, and, second, because he has been making some tests which I have personally been interested in; thirdly, because he is my partner in the state rights business.

We will admit that Mr. Rosenthal is right in his letter regarding programs being too cheap, and we will admit that independent manufacturers must do more to help put their productions over to exhibitors, and again we will admit, according to Mr. Kunsky, that there are a lot of "Pikers" in the independent game. Then again Mr. Sawyer, of the General Enterprise Company, is pessimistic, and states that exchanges should be able to handle at least eight productions each year.

Take all this into consideration; separate the facts from the near-facts, and it simmers down to this bare fact alone: There are not so many more fly-by-night exchangemen as there are fly-by-night independent producers. The trouble as I see it lies in the fact that a concern will organize to produce a feature and they will get probably a decent star and not a decent photographer, or they will get a good photographer and not get a good director. The success of any production lies not so much in the star, but in the director, photographer and story, and if they have a decent star they will have a good production as sure as fate.

Also I beg to differ from Epes Winthrop Sargent in his statement regarding names of photoplays. The name does count in the estimation of a good picture with the majority of picture-goers; then if the picture is not good they, of course, are disappointed. One of the foremost productions of the year, which stars one of our best actresses, did not get as much money in nine-tenths of the southern states as it would had they given it another name. I asked a well educated exhibitor the other day what he though of the said picture in question and its name. He said if they had not told him what it was he would have thought it was the name of an island or something. Just remember that all the exhibitors are not geniuses or Rothapfels and are not in a position to put over a production like their New York brothers.

In another paragraph Mr. Sargent says that this exhibitor can pick up enough stuff from the state rights market to meet his needs. I will admit that there is much "stuff," as he calls it, in the state rights market, but in proportion to the number of pictures produced there is not as much of this so-called "stuff" as in the programs.

The state rights game has not gone to the dickens as some few think, but to my company it gets better. Why? Simply because we buy only pictures of merit and pictures that we see personally. There must be a bad production with every company once in a great while, but there is absolutely no need for any company to produce a weak picture these days more often than every two or three months, and the state rights producer, knowing that he is gambling to a certain extent, should absolutely know when his feature leaves the assembling room that it will be a money-maker. If he doesn't know then he is not fit to be a producer, and he is not a reader of human emotions or a fair judge of what the public wants. I know the public is a fickle thing, but human nature is about the same everywhere, and I, of course, know that times are ever changing.

A feature based on a certain thing may be good now and die three months later; but a drama of merit, that has the director, photographer and a decent star, with a story that's good, will not die three months or a year from now.

I also noticed in a trade paper this week a letter from one exhibitor, who states that the William S. Hart re-issues are merely junk. I had a Mutual film exchange manager in to see a Hart re-issue—"The Bandit and the Preacher"—which was formerly a Mutual production, and he states that it was the best one Hart ever made, and the scenes were the same as the original only that the titles were much better. All over our territory exhibitors are praising the Hart re-issues, and I think this exhibitor is wrong when he calls them junk, for are they are not a William S. Hart production the same as his Artcraft features?

Our company has a list of features that have proven good, but we bought them only after we had seen them. And if producers will make pictures that have merit they will sell, and I know that we would be willing to pay our pro rata share of a page ad in each trade journal each week for three months on every production that we buy, thus keeping that feature before the eyes of exhibitors everywhere.

The North and West has every reason to be in just as good condition and better than the South, and I know we are not yelling hard times. We are satisfied with a reasonable amount of profit on each production, and we have exhibitors satisfied with our methods excepting a few kicks that will come into every exchange. There is only one way. Remember that honesty is the best policy. Treat the exhibitor fairly and give him a reasonably good production; show him that you don't want it all, and you will be doing business right in the same old stand.

Respectfully,
"NAT" L. ROYSTER,
Sales Manager, Special Features Co.,
Knoxville, Tenn.

"Not Shot to Pieces"

Winstock of Seattle Says That State Rights Business is Good—Better and Fewer Productions Needed.

"EVERY once and so often," said Melvin G. Winstock of Seattle (of the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions), "some chap who has made a bad buy breaks into print with the statement that the state rights business is all shot to pieces. We in the Northwest admit no such thing. The contrary is true.

"There was never a time when good material was in greater demand or prices better for productions of real box office merit. Certain it is that those who have been misled by exaggerated advertising to buy overpraised stuff at exorbitant prices lose money, but that's the chance we all take in this industry, and the man who kicks is usually a cheap cry baby anyway and doesn't count in the final analysis.

"The point you make in your issue of March 30 is vital. The producer or seller lacks efficiency in the aid he gives to the buyer in putting over product. His aim in the past has been to sell and get the coin without regard to whether or not the buyer makes good. There is one notable exception to this iron-clad experience of the past and that is Frank Seng with his "Parentage." Here is the one bright shining example of a greater service rendered after sale than before.

"What we need in our field is fewer and better productions, reasonable prices, equitable contracts, truthful advertising and efficient co-operation in putting over. I have seen photographs, paper and publicity material so lacking in punch as to represent a completely wasted investment; whereas all of these should be distinctive and of affirmative and efficient help.

"Another thing producers are doing that is a positive detriment all around. All kinds of publications are printing articles and in many instances illustrating the methods and secrets of the industry, showing the mechanical nature of the big thrills, exposing the making of trick photography, and in a thousand ways tearing aside that veil of mystery which should always be between the footlights, the stage line and the public. The public is getting to know too much, and when curiosity ceases we will have lost a big asset.

"But getting back to the main theme, don't let anybody tell you that any legitimate state rights firms are going out of business.

"I would like also to say that we will welcome any move that will induce the producer or seller of independent features to keep his product exploited in the trade journals. Ordinarily he makes enough profit to do that much for his customer. But if he wants to lay it on a little thicker we will be game enough to stand a part even of that added burden, for we think it will pay in the long run."

CITY LETS DOWN BARS FOR GERARD FILM.

A unique tribute has been paid to the patriotic value of "My Four Years in Germany" by the city of New Bedford, Mass. For some time the law against Sunday showings has been strictly enforced in the New England town, but after the Mayor and the members of the City Council had witnessed a screening of the Gerard picture they issued a special permit for its exhibition at Gordon's Olympia on any and all forthcoming Sundays that the management of the theater might desire to show it.

Everybody Reads the Moving Picture World Down Here

FRED HANCOCK has been drafted! Down in that part of our country where folks wrap themselves in their mittens and earmuffs when it's seventy-five above, are able to tolerate the chill of ninety above and are fairly comfortable at one hundred in the shade, Fred has been owner, manager and operator of the Lyric theater. The other day your good, old Uncle Sam extended a tenacle and took him away from the folks at Stuart, Fla. Now we are wondering who will be the first one to read Fred's copy of the Moving Picture World, for be it known the "World" is an institution in Stuart. On the morning of its arrival a perfectly good citizen will chew the end off his cigar until that copy in the course of its travels reaches him and when he has absorbed everything contained within its covers passes it on to the one next entitled to receive it. Thus the shoe store man, the bait and tackle dealer, the dry goods man, the ice man, the restaurant keeper, the editor of the local newspaper, etc., are enabled to read and discuss the current pictures with the same intelligence of their brothers in the large cities of the north. By the time the "World" has been perused by the townsmen its pristine beauty has fled like the morning dew before the mid-day sun, leaving nothing but a tattered and torn something resembling a wreck. D. E. Wynne, one of the town's leading citizens, is particularly distinguished by virtue of the fact that he is the recipient of a personal copy of the Moving Picture World. The population of Stuart, a pretty little town some thirty miles north of Palm Beach is not large. It is the idling place of the Northerner who packs his bathing and fishing suits in his old kit bag and beats it to the land of palms when the thermometer begins to do a "Brodie," and during the winter months with the increased population Fred Hancock collects the "jitneys" like a mahogany piano collects dust. With the advent of spring, however, the winter visitors return north and the town settles down to its local routine. But all-year-round residents must have their pictures. So it is that on Wednesday and Saturday nights the townspeople lock up the house and take the children and the dog to the movies. You exhibitors who complain that you've had a bad day if you do not play to two thousand cease your carping. We've seen Fred perfectly happy operating his machine with twelve grown-ups, four children and six dogs in the entire house. Fred Hancock doesn't charge admission for dogs. They are free to saunter in and out at will. We've seen and heard three long-tailed dogs simultaneously beat an excited tattoo on the floor with the extreme ends of their vertebrae watching Bill Desmond streak down four flights of stairs and land on the villain's back. The pictures are not accompanied with music at the Lyric theater. No, there is no music—but I have visited numerous other theaters in this land of ours where there was no music, although it could clearly be seen that six or seven husky gentlemen in the orchestra pit were trying to manufacture something on their respective instruments. But down in the Lyric theater the only sound to be heard is the click of the projecting machine in the rear above you with interpolations by the tail beat of an Irish setter. But you enjoy the picture just the same—everyone does—I did. This unimposing little frame theater is a bright spot. Perhaps no gorgeous door man looking like the Mahwah of Pujah receives your ticket and though no exquisite bit of femininity accepts your "jits" and granting that you enter no marble or mosaic tinted lobby, Fred Hancock can boast of as many distinguished patrons as the manager of the most ostentatious theater on Broadway. Noted authors, artists, actors and financiers have been glad to lay down the price of admission at his ticket window. Men whose names have been associated with the most colossal enterprises in America have sat in the blue depths of Fred Hancock's theater where through the open ventilators high by the roof the moon projects a shaft of light as though in competition with man's mechanism in the booth. But Fred has been drafted. However, he'll still read the "World," and the Lyric theater will continue to entertain its patrons until Fred comes home again.

DRAFT CALLS MORE SELECT WORKERS.

The various offices of Select Pictures Corporation continue to give their quota to the Army. Among the Select workers who have recently joined the colors are Earl Kerr, of the office force, in the Chicago branch, and M. Monsky, a road salesman from the same branch. Although he had been affiliated with Select only a short time, Mr. Monsky had earned a high place for himself in the organization through his efficiency.

SCORE one for Metro in securing Bert Lytell, if his initial picture is any criterion, for he is a handsome chap, takes a close-up well and is a dandy lover. "The Trail to Yesterday" is the title and a good one. It is a western play, full of pep and good riding by all. Anna Nilsson is a dainty heroine and Ernest Maupin was some villain, deserving all he got. Harry Northrop was a close second as the bad man, but I thought the best work was done by the old man, whose name I forget. It was artistic and quite original in the working out. He injected a bit of humor which was refreshing in its novelty. One unnecessary episode—the awful long snake which closed many eyes in front. It was there to frighten the horse bearing the heroine and caused the runaway, but a big sheet of white paper would have had the same effect on such a nervous animal. Do cut out the hideous things—the vilest that crawl! Metro seems to delight in planting the creatures which offend most patrons.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are going to New York following the run of "Keep Her Smiling," at the Wilbur theater. New York and other cities will see this remarkable comedy next season. Meantime Mrs. Drew is looking over new scenarios, and they will produce a number of screen plays during the summer. Mrs. Drew and her leading woman, Maidel Turner, the handsome Texas actress, were guests of the founder and historian of the Professional Women's Club on May 14 at the club luncheon at the Copley-Plaza, and were the center of attraction. Their hostess is also founder of the Film Club of Boston.

We are anticipating "Inside the Lines," on here for a long run at the Copley theater last winter, with Leon Gordon, who has been on the screen. Lewis Stone ought to be great in the double role; besides the play was written by our own Earl Derr Biggers, author of so many stage successes.

"Cecilia of the Pink Roses" sounds good when we read of the cast: Marion Davies, George Le Guere and others, to say nothing of Julius Steger, who is making it.

"The Lie," another gem for Elsie Ferguson, the dependable, and this time with David Powell, who drifts about a good deal of late. In this picture are some wonderful snow scenes, with hunters and hounds in action. And doesn't Powell ride well? Percy Marmont as Nol Dibdin was unusually good as the innocent slanderer of the heroine. He redeemed himself and really became the hero. Betty Howe, too, was clever. In fact, the entire cast played up to Miss Ferguson, and that's saying much! The ending is not quite to the liking of the average playgoer, but it was refreshingly new, and we felt glad that Nol was rewarded for his atonement. Fine actor that man!

"Hearts of the World" rightly running to full houses and giving the Hub a genuine treat. Nothing new can be said on the merits of this offering. One blasé critic comes out with encomiums of praise after sneering at motion pictures, in general showing absolute ignorance of the merits of this art in pantomime, or a mind too blasé to grasp its importance. Well, millions go daily to the picture houses and the industry is endorsed and commended by our President, so who cares for the unappreciative. I wonder if you noticed in this wonder picture a lapse in connection with the flag. The girl gives the boy a photograph case with her picture and one of the flag, which, without excuse, is placed upside down, and we get this twice. Why has this bit of business not been heretofore mentioned and the error rectified?

"Mrs. Slacker" is a good play for little Hulette and Creighton Hale, a popular lead. Here we get the coward with the alleged family trait inherited from mother, as in some other pictures seen. Hale played it mighty well, developing from the cad to a real man in the face of danger. Walter Hiers, as usual, got the laughs; but there was too much kid stuff like what we have seen; no really new situations. Of course the purpose of the play is to inspire patriotism, and it certainly goes over with punch along this line—a good picture for small cities.

Mae Marsh has a splendid vehicle in "The Face in the Dark," a play of some mystery and surprise, and in line with the Goldwyn offerings. Alec B. Francis does excellent work, and completely fooled us in front as to his real part in the burglary. There is a real story here; the sequence well preserved to the very end.

"The Trap" is saved by the acting of Alice Brady in one of her World pictures, and has one or two good situations. It nowhere offends intelligence, and we rather liked that cowboy Cooksey; also the studio scene between the vampire and heroine, as it was a bit new.

"The Life Mask" is a great picture for Petrova's special gifts and personality, vividly shown in all her latest pictures, which are also notable as to photography. I had not seen Wyndham Standing do anything so villainous as his part required, recalling his fine work in "The Bugle Call" and "A Rose of the World," but he played it to the limit and the artist all through. Mrs. L. Case Russell has given us her best work. The plot is distinctly original, the outcome never hinted at, and we were glad of the mystery injected through the introductory titles. Bets were made in my party, but not one of us suspected Lucille La Verne, who played the companion. All here know her well for her clever acting in Gillette's play, "Clarice," in which she played a mammy servant, creating the title role. Marie Doro was in it too. Why does not some producer or scenarioist get busy on this play and a producer put the three in it, they being screen players? In this picture were some gambling scenes, but the outdoor ones got us strong. Thomas Holding in military togs was good to look at, especially when "holding" the star. He is some lover! Why the ghastly mask in the title? And what had this to do with the play anyhow?

Let me commend "The Mad Lover," a Pathe picture, featuring Robert Warwick (in, if I mistake not, his first appearance with this firm) and Elaine Hammerstein, playing together in fine style. A clever picture with private theatricals, showing a play within a play and and Othello at that!

It so happened that hubby was intensely jealous, and over a cad of a chap, who played the part of Iago rather too realistically at the rehearsal and precipitated things. The house was fooled somewhat by the working out of too much realism in the killing scene, the young hostess being made to appear lifeless. However, it proved only a dream of the host, and the awakening was a relief for him and the fans. There was an amusing scene when he collars the aforesaid cad, puts him on a wheelbarrow and ducks him in the pond. The outdoor scenes, of much beauty, are a credit to the photographer. Well, "Bob" is with Pershing now and we will not get another new picture for a while.

"The Purple Lily"—absurd title, with no bearing on the play, which was a good one for Kitty Gordon's talents. Here we get Charles Wellesley again. He played Bradley, an unscrupuluos capitalist, the other leading man being none other than the clever son of the late Frank Mayo, playing a somewhat weak character, with which he struggled against many inconsistencies. The men liked the rough-neck stuff in the barroom, but they might give such a company a better vehicle.

For a short subject commend me to "The Spirit of the Red Cross," a drama by James Montgomery Flagg, who has developed considerable versatility. Here we get a patriotic twist and Red Cross appeal. Indeed, Paramount has put this out for that very object, backed by the Red Cross, the work of which in the war is clearly illustrated.

Interesting Educationals

Two Military Subjects, One Industrial, Two Travel, One Hunting and One Forestry.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Britain's Bulwarks" (Pathe).

THIS series of pictures is valuable in a historical sense and tremendously interesting at the present time. The third number gives many scenes taken during the British campaign in Turkey in Asia. The military base at Basra is pictured, the movement of troops up the Tigris River, trench scenes on Sinai Desert and Arabian fete scenes are shown. The care and movement of wounded English and Indian troops is also shown.

"Guns of Our Forefathers" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting and timely subject appearing in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 121 reviews the various kinds of guns that have been made in America and used by American soldiers since the days of Paul Revere and the flintlock. The picture includes also the most modern of America's arms, which are now being used against the Germans in France.

"Farming for Alligators" (Paramount-Bray).

A southern California alligator farm is shown in the 121st release of Pictograph. Here a goodly crop of these animals are raised each year for the sake of their valuable hides, and are given as a range vast tracts of swamp and river. Their habits and their manner of rearing their young are shown in the picture, which is intensely interesting.

"Some Beauty Spots of the Eastern States" (General Film).

The Rivoli theater included in its program for the week of May 12 a series of views which exploit some of the scenic beauties of the east. Among these are the Raymondskill Falls, Digman's Falls, Bushkill Falls and the switchback leading up the side of Mount Pisgah to a height of 2,000 feet. From this spot a railroad can be seen winding through the hills, and finally we are given a view of Bear Mountain.

"In Southernmost Russia" (Pathe).

A pictorial subject, showing many scenes taken on the peninsula of Crimea, in and about Sebastopol. Russians, Turks, Bulgars and people of other nationalities are seen mingling freely, the subject being taken previous to the war. A Russian church, a market place, ruins of former Mohammedan settlements, monuments, arches and other features of interest are included.

"On the Trail of the Sea Cow" (Universal).

The seventy-third issue of the Screen Magazine contains an interesting study of the sea cow, or manati. The curious human-like habit of lying with head and shoulders out of the water is drawn attention to and illustrated in the picture. These ponderous aquatic animals are found in tropical waters, particularly in the Gulf of Mexico, and are prized for their flesh, which tastes similar to beef. In the capture of a sea cow shown in the picture is a fine close-up of the head, showing the peculiar eyelid contrivance with which its nostrils have been provided by nature for the purpose of shutting off the water when it goes below to dine on the vegetation of the sea bottom.

"Planting for the Future Generations" (Universal).

A carefully detailed illustration of how Uncle Sam replenishes the country's natural supply of timber is shown in the Screen Magazine No. 75. Here we are shown the gathering of the seed, much of which is taken from the stores of the squirrel; the sowing of the seed; the transplanting of the seedlings, and the final setting out of the trees in the places where they are intended to attain maturity.

Southern Exhibitors Win Praise

Use Unusual Discrimination in Selection of Programs in Cities Adjacent to Cantonments.

ORRIN G. COCKS, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, who has been making a survey of recreation conditions in a number of cities of the South for the Playground and Recreation Association of America, has just returned to New York. He sees a liberalizing tendency in the South regarding the opening of motion picture theaters on Sunday afternoons, due to the pressure of military needs. He visited Wilmington, Greenville and Charlotte, N. C.; Columbia, Charleston and Spartanburg, S. C.; Augusta, Atlanta and Macon and Jacksonville.

"All of these cities," says Mr. Cocks, "have a strong feeling about preserving the sanctity of Sunday and the closing of commercial entertainments on that day. In view of the fact, however, that the church has not made good in solving the problem of the Sunday activities of the soldiers in neighboring cantonments the pressure of events is tending toward the recognition of the need of some form of commercial entertainment on Sunday afternoons. In Chattanooga the ministers have not objected to the use of pictures on Sunday, and the citizens feel that the community atmosphere has been improved as a result.

"The entertainments have not interfered with the church services. The influence on the non-church group has been found to be decidedly wholesome. In Atlanta the ministers have agreed not to oppose motion pictures in the city auditorium on Sunday afternoons if no admission charge is required. Some fine motion pictures are now being shown in Charleston. In all the towns mentioned the exhibitors have been peculiarly alive to the needs of their cities and have exercised discernment in the selection of pictures. In this way they have won the respect of their communities. This will have a marked relationship upon the further use of pictures for the soldiers on Sunday afternoons. A characteristic of the motion picture exhibitions in the southern cities is that one man usually controls practically all the shows in a given community."

Educational's Current Releases

Collection Containing Both Information and Amusement Presented to Public.

SOME of the more recent of the Educational Film Company of America's releases, contained in the following résumé, are of more than ordinary interest. Professor Ditmars, in the three split-reelers of April 22, May 6 and May 20, deals with "Wild Goats and Sheep," "Wild Babies" and "The Friendly Bee." In the last named the professor shows that the honey bee of commerce is not necessarily a stinger, but that its friendship can be successfully cultivated. The heroines of the little story are two young girls, who enter a bee village and perform with the bees feats of a marvelous character. The other two Ditmars' pictures are sufficiently indicated by their titles, "Wild Babies" being specially notable for some funny views of baby porcupines, and also of the mother Aoudad teaching its young to climb.

Following "What the Ice Age Left" Robert C. Bruce is represented on May 15 and 29 by the two parts of "The Silent Wonderlands of the West," and on May 22 by "Following the Course of the Cayuse."

Outing-Chester at Strand

"A Mountaineering Memory," Third of Excellent Outdoor Series, Pleases Audience.

ONE of the most delightful of the recent outdoor film series is the Outing-Chester, already reviewed in these columns. During the past three weeks these pictures have been running at the Strand theater, New York, and have been much appreciated.

The third of this series, "A Mountaineering Memory," appearing on the program the week of May 12, is one of the best of the series, and covers mountain climbing in the Canadian Rockies, the feature of the picture being the ascent of Mount Assinaboine. This mountain is almost inaccessible, and the view of the neighboring peaks from its summit is truly inspiring. The gathering storm, with the gale attaining considerable fury, forms one of the closing and most interesting sights of the picture.

Rivoli Pictorial at Its Best

Wealth of Interesting Material Presented Includes Fox Farming, Alaskan Huskies in the Alps, and the Manufacture of Rubber Tires.

THE Rivoli Animated Pictorial for the week of May 12 seemed to have reached the top notch of excellence, so much of interest did it hold. At a guess we would say that it contained considerably more footage than usual, and as a compliment to the management we would add that it held the attention of the audience from first to last.

Variously important and attractive scenes and events bore down upon us to the exhilarating accompaniment of the orchestra. Among these scenes appeared teams of Alaskan huskies doing war duty in the Alps, which also included close-ups of individual favorites, who barked their appreciation cameraward. Fox farming at East Northport, L. I. (General Film Company), was also given the "once over," and, at length, as was also the making of rubber tires and tubes (a film loaned by the Ford Motor Company). Then there were glimpses at the sheep-raising industry, and also inspiring views of the West Point cadets in review, with the famous "Blue Devils" as audience. These are only a few of the splendid items presented in this particular pictorial.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

M. S. Epstein announces the sale of the following rights on "Depths of the Sea": To Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, for New England states; to General Film Company, for New York State; to Celebrated Players' Film Company, Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana; to Tom Moore, Washington, for Delaware, Maryland, and District of Columbia; to Peerless Feature Film Company, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

Subjects appearing in the seventy-fourth release of the Universal Screen Magazine, which will be released June 7, are: "Transplanting Nuremburg," "Our Engineers Win Renown Over There," "Educated Seals" and "Learn to Save Life." The latter deals with the rescue of drowning persons.

More Shows for Children in Canada

Exhibitors Find Youthful Patron a Valuable Help and a Born Press Agent for Good Shows.

IT has become quite the vogue among Canadian exhibitors to conduct children's matinee performances. The idea, in fact, has gained considerable ground during the past two months, and the youthful patrons have responded in an encouraging manner. The plan of children's matinees has been developed to a high degree by several managers in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg. In some instances appropriate features are exhibited at the children's performances ahead of the regular booking date for the theater, and in this way the stunt works out as an advertising method to a considerable extent. The general development has been such that it can be truthfully said that a number of Canadian exhibitors are actually catering to the children at last.

Manager Conover of the Imperial theater, Montreal, has been booking special pictures for the one weekly performance for the juveniles. In several instances he has presented a feature which he has released as a regular attraction on subsequent dates. Each of the children become an enthusiastic advance agent for the picture. Children will talk. Manager Conover also presents Judge Brown stories, features with a particular appeal to children, comedies, news weeklies and cartoons for the special programs. Pictures featuring the Fox Kiddies, "The Blue Bird," "Huck and Tom," "The Seven Swans" and kindred releases have been shown with success.

In Toronto Ben Cronk, of the Allen theater, instituted a newspaper coupon plan for the popularization of children's Saturday morning shows, as noted in this column a few weeks ago. The admissions cost the children nothing. This plan was adopted because it was felt that the advertising secured was worth while. On such occasions the theater has been filled twice during a morning. The Temple theater, Hamilton, Ontario, also has taken up the same stunt; while the Regent theater, Toronto, has held special morning shows on different occasions when the attraction has attracted children. At Massey Hall, Toronto, children's matinees have been held for special features, such as "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and the big auditorium has been filled at such times by the youngsters.

Not many Toronto theaters hold matinee performances daily, but Saturday afternoon shows, with special prices for the children, have become quite the rule. A suburban exhibitor who provides special children's pictures for Saturday afternoons is Manager Sexton of the Family theater, Queen street east and Lee avenue. The Vermont theater, Bathurst and Dupont streets, gives Saturday matinees, the admission for which is only five cents, and other houses make the same charge. After-school matinees are given at some Toronto theaters on odd days. The Revue theater, 390 Roncesvalles avenue, for instance, held an after-school matinee on Monday, May 20, for a presentation of "The Blue Bird."

Special morning matiness are advertised quite frequently by several Winnipeg theaters, and these are held when special attractions are being presented in the larger downtown houses. An interesting feature of the Winnipeg situation is that Jules L. Steele, moving picture editor of the Winnipeg Telegram, regularly publishes a list of attractions which he believes are suitable for the children. The variety of these selected pictures is wide and range from comedy features and war dramas to historical and costume photoplays.

In Calgary, Alberta, Manager Cloakey of the Allen theater frequently pulls off an advertising stunt which consists of the renting of one or two sightseeing cars, in which children are invited to have a free ride. On the sides of these cars are fastened streamers, advertising a coming attraction. The children supply the noise to attract notice of course and in return the youthful joy-riders are given tickets for children's performances.

It is noteworthy that the increase in the plan to hold special shows for children in Canadian theaters comes at a time when there is an increased tendency on the part of preachers and moral dictators to condemn moving pictures as an aid to evil. The question arises as to whether the exhibitors should not take concerted action to encourage the patronage of children at extra performances where suitable pictures are shown or not—just to emphasize the place of the moving picture in the life of childhood.

The Toronto authorities have been active of late against exhibitors who, they claimed, permitted the admission of unaccompanied children to regular performances. This has led some exhibitors to raise the admission prices for children to keep out the youngsters unless they come with their parents. This sort of a barrier is perhaps negative in value to a greater extent than the exhibitors realize, because it is the children who frequently lead the grown-ups to the neighborhood house. Each child patron undeniably stands as a living advertisement for a theater, and the more child patronage, within legal limitations, the more advertising a theater obtains.

Archbishop Pushes Guardian Law

Montreal Prelate Appeals to Police Chief, Who in Turn Bars Unaccompanied Children from Theaters.

FOLLOWING the receipt of a communication from Archbishop Bruchesi of Montreal instructions were issued by the Montreal Administrative Commission to Police Chief Campeau to enforce the law with regard to the admission of children to moving picture theaters unless accompanied by adult parents or guardians. The Quebec law prohibits the admission of unaccompanied minors under fifteen years of age. Chief Campeau was notified to warn all local exhibitors before taking action and after the warning to see that the letter of the law was obeyed.

Archbishop Bruchesi's letter to the Montreal authorities is interesting. He declared that the law was not being observed in the slightest and that it seemed to be forgotten entirely. He had received complaints from various sources regarding the admission of children to the theaters, and the children frequently passed hours in the amusement houses, especially during vacations, during which time they watched "scenes of theft, quarrels, libertinage, which can only excite or awaken bad passions in their young hearts."

No doubt, he added, the board of censors exists, and the board is a safeguard for public morals, for which credit was due the civic authorities; but this board could not prohibit everything, and among the views it permits or tolerates there were not many suitable for children.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Good and Bad Advertising.

WRITING not altogether without heat, an exhibitor takes issue with us as to comment made upon a recent advertisement he ran. This advertisement made the common mistake of overloading the space, and we said so. Rises the exhibitor to remark:

> This theater has a seating capacity of 2,100, and we play to only 30,000 a week from Monday to Saturday. The reason we don't have better ads is that we play to capacity practically all the time during the hours we are open, and if we had better ads we would have to open the house mornings.

This probably takes some of the soreness out of his system, but why not have better advertisements, capacity all the time and a turnaway? Nothing advertises a house like a turnaway. If you make more people want to come than can be accommodated, then you will never lack an audience in case some of the regulars drop out. Good advertising costs no more than poor work, though more thought is required. Evidently this house can run without much advertising of any sort, so far as the regulars are concerned. They know that they can see the sort of show they like at the house, and they go there. They go because it is a certain house and not because of the particular attraction offered. The patron may glance over the list in the Sunday paper, but the chances are that he has already been sold by his preference for the house and his knowledge of the bill gleaned from the underline on the previous week's program. In such a case it would seem that any perfunctory advertisement would suffice, since apparently no advertising is needed at all and space is taken merely because the other houses take space. But it is precisely this self-advertised type of house which most actually needs attractive advertising to increase its clientele. Eventually some of those who go to make up the 30,000 weekly audience will die or move or get drafted, and others must be found to take their places. It can best be done by making them want to get into the house now and making it difficult for them to do so by reason of the crowds ahead of them. It does not always follow that advertising is good merely in spite of the advertising. If your business is good without advertising and you can make it better by intelligent advertising why not advertise intelligently and get that better business?

Now It's Blotters.

The Parkway, Baltimore, has changed from the tiny cards lately used to blotters carrying four weeks. It is along the same lines as the cards and shows the same neatness of display. The blotters are eight inches by three with a fine green border, rule work in brown and text in purple, three printings. We particularly like the underline which announces as the house policy that particular attention is given to presenting entertainment of "a light, artistic and amusing nature to drive dull care away." That line, we think, will appeal to a great many people who are tired of pseudo patriotism. Have your screen entertainment truly entertaining and then you will have room for Liberty Loan and War Stamp arguments, but don't get the idea that it is patriotic to show a depressing picture merely because some director has said that it is a patriotic subject.

Mr. Lovett Explains.

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal, Providence, R. I., explains some of the advertising commented upon in the issue of March 30. There we spoke of the use of the full program for the week in the Sunday issue instead of concentrating upon the first attraction and merely underlining the others. We also said we could not tell much about the effectiveness of the display from a clipped advertisement, since it did not show the opposition. Mr. Lovett writes rather fully, but we think his letter will interest managers of neighborhood theaters:

> Enclosed you will find a few samples of my recent advertising.
> You will note that my ad is the only one on the page instead of being placed with the other theater advertising. In your recent criticism in The Moving Picture World you were under the impression that my ad was in with the other theaters, and I made the mistake by not sending you the papers, so I will try and explain my method of displaying my shows.
> This theater is situated two miles away from all others in Providence and is the only theater in this location which is a mill section. It is called Olneyville and it is about the same relation that the Bronx is to New York. The Providence Journal and all other papers have a special page with each issue that is devoted to Olneyville news, and that is the page that I use because that is the one that my patrons are interested in, and not the downtown section.
> I have the advantage of the other theaters in this way—my ad appears in the first section of the paper, which is usually the first section that is read by the layman, while the other theaters are combined upon two pages in the dramatic section, being all together, and which is usually jammed with all kinds of displays.
> I have a drawing made of what I think is the best bet of the week. The rest of the show for the entire week is filled in with type. My reason for advertising the entire show on Sunday is that the cost of the space that I use would be enormous and too much for me to stand if I used the space three times a week. Besides it makes a big flash, being alone on the page, in addition to a cut from another feature different from the ad cut and also a large writeup.
> On Sunday I use 210 lines, and sometimes 250, for the whole week's show, and on Tuesday evening I use 50 lines for the Wednesday and Thursday show in addition to a writeup, and on Thursday evening I use 50 lines for the Friday and Saturday show.
> My patrons are used to looking for the Sunday display; that is, I think that they are, and so arranging their plans for the week—say, for instance, I play a certain star on Monday and Tuesday of next week and any one of my patrons who wants to see this picture will ten times to one cancel a previous engagement and come to the theater because by reading the Sunday display of the entire week's show they will arrange their plans different. Of course this is only my idea; I may be wrong; but I know in my own case I would do the same thing.
> Another advantage that I think that I have is that I am a second-run theater, being one of the very few in Providence, and I have my patrons educated to the fact that in the near future they will be able to see the biggest pictures that play the first-run houses for big money at this theater at our small price, which is ten cents including war tax.
> I want to thank you for your valuable information that you were so kind to give me through the World, and I trust that in the near future that you may be able to give me more.

Personally we still think that it would be better in the Sunday issue to concentrate upon the first attraction for the week, merely underlining the second and third changes, but Mr. Lovett seems to find it different, and he is on the ground. As a general proposition we think that it is best to advertise one attraction at a time and advertise it so strongly that business is made. Then later in the week get after the other attractions, though there is no reason why the Sunday announcement should not give an underline for the week. In the matter of position, Mr. Lovett has what might be designated as a cinch. He is on a page away from the other houses with no heavy advertising to fight, so he dominates the page. He gets in each Sunday issue a cut about equal in area to his advertisement, and a reading notice in addition. The cut of the half-page shows all three of his displays; the press notice being between the cut and the advertisement, as indicated. The only other advertisement on the page is a trade two-fours at the bottom. Where Mr. Lovett has things so much to himself we think that he would do as well, if not better, with a plain type display, no matter what the downtown houses may employ. Using a drawn design for the signature only will get just as much attention as a full-drawn design each week, and it is but seldom that the artist gets a design that hooks up in the mind of the reader with the attractions. The design shown in the cut is about the best of the two lots sent in. In most of them the drawing takes space without yielding anything in return, though it is but seldom the artist makes the fault commented upon in connection with the last batch and letters on the drawing. Most of the designs are mortised to let the type in on white space. This should be done wherever practicable. We think that if Mr. Lovett would get a distinctive signature cut for the house and use that in conjunction with border material, he could get as good an effect at less cost. If he will play up his Monday and Tuesday bill splitting the last half-inch between the other two changes, he will still announce his full program and yet do most of his pulling for the impending attraction, doing the same thing on week days for his changes. It is largely a matter of opinion, and Mr. Lovett is right there on the ground, but we still think it would work.

English Programs.

E. H. Montagu, who for so many years represented the Selig interests in London, sends over some interesting English programs. One of the most pretentious is that of the Scala, Birmingham, for which four cents is charged. It is four pages and cover, the latter in red and black, giving a smart appearance. Two full-length features are run the entire week, but the news reel and a comedy or topical are changed on Thursday. The program is run on the first of the inside pages, with the synopses on the middle pages and the underline on the back page, this inside four being printed in green. The program is supplemented by the Scala Tattler, a monthly, nicely gotten up—eight pages and cover. We owe to this publication a new phrase, for the more important of the two features is "supported by" the other; a line evidently borrowed from the dramatic announcements, but reading rather oddly when used in connection with two five-reelers.

The New Savoy, Glasgow, gets out an eight-page weekly, with tint cover. Their handling of the musical program is to be commended. It will be noted that the program, with its two changes, runs on one side of the middle page and the numbers for each film selection are given on the other, numbered to correspond with the film. This program is well edited and adroitly laid out to get a maximum of advertising without being intrusive. It is not as pretentious as the others in the matter of dress, but it is better handled in many ways because it is made to work harder.

The Picture House News is issued by the Picturedome and West End Picture House, West Hartlepool, in lieu of a more pretentious house organ; possibly on account of the paper shortage, which is much more severe in England than it is here. It is a four-pager, with the front page for chat, a middle for the two programs and a back for underline, though in the issue sent this space is taken for an appreciation of the efforts of the town in the last war loan. The middle pages show that the reels must do considerable jumping about to play their dates since the same titles are announced for both houses on the same date, and both houses run under the same time-table.

Sealed and Delivered.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Strand, Westfield, Ma—, sends in an odd throwaway. It is folded into thirds and sealed with an inch and a half red seal, giving it a legal look, and over at the left you will notice a smaller seal also red with the explanation, "Seal of approval." These are specially affixed and not printed on, and the effect is very striking. We are afraid, however, that the Universal will be peeved to see The Price of a Good Time announced as a seven-part Metro feature. Evidently Mr. Chenoweth got it confounded with The Slacker, which followed, and which was advertised by means of a blotter. They must require a lot for their money in Westfield. Thirteen reels is also too much show.

Nice for a Border.

Notice the middle page of this six-page folder of the Columbia opera house, Columbia, Pa. A border design along those lines would take the eyes of the reader directly to the text, since all lines converge to the centre of attraction. It will be noted on the right hand that the added attraction is cut off from the main feature by a rule. Inside pages show the same fault with double rule used, which is even worse. Dashes can be used to break the banks, but a rule across the page should never be used until the story for that bill is done and a new story for the next change is to be begun. This is a too-common error, yet even a country printer should know better than that.

Better.

Recently we commented upon the Picture News of New Orleans, and questioned the usefulness of printing the programs of houses all along the Gulf. A recent issue announces the discontinuance of the practise. We gather that the houses are all under the Saenger Amusement Company management and that the sheet is used as a general house organ. By changing the makeup on one page, it is possible to cover the territory into which the paper goes, along the lines of special local editions. This is better than trying to give the programs of forty-three houses in a four-page organ. It gives more space for general matters.

In Colors.

By way of doing his bit, J. Lewis Arnold, of the Star, Bellingham, Wash., put his program into two colors to display his advertisement for the Third Liberty Loan. Then he kept on talking about it so his patrons could not forget—even if he had to give up his front page to it. That is practical patriotism.

Doing It in Texas.

F. M. Ferguson, of the Hippodrome, Wolfe City, Texas, gets an awful lot of advertising for $15 a week, and his letter gives an interesting picture of small-town work. He writes:

> This is my first letter to you, though I have been a close student of your advertising department for nearly five years, that is ever since I became associated with the exhibition of motion pictures. I am at present operating the Hippodrome theater in Wolfe City, Texas, a little town of some 1,500 inhabitants. Something like twenty months ago I became manager of this little show, business was shot to pieces, I had never had any experience as sole manager of a theater, but I had had fine training under an older man than I whom I consider to this day a real showman. Immediately upon taking charge of this theater I wrote for your book on Picture Theater Advertising and have found it a great help. I have been using a house organ ever since I have been here—I use plenty of space in the newspaper, and I am enclosing my first two editions of The Amusement Herald, a little newspaper that I find has and is still increasing my patronage and bringing new faces to my theater. I distribute these heralds myself with the aid of boys, placing one in every home in my little town. Every Saturday afternoon I personally place one in every automobile, wagon and buggy that is on the streets; in this way I reach the country people, and at night through the week they invariably drive back to visit the movies. The Amusement Herald is not original, neither is my house organ, but thinking that some fellow might be in the same boat that I was once in I am sending you a copy of my first two editions and copies of my house organs; if you will kindly comment upon them, whatever you say will be appreciated. I am only a small-town exhibitor, and if you get the money I think you have to advertise—make the people believe your show is about the most important institution in the city. I might add that this advertising is comparatively cheap—I spent about $15 per week for house organ, newspaper advertisement and The Herald.

What Mr. Ferguson calls his house organ is more properly a straight program, but he has always made it a point to carry some good house talk. He began with a little four-by-six, four pages, enlarged to 4 by 8½, and finally went to a five-inch width. Now he uses a four-pager, 9 by 12. Even this is more of a program than a real house organ, for there are no film notes and comparatively little house talk. More local stuff would benefit the house, we think. In one issue he makes the very point that the Hippodrome helps business generally in that it brings to town the country patrons who come in to see the show and stop to make a few purchases on the way home. This is something that might be driven home by all small-town managers. The theater brings business to town. It is often worth while to make an especial effort to attract that business with merchants' matinees or other special schemes.

Mr. Ferguson seems to have an objection to dated days—which is something that Picture Theater Advertising does not teach. Here is a part page from the local paper, for example, dropping sixteen inches, page width. This is printed on one of the inside sheets of an eight-page issue. The paper carries no running heads, and one must turn to the front page to get the date. If this sheet should become separated from the one carrying the date, there is no means of telling whether the films referred to are for the current week or last month. The display is well done for a small-town office. The rule work is restrained and helpful and the proper lines are played up. We do not know whether Mr. Ferguson marks his copy or leaves it to the compositor, but the result is good. For extra advertising Mr. Ferguson uses eighteen-point readers on every page, and that eighteen-point stands out above the eight-point body type like a three-sheet. Some of the local tradesmen also use these readers, but the Hippodrome has a majority of the space, using fifteen or twenty to the issue. And right in the centre of the front page is a two-sixes for the popcorn machine in the lobby. Mr. Ferguson evidently believes in showing all features. Fifteen dollars would not pay for the readers alone in many towns. Mr. Ferguson is fortunate in that he can do so much for so little money, and doubly fortunate in that he can do it so well.

Mr. Ryan's Logic.

Here is a good program reader from the Garfield, Chicago. Mr. Ryan usually does have good stuff for his front page, but this is rather better than usual. A. L. Middleton lately tried to convince his patrons that if they came three times for thirty cents they could have more fun than if they came but twice at a fifteen-cent admission. He didn't quite convince the population of De Queen, but the essence of the entire amusement business is contained in the statement that the theater-going public is a body that pools its funds to gain entertainment its members could not individually afford. You can do a lot of missionary work along these lines. Here is Mr. Ryan's copy:

"MUTUAL BENEFIT."

We know that we cannot charge below a certain figure, and we should not, in fairness to our patrons that appreciate our consideration, charge them above that which admits of a reasonable profit.

The theatergoing public is a body that pools the funds of its members in order to pay for an entertainment that they could not separately afford. The more members there are in the body—in other words, the larger the attendance of the given theater—the less each individual will have to contribute.

We think that Mr. Ryan would give these statements a stronger punch if he signed them. His name appears directly above as manager, but there is certain conviction in the signed statement that must be counted upon.

Why Blotters?

Blotters are always welcome to the average person and they make good advertisements, but why the sudden run on blotters in all parts of the country just now? It seems to be almost a craze.

Book and Play Rights.

TAKING exception to the suggestion of Archer McMackin to the effect that presently plays and books would be elaborated from the original screen productions, an official of a well-known company writes that he does not believe that the launching of a book can successfully follow the exploitation of a screen production, and says that his company has recently refused the book rights to two stories by well known writers.

We are inclined to agree with our correspondent—at least in so far as the book rights are concerned. Indeed we'll go a bit further and add that we do not believe that the printed version can follow the stage play to any great advantage, though in some instances cheap editions of both stage and screen plays have gained good sales. Roy McCardell's serial, "A Diamond from the Sky," was released in book form after publication of the serial, and several novels have been made from stage plays. Moreover, film productions have served as the basis for innumerable short stories. But these are largely the exceptions that seem to prove the rule. In a majority of instances we do not believe that an author can first sell the screen rights and then negotiate the sale of publication rights. The stories mentioned by the publisher were serials, both of which had been exploited in the newspapers simultaneously with the screen production as a means of advertising. It might be argued that most best sellers are also released serially before they appear in bound volumes, but the parallel is not truly drawn. In the first place, we do not believe that the average reader will pay a dollar or a dollar and a half for the printed version of a screen play, particularly if he has seen that play for fifteen or twenty cents admission. He feels that the relative cost is disproportionate, and, moreover, the book cannot render the story with the vividness of pictured action and disappointment is certain to follow the purchase. On the other hand, most persons who are interested in a book will pay the smaller sum to see the story realized upon the screen, and will often find that the screen version, if well made, is far more vivid than the book. Having paid a dollar or more for the book, he feels that he has the best of the bargain when he can see the story acted for a much smaller sum, and in a greater or less degree this holds good of the stage version, though here the limitations of the stage, requiring the condensation of the action to comparatively few locations, militates strongly against the giving of entire satisfaction. We are not however, in agreement with our correspondent's second contention that "any book can be made into a good play, but few plays will make good books." This statement is guided either by ignorance or prejudice. Not all books make good screen plays. One cannot convey to the screen the literary charm of an author. Only stories of action can be made into good screen subjects. On the other hand, plays consisting largely of action can almost always work into good stories, provided always that the author is not cramped. The fiction version of screen plays appearing in the various photoplay magazines intended for the general public are poor, not because there is not good story material there, but because the limitations of space cramp the author into a mere synopsis. Some of the stories that read badly in two or three thousand words would make capital novelettes, or even novels. It is not, however, a question of the relative fitness of the material, but a matter of dollars and cents, and we believe that for a long time to come the author will profit most who first sells his fiction and novel rights and then disposes of the screen rights. In selling screen stories first he must either be paid a sum sufficient to offset the loss of publication rights or else look merely to advertising for his reward. Perhaps the time will come when the original screen story will be in demand in a more permanent form, but this time will not come until the photoplay audiences are trained to look to the play rather than to the star. They must be made to feel that the story as such is so interesting that it is worth a dollar to have it in form for home reading. It is not sufficient that they associate the production with the star. We believe that this will come to pass in time. Producers of pictures must, in self preservation, follow the example of the dramatic stage and feature the play above the players. There are far fewer stage stars today than there were ten years ago, and the tendency is toward more even casts and a better all-around production of the offering. When this comes to pass in Pictureland, when the whole story is not thrown to the star (though always there must be one leading character to hold the interest), then the story will come into its own. Better stories will be demanded and procured and the story will then be able to make a sufficient impression upon the spectator to create a demand for the fiction form of the work. At present the author who can command sales will find the most profitable exploitation of his work to be the serial rights, the novel rights, the second serial rights and then the screen, though a stage version may be run simultaneously with the publication in book form to no bad effect upon the book sales.

Bucking the Big Names.

Evidently discouraged by the apparent competition with established authors one photoplay writer sees no hope for the "little fellow." He sees no use in continuing his efforts since the stories of Rex Beach, Irvin Cobb, Richard Harding Davis and others are given the preference over his own efforts. "They are established" he complains. "What chance have I against the recognized writers?" He has the same chance those writers had before they became recognized. One of the favorite stories of Matthew White, Jr., of Munsey's, relates to Upton Sinclair's first sale to that publication. He wrote that he was a sixteen year old boy and would Mr. White please give him a chance. Mr. White did, and it was some time before he knew that his supposed youthful prodigy was using a razor. There was a time when Richard Harding Davis was a newspaper reporter in Philadelphia, and Cobb was working on a sheet in Paducah, Ky. They did not spend their time lamenting their lack of opportunity. They created an opening for themselves. Davis was helped by the fact that he came of a literary family, but most of the writers had no such aid. Kipling lifted himself out of the obscurity of the Indian Civil Service with his stories. He did not give up hope because others were well known. He made himself known through his work. No one started writing with greater handicaps than O. Henry, yet his is a name to conjure with in films. He stuck to it and demanded, and received, the recognition that made him one of the first rank of authors. Morgan Robertson for a long time haunted the editorial offices before he got a start, and we recall his visits to the old Metropolitan Magazine, when he looked as though an invitation to lunch would be almost as welcome as the sale of a story, yet he was a powerful writer, though fame found him too late to do him much good. When you get right down to facts there is no reason why the obscure writer of today should not be the literary star of tomorrow. Harry Chandlee, now the editor for Paralta, was about ready to quit several years ago, but he was persuaded to stick, and he later gained a place on the Lubin staff and more than made good. One thing must be remembered—the business will not always exist on the present basis. The time must come when screen stories must be written for the screen; when the fiction story will not be accepted unless it is clearly a screen story as well. The best stories will be written by the men and women who write directly for the screen, and this time may not be so far distant as many suppose. There is always a reaction from the fiction play when the stock becomes exhausted and there are bound to come into the business men who will come as film producers and not as dramatists or novelists and who bring with them the traditions of their former estate. It will be discovered that the man who writes original stories with the screen technique in mind will write more successful stories than the staff man who vainly tries to get to the screen the literary flavor of a novel or stage play. If stories sold on merit there would be vastly fewer adaptations today, but so long as the program selling scheme carries the good and bad alike, just so long will producers be more or less indifferent as to the individual story. If they make a 50 per cent. average of pleasing plays they will be content. When each story is booked upon its merits and upon its own merits alone, there must come better stories, and better stories mean stories written primarily for the screen and without reference to their previous use as printed fiction or spoken plays. The only thing to do is to keep on working and hoping for the golden days that must come sooner or later.

Do Your Best.

Just remember that the average editor is a hard-hearted, unsympathetic sort of cuss who is not going to take the same friendly interest in your stories that your friends evince. The fact that you wrote it is not going to influence his opinion to the slightest degree, so don't get the idea that anything you send out ought to sell. Hard as it may be, hold on to a plot until is is so good that you can't make it any better, and then give it an airing with a silent prayer. At best you stand but a poor chance of making a sale.

It Depends.

It pays to be business-like. One former author writes that he has not written a script in months, "since there is no market for them." Another says, "I have four two-reelers to get out this week, having contracted for 26 within the year for the ..... Company, and I want to get them a little ahead." The latter makes a business of writing, and goes at it in a business-like way.

Show the Goods.

Don't ask an editor if he is in the market for five-reel stories. Ask him if he wants the five-part synopsis you are sending.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Progressive Votes-for-Women Operator.

Down in Toledo, Ohio, I was handed a letter, parts of which I shall take the liberty of quoting, although it is a personal communication:

> Mr. F. H. Richardson, Greetings: For nine long years I have been a projectionist. During those nine years I have read your (first) column and (later) pages in the Moving Picture World, and always the reading has been done with the greatest pleasure and interest. Twice in the past two or three years I have heard a letter from you read before the Toledo Projectionists Union, offering to come here and deliver the address which every other city has so deeply appreciated, but both times it all came to naught. I despaired! And then how glad I was when our good friend, Delaney, president of the Breco Electric Company, announced the fact that he had arranged, on his own responsibility, to have you address us. * * * But after all I will not be able to hear you, for I am flat on my back in the hospital, so I guess I will have to still admire your work from a distance, and keep on trying, every day in my own way, to be a better projectionist.
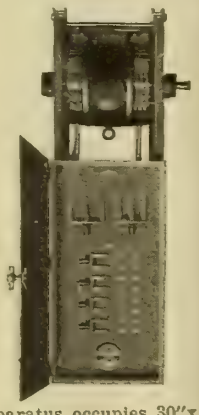
> In my nine years of projecting pictures I have never been discharged, never held up opening time one single minute, never been drunk on the job, never smoke cigaretes or anything else in the operating room—not such a bad record, is it? I love my work so much that it never becomes tiresome or monotonous. Therefore, I am on the job sixty minutes of every hour that I am on duty. I hope you meet the real opeartors of Toledo. They may not be so many, but are decidedly worth knowing. I also hope you are not thinking I am tiresome. I am going to quit now, but I just couldn't let you come to Toledo and leave without knowing how sincerely I have admired your work. Thanking you for the help you have so often given me in my work, and for the time you have consumed in reading this letter, I am, Fraternally, Eva McCormick, Operator Priscilla Theater, Toledo, Ohio.

That is a letter some of you hemale men will do well to read quite some several times; also there is at least one sentence in it you might cut out and paste immediately over your observation port. The sentence is: "I am on the job sixty minutes of every hour that I am on duty." Sister McCormick, that fact is the best possible evidence that you are a real projectionist. I would hate to say how many projectionists there are who are on duty eight hours each day, and on the job about twenty minutes. They are of the type who leave an inanimate iron motor to grind out the art of an artist who receives thousands of dollars a week, while they, the "projectionists," wander around the operating room like a calf which has lost its mother, or rubber out the window at the passing poultry show. Immediately upon receipt of the above letter I demanded that I be driven out to St. Vincent's Hospital. I wanted to shake hands with a woman projectionist who is "on the job sixty minutes of every hour that she is on duty." I am one of those old-fashioned men who hate to see women going out into the fields of labor and shoveling slag iron into a furnace. I don't believe the impending change in the status of women is going to benefit either women or humanity to any great extent, but on the other hand, I don't believe in fighting a wind mill. The change is here, and if we are to have women projectionists, I only hope we may have more like Sister McCormick.

As to the Toledo projectionists, I think their lethargy was most largely due to a lack of understanding. They did not realize the importance of the message I had to deliver. Certainly those Toledo projectionists whom I met are well worth knowing, and I hope to have the pleasure of meeting both them and Mrs. McCormick again in the not distant future. By the way, Mrs. McCormick's husband, Tom McCormick, is a projectionist also, holding down a job in a theater about a block from the Priscilla. Between the two of them they have a Saxon four-wheeled gasoline buggy, in which, according to statements by both of them, they succeed in burning up considerable of the combined McCormick salary.

"Martin" Rotary Converter.

While in Chicago I called at the new plant of the Northwestern Electric Company, and met my old friend, S. H. Martin, the president. I was considerably surprised. At the time of my last visit friend Martin had his office under his desk. You had to pretty near crawl in on your hands and knees. When I expostulated he explained he really could not help it because every inch of space was needed for factory operations. Today he conducted me into a luxurious office containing two or three desks and a regular flock of office help.



The factory occupies two entire floors of a large brick building, and is equipped with modern machinery and appliances for the manufacture of electrical goods, among which is the "Martin" converter, now well known to the motion picture fraternity, it being one of the old established current rectifying devices. The Martin converter has already been described in the Projection Department, and since that description there has been no change made, as will be seen in the illustration. The Martin Rotary Converter is very compact. It consists of the converter itself, and a switchboard contained in a metal cabinet with door. The whole apparatus occupies 30"x 30" floor space and is 66" high; it is furnished in sizes from 2½ to 15 K. W., and for any desired voltage. The current characteristic is flat—no pulsation at all. The secondary current is generated at 70 volts, which is reduced by ballast resistance, which gives a very easily handled arc, the difference between the arc voltage of 70 being sufficient to render the arc stable. This apparatus has had the approval of the Projection Department for a long time. It is substantially constructed and reasonably efficient in its electrical operation. The Northwestern Electric Company is a thoroughly reliable corporation and the goods which it puts out are covered by all necessary guarantees, which same are made good in case of failure of the apparatus.

He Is No Slacker.

R. Douglas Harrison, Lansing, Michigan, orders a Handbook and says:

> I am projectionist at the Reo Club House, this city. Run two shows a week, Wednesday and Saturday, as well as a single subject every morning and afternoon at 10 and 3 respectively. Have a Motiograph, projecting 131 feet. Use D. C. It is the longest throw in the city, and from what I have heard I am giving the best all around projection in the city, so, you see, I am no slacker. We expect to add another machine in a few weeks, possibly a 1918 DeLuxe Motiograph, whereupon I look forward to being able to give an even better projection. Present operating room is in the balcony, but we must rebuild it when the second machine is added. Do you think we should put the new room on the main floor? also should there be an intake pipe to bring in fresh air from the outside? We haven't one as yet; not even a pipe from top of lamphouse. I am in favor of these things myself, but those in charge don't seem to think it practical. Ninety degrees and more of temperature aid in forming my decision.

Whereas there is no serious objection to a reasonable drop in the projection, there is a very serious objection to a heavy drop, and the best possible result is always obtained where the lens is central, up, down and sidewise with the screen. It is only under the latter condition that there is no distortion of the picture. Certainly there should be a vent pipe to bring fresh air into the operating room, and another vent pipe to lead the foul air out; the latter being not only a safeguard to the health of the operator, but a safeguard to the audience in case of fire, since it provides means for the escape of smoke and gases generated by the burning film, which otherwise must escape into the auditorium, with every likelihood of producing a dangerous panic.

The top of the lamphouse should be piped to the vent flue, partly to allow for escape of the heat generated by the electric arc and partly to carry away the gases generated in the volatilization of carbon. I am glad to hear that you are no projection slacker. The man who does not take pride in his work seldom or never produces high class results.

It Won't Work.

The New Ford Amusement Company, East Palestine, Ohio, by D. Ford Henry, Jr., makes the following inquiry:

> We are using 110 volt 60 cycle A. C. for projecting, taking > current through a Hummel economizer, which supplies two Power's 6-A projectors. We have a 34 volt arc, pulling about 60 amperes. Am enclosing a rough sketch of the wiring system of incandescent lamps, which we propose, if practical, to substitute for the economizer. This would permit us to utilize for front lighting the current which is now going to waste in the economizer. Kindly advise us as to whether or not this idea is feasible.

It is not. Of course you could make such a plan work after a fashion, but it would not be satisfactory. There are several reasons for this. In the first place, such an arrangement would be inelastic. You would have just 60 amperes, and no more, when your incandescent lamps were new. As they grew older, however, their resistance would increase and you would not get quite as much current. In the second place, you would have to have 20 ampere lamps of voltage to make up the line voltage less the arc voltage, and a projection arc voltage is variable unless the carbons are fed automatically. The fact that you are getting a 34 volt arc when pulling 60 amperes is proof positive that that is the voltage your arc must have, or, in other words, that is the length of arc you must have when pulling 60 amperes in order to get the best possible results on the screen. Still another objection is that the banks of lamps which would nominally use 60 amperes would not let through 60 amperes when placed in series with a projection arc, which in itself offers considerable resistance. Still another objection is that if one of the lamps burned out, it would act to reduce your amperage by one-third, and when your arc is off you would not have any front illumination, though that might easily be gotten around. If these are not objections enough, neighbor Henry, I can readily dig up several others, but I think the above list will probably suffice. Incidentally, I will say, however, that you would not be gaining such a terrible lot, because the economizer is not such a current waster as is the rheostat. The rheostat has less than 50 per cent. efficiency on 110 volt current, whereas the economizer has, or ought to have, better than 80 per cent. efficiency.

More Punch Marks.

Fred Knoll, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, sends in a bunch of punch marks which are evidently at least partly the product on the punch wielded by Brother Niles's friend. He says:

> Have been following the Department for quite some time, though never before taken the liberty to write. Enclosed find samples of punch marks removed from a print of the Metro picture "Blue Jeans," which came out of the Minneapolis office. I would suggest to the projectionist who is doing this kind of work the following: Get an old reel which is of no more use and punch it full of holes, then if he wants to run a show full of holes let him use that reel. I have been trying to eliminate travel ghost at the top: also at the bottom. Have made the test set forth in the "Bible" (which, incidentally, I could not get along without), but find the shutter blade is wide enough. Can you tell me the trouble? I have two Simplex with a 96 foot throw, using 40 amperes. Have been a resident of the operating room for seven years.

There are six short samples of film submitted, respectively 3½", 5", 5¼", 3¾", 5", and 4¾" in length. In these samples are a total of 27 punch marks, some of which are almost 3/16" in diameter. Comment is, it seems to me, quite unnecessary. You say your shutter blade is wide enough. If that is true, then I should say you have some pretty badly worn gears. Hold your flywheel stationery and rock your shutter back and forth with your finger. If you can move it very much, the seat of your trouble is there, and the remedy is new gears. You can also effect a temporary remedy as follows: Get a strap of soft leather ½" wide. Attach one end of this strap to something solid, immediately below the shutter shaft. Hang the strap over the shutter shaft and attach to the loose end a small weight, the idea being to provide a brake which will hold the shutter retarded all the time. Don't use too heavy a weight, or you will cause undue wear to the mechanism. If your trouble lies in worn gears, this will throw the travel ghost all in one direction and you can set your shutter to eliminate it. The better remedy is, however, new gears. The brake is merely a makeshift.

Squeaks a Lot.

Eugene Bagby, Eldorado, Illinois, is in trouble. He says:

> I am projectionist at the Casino theater. Have been with this house for nearly four years, and used the crank until about a month ago, when friend Boss bought me two motors. Believe me, it is much easier this way, but there is where my trouble began. One of them makes an awful racket, pulls pretty hard, and squeaks a lot. I loosened the tension so that the friction wheel would not be so close to the plate, but that does not seem to help much. Should there be more noise and squeak when the friction wheel is nearer or far away from the disc? I operate two Power's machines, taking current through a Mercury arc rectifier. Have had pretty good luck until lately, when I have been getting some pretty bad spools (watcha mean by that Australian line of talk, man? We use "reels" in this country—Ed.), some of them so badly bent that the film will hardly pull out; others so crooked they rub the magazine badly—in fact, so bad that I have to turn them with my hand. Our breaks are mostly caused by these spools. I don't see why the exchange don't put their reels on better spools.

I don't either, friend Bagby. The mental processes of a film exchange manager who puts a valuable roll of film on a God-forsaken, bent-up, decrepit old wreck of a reel is past human understanding. He may have brains, but that particular operation would hardly lead one to suppose so. Presumably you have the regular Power's motor drive, in which case I would refer you to the Power's motor drive instructions in the Handbook, if you have one. Your trouble is doubtless caused through lack of adjustment, but your description is so indefinite that I am unable to determine its exact seat. You want to know whether the friction wheel should be near to or far away from the disc. I cannot even begin to understand what you mean. The friction wheel could not be "far away from the disc," because if it were the machine would not run. You should so adjust the friction wheel and the disc that the friction engendered between the two will just pull the machine without any slipping. Examine the face of the friction material. Possibly it is rough, in which case it will be necessary to smooth it out. I cannot take a lot of space every few weeks to describe the process of smoothing out friction wheel material. You will have to get a Handbook for that, or write to Nicholas Power Company for instructions. I am sorry I cannot give you a more definite answer, but your unfamiliarity with the motor drive forbids your giving a very intelligent description of the trouble.

Some Puncher.

R. L. Miles, Mitchell, S. D., who is a member of Local 355, I. A of Sioux City, Iowa, arises to make the following pointed remarks:

> From time to time I have noted that samples of film were sent to our department showing how some projectionists (?) were practically ruining prints by using a punch-hole change-over signal. Well, here is a sample of the work of this particular brand of little Bright Eyes, which same I amputated from "The Hired Man," a practically new subject at the time of my writing. The half-wit who punched these holes is somewhere in this neck of the woods, and I certainly would like the chance to converse with him personally. He should, as I believe you once said, have a hole punched in his ear for every one he punches in the film. This is my first offense in your ("our," Mr. Man—Ed.) department, although I have been reading it for seevral years, and with much interest.

Suffering Mother of the Green-Toed Prophet, Man, what size ears do you think that man has? The sample you sent in is 4¼" in length, and in that length are nine punch holes, eight of them being within a space of 2½". That one job of punching would make his ear look like a kitchen collender. I don't think, Brother Niles, there is any use talking to an ingrowing bonehead who will do a trick like that. A man with brains would not commit that sort of outrage, and if he hasn't brains the only argument he would give attention to would be the loss of his job or the weight of a No. 6 fist. If you do find this chap, kindly finish up your own conversation with him and then re-do the whole business on my account.

It Is Some Book.

Ernest Hendrickson, Rochester, Indiana, says:

> Although I am a reader of the department and an owner of the third edition of the Handbook, which, by the way, is some book, yet I am in trouble and that fact furnishes the cause for this letter. I have a Power's 6-A, and last fall we replaced the old flywheel pinion with a new one. Of course, I expected that there would be some grind at first, but after seven months of constant use the gear seems to grind as bad as ever when the framing lever is in certain positions, though when it is in other positions the grind is not so noticeable. Have tried the method suggested in the Handbook for dealing with this trouble, but it does not seem to have helped very much. Any suggestions you might offer for the removal or reduction of this grind will be greatly appreciated. I would very much like to know where I may purchase a copy of "Optical Projection," by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage; also probable cost of same. I see you are coming out into this neck of the woods soon. If you could stop off between trains in this little 3,500 population city, which has only one theater, I certainly would be eager to accept and act upon any suggestions you might offer for the betterment of my projection.

It would be impractical to stop in your city, Brother Hendrickson. To stop even between trains would doubtless mean a day's loss, and might mean more. By devoting that day to a larger city I would be able to accomplish a very much greater amount of good for the industry. My days are limited, and the demands upon them are many. Do you see the point? I am writing this in Chicago and do not remember the address of the publisher of "Optical Projection." If, however, you will address an inquiry to Prof. Simon Henry Gage, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., the desired address will be supplied. The price of the book is $3.00. You could send Prof. Gage the money and avoid delay. As to the grind, why if the method suggested by the Handbook does not eliminate the trouble, then it must be that the gear is of too great diameter, and you will do well to return the machine to the Power's Company for adjustment. It is also possible that you put in one of the old rawhide or fiber gears, which had a tendency to swell somewhat. On the whole, I am afraid you will have to refer that machine to the manufacturer for the elimination of the trouble.

Why Not Agree?

The following is respectfully referred to the attention of C. F. Morrison, vice-president of the General Electric Company, 120 Broadway, New York City, because I believe he can straighten things out if he cares to. It seems to me there is no legitimate reason why the National Lamp Works, the Edison Lamp Works and the Westinghouse Lamp Works should not get together and agree on the statements issued by them with regard to Mazda projection lamps. As the matter now is the National claims that the 20 ampere, 28-30 volt, 600 watt T-20 Mazda C lamp will replace the A. C. carbon-arc for motion picture projectors where the throw does not exceed 100 feet, and the picture does not exceed 14 feet in width. The Edison Company claims that this type of lamp is only adapted for a 12-foot picture and less than a 100 foot throw, whereas the Westinghouse claim that it is only adapted to use with a 12-foot picture and where the throw does not exceed 60 feet. Now the 28-30 600 watt Mazda C lamps are presumably all alike, or of equal filament brilliancy. This being true, why this diversity of claims? Sounds rather foolish, does it not? And anyhow, how in the name of common sense are you going to establish a basis of that sort? Suppose we find that under a certain condition of auditorium lighting the lamp in question will successfully replace an A. C. carbon-arc where there is a poor operator, with a 14-foot picture at an 80 foot throw. Now, let us take the same lamp into another theater where there is a 14-foot picture with an 80 foot throw, but a first-class projectionist. Does not that establish a very different condition. Or supposing the throw is 80 feet and the picture 14 feet, but that the auditorium is very well lighted. Would you, under that condition, expect the same results you would get on a 14-foot picture with an 80 foot throw where the auditorium is comparatively dark? Most emphatically you would not, unless you are afflicted with an ingrowing case of foolishness. This department has insisted upon the use of carbon-arc amperage as a basis for comparison. We have agreed that the Mazda lamp will successfully replace a 60-cycle A. C. carbon-arc of certain amperage. We do not claim that this is a perfect basis for comparison, because, whereas it might replace the carbon-arc of that amperage where the arc is handled by a projectionist of mediocre ability, it could not successfully replace the same carbon-arc handled by a projectionist of high ability. Notwithstanding this fact, however, the fact still remains that by using this basis of comparison we automatically place the Tungsten and the carbon-arc on the same grounds, insofar as has to do with auditorium lighting, which is a highly important proposition. But again, however, the whole thing becomes complicated by reason of the difference of results obtained through the use of various screen surfaces. What this department would like would be to see the Sales Department and Engineering Departments of the National, the Westinghouse and the Edison Lamp Works get together in a meeting, together with the editor of this department and such others as might be expected to throw some light on this subject and then and there thresh the whole thing out, arriving at a basis for comparison which could be used intelligently by us all. There is no earthly reason why this could not be done, and it certainly ought to be done. The making of conflicting claims by various companies does not get us anywhere. It simply serves to befog the whole matter, and to confuse the prospective purchaser.

Further Report on National A. C. Special Carbons.

At the same time I requested the National Carbon Company to send some of their A. C. White Special carbons to La Grow for test, I also requested them to send some to John Griffiths, Ansonia, Connecticut, for test. Friend Griffith reports as follows:

> At last I am able to report on the National White A. C. Special Carbon. Have been keeping the doctor busy for a week, for the first time in my life, and you betcha I'm glad to get rid of him. Am O. K. again now. I have to report that the National White A. C. Special Carbon is O. K. Its performance is very satisfactory. It is quiet, the arc is steady and the illumination brilliant. The light is soft and white, but the carbons need close feeding to prevent the showing of too much blue. The National A. C. White Special Carbons combine well with the amberlux lens. I would add just a word of warning: When using any of the Special Noiseless A. C. Carbons, the arc-condenser lens should be protected by a photographer's negative plate washed clean, because the new carbons cause excessive pitting of the condenser.

All of which is good. The two reports, together with other unofficial reports received, fully justify this department in giving its hearty endorsement and recommendation to the White A. C. Special Carbons for use on A. C. The notation with regard to the use of amberlux lenses is interesting, and I have no doubt but that Brother Griffith has given good advice in that respect. The photographic plate stunt is worth a trial. Almost any photographer will give you a lot of old negative plates, and a little hot water and Sal Soda will remove the emulsion, after which a ten cent glass cutter will do the rest, although I should think it would be an easy matter to suspend a 4x5 plate in front of the condenser without any cutting. There would, of course, be some additional loss due to reflection, but I think that it would not amount to much.

Optical Dope.

John Griffith, Ansonia, Connecticut, says:

> With reference to your reply to Chauncey Greene, Grantsburg, I believe you are right when you say that some portion of the added area of crater is projected to the center of the spot, because the spot is not an exact image of the crater. However, a considerable amount of the increased light is due to the brighter crater. I do not know what amperage will bring an A. C. crater to maximum temperature, but it will require much more than would be necessary with D. C., due to the fact that the alternations allow the crater to cool between periods. It seems to me that if A. C. amperage be raised sufficiently the temperature may become practically constant, thus eliminating the flicker inherent in alternating current light. The higher the temperature the more slowly the crater will cool. We have an illustration of this in the new incandescent lamp, which, the filament of which being enclosed and surrounded by gas, maintains its brilliancy between the period of alternations. The steady and noiseless action of the new A. C. carbons may be due to the presence of some substance which does not cool quickly, thus tending to maintain a more constant resistance between the electrodes.

All of which is given for what it is worth. Personally, my eye has never been able to detect any unsteadiness in 60 A. C. current illumination, due to the alternations of the current. It is possible some eyes are so sensitive that they may detect the slight and very rapid fluctuation in brilliancy. I don't know. As to the availability of the additional crater area, why that matter will be dealt with in another article.

From Tom Costello.

The friends of Tom Costello, and they are many, will be glad to hear from him. He is in Denver, Colorado, and says:

> Dear Friend Richardson: I want to take this opportunity of thanking you for the very kind letter you gave me to the boys here. It was the key which unlocked the door of friendship to me. They have done everything possible to make me feel like a native son. I went to work on a night job, but had to go back to bed for a time, but I am up again, enjoying the wonderful air and sunshine. I have hopes of being once more, in the fullness of time, a well man. Eleven out of the seventy members of Denver Local Union No. 230 are helping to make the self-appointed partner of the Almighty uncomfortable, which is a pretty good showing, don't you think?

I do. But it is what I would expect of the Denver men. I most sincerely hope Costello will fully recover, for Tom is of the kind we can ill afford to lose. If my recommendation to the Denver man has helped, I am glad to know it. Will be glad to hear "how goes it." My regards to the members of 230. Incidentally, why the bust-up at one A. M.??? Did the grape juice repository close dowa (Denver is d-r-y) or the ice cream give out?

Growing Interest in Knowledge.

I have of late noticed a very encouraging symptom. Organizations of projectionists who heretofore took but little interest in an address on projection have, considerably to my surprise, requested me to visit them and address them. I also notice in my audiences an apparently greater desire for knowledge. A year or more ago when I landed on the boys heavily there was sometimes a disposition to feel "sore" about it for a time. During my last trip, however, I observed nothing of this kind, no matter how heavy a jolt I handed the men they always came up smiling, cheerfully admitting the fact that it was for their own good, and that if the shoe did not fit, they would not have had to wear it. This is decidedly encouraging. It shows that the men are advancing, both in knowledge and mental ability. It is a wise man who can accept drastic criticism cheerfully, with an understanding of the fact that the criticism is for his own benefit, regardless of how much it may hurt.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

Musical Directors.

THE duties of a musical director become more arduous as the demands for better music become more exacting. More and more of his time must be devoted to his musical settings. Hours must be devoted to research work to properly fit some peculiar situation arising in the picture for the following day or week. It may be just possible that because he cannot find the necessary theme he will be forced to arrange it from his memory. In the larger houses where they have a regular librarian the work is lightened somewhat, but in any case the musical director has little time for conducting after he gets his show in running order. He has become a man-of-affairs in the strictest sense of the word and his position is one of dignity and importance, ranking favorably with that of any successful executive of Big Business.

No workman or professional man can show results without good tools. A large library is the one large asset of the successful leader or director. It must be properly classified according to his individual needs, so that time is saved in selection. The peculiarity of a library is the fact that it must be personally selected in the first place to be of real value to the director in his picture work. A library bought off-hand and installed in a theater expressly for the use of a leader has but one advantage in that it saves him looking over the music in a publisher's salesroom. He must, however, familiarize himself with every number before he knows what atmosphere it holds and of what use he can make of it. Taking chances on what some one else has classified would prove disastrous in the extreme, because of the wide range and latitude found in musical interpretation.

The musical department of the motion picture industry has never received its proper mead of praise and recognition, largely because the attention of the producers has not been called to the necessary qualifications requisite in a good musical director, and partly because of the general ignorance prevailing about the art of music in the lay mind. It is popularly supposed that any one who can play a violin, piano, or organ, can take charge of the music in a picture house and render excellent service in the fitting of pictures. One might just as well say that every carpenter can be a contractor, or every plowman become a successful farmer. A carpenter may some day become a contractor, providing he possesses the other necessary qualifications, and the plowman has the chance of owning his farm if his ambition and initiative be strong enough. A general should come from the ranks, but every soldier would not make a good general. So it is with music. A player may be a virtuoso as such, but would fail utterly as a musical director, especially if he were called upon to fit pictures, while at the same time there are many musical directors who are not and never have been wonderful players.

A musical director must first of all be a good general, with a firm control over his men, but beloved by them for his ability and good fellowship. Commanding an orchestra through the principle of fear never speaks for the highest form of excellence in their playing, while good fellowship alone is not conducive to good playing. A leader must command the respect of his men, assert his authority while in the pit, but be one of them during rest periods or on the street. At no time should players be treated like dogs. Leaders who get the best results from their orchestras are those who show a little appreciation of their efforts and occasionally pass the word of praise. This tact is born in one and is probably the greatest of all the necessary attributes of a good leader.

Besides being able to handle men to the greatest advantage a director in charge of a picture theater must have a wide knowledge of picture values. He should know considerable of the technique of picture making. His knowledge of the dramatic values should be wide, not those gleaned from the blood-and-thunder ten, twent and thirt. He must be capable of true perception of plot development and accurately gauge his music to lead up to the climax lest his musical climax precede that of the picture and rob the feature of its merit. It is sometimes a difficult matter to judge the proper situation to fit when the action is fast and kaleidoscopic. In fact, sometimes judgment fails and intuition must be relied upon entirely. A great director will mark, musically, his atmosphere, as accurately as his tempo. This means much because it further enhances the entertainment quality of the picture. It takes the audience out of themselves as the producer intended it should.

Music values must be thoroughly understood by the competent director. The old way of fitting pictures simply meant that if a pathetic number were required the leader would search out a slow andante of a pathetic nature and use it, disregarding other conditions altogether. Recently we heard the "Song of the Boatmen of the Volga" played slowly as a pathetic number during a sad scene, the location of which was in Belgium. There was nothing Russian in the situation and certainly no boatmen in sight. From the standpoint of melody and harmony, the selection, as played, suited the situation, and musically illiterate people would have pronounced it a fitting selection. Nevertheless, it showed poor judgment. This song is as Russian as "Dixie" is American. It is well known and carries with it but one interpretation, the idea of which is far removed from the dominant emotion which was found in this scene.

A musical director must study his audience. He must give them the musical tit-bits that their hearts crave if it is possible to do so without marring his presentation. Every theater clientele differs in its musical tastes, and as the first principle of business is to make money, that clientele must be catered to. Great leaders quickly find out the desires of their patrons and instantly win favor and applause by gratifying them. Mistakes in correctly judging his audience have lost the position of many a leader.

The time has arrived when a musical director must do more than play or conduct. He must read widely the trade journals. He must familiarize himself with what pictures are being produced and when they are to be released. He must keep up with the times in the matter of orchestra scores and special presentations. He must learn what the other and bigger fellow is doing. He should note what new music is available for picture purposes, and, above all, he should visit other cities and other picture theaters for new ideas relating to picture presentation. The wise exhibitor will gladly furnish the expenses incidental to such a foraging expedition. Wise theater managers should insist upon their leader taking the time necessary for research and review work. Nothing can bring the theater better returns in dollars and cents. In fact, it is senseless, under present keen competition, to do anything else.

Summing up, we find that a good director of music in the picture theater must have a wide knowledge of pictures and men, a keen insight and instinct for dramatic and music values, a powerful perception of the desires of his patrons and a devotion to his work and employer that will call forth his best efforts in continually bettering his show.

"The Sister of Rosie O'Grady."

This is not the name of a book, nor an Irish comedy. It is a song that goes with the Goldwyn picture, "The Venus Model."

It is intensely gratifying to watch the new moves on the picture-music chessboard. Each advance is strengthening the game, and from our observation on the sidelines it looks like a won game for music.

Coincident with the release of this song, exhibitors throughout the United States have arranged to use the song covers for lobby displays, to have the soloists use the number, and also to have their orchestras play it throughout the week of the release of "The Venus Model." In addition hundreds of exhibitors have arranged to have music tables in their lobbies and sell the song to their patrons.

We do not believe that such a reputable firm as Goldwyn would use a picture to exploit a song for monetary gain. Goldwyn is in the business of making and distributing pictures, so that the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn is that they have seen the light. Music makes pictures just as emphatically as a camera makes them, but in a different way. Let the good work proceed.

Music for "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Lyric.

The regular Lyric Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Arundel, provides a splendid musical accompaniment to "Pershing's Crusaders."

The picture is largely educational in its aim and purpose, which makes it difficult to fit music of sufficient variety to hold the ear, but throughout the entire seven reels your thoughts are with the brave boys who have rushed into the breach to fight for democracy. Speaking of democracy, the music truly portrays that feeling and ideal "Chin Chin Chinaman," "Onward Christian Soldiers," "By the Suwanee River," "Semper Fidelis," "Marseillaise," "Zampa Overture" and "American Melodies."

Picture fitting, owing to the elasticity of musical art and the wide latitude allowed musical interpretation, is a subject that presents many difficulties in criticizing. However, there are some fundamental principles that must be adhered to in order that the greatest good can be received from the music, and there are some well defined rules regarding misfit music that are understood by layman and musician. "American Patrol," used where the American boys are in the trenches, is not the best possible selection. "Ballroom Chatter" and "Where Do We Go from Here" have no place in the setting, especially the latter, which carries through it the strain of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." Why lower the dignity of the picture in this way? Another selection that jarred upon us was the use of Chopin Funeral March in a scene of the Kaiser reviewing a squad of troops. The idea behind the selection was excellent. We all desire his death, and speedily, but instead of impressing the audience seriously, it creates a laugh that is decidedly out of place at the moment. The cleverness shown in selection will never overcome the burlesque possibilities.

Mr. Arundel handles his orchestra in a quiet, gentlemanly way, and gets good results therefrom. His playing of the sub-titles PP is highly commendable and the music becomes a real accompaniment to the action.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

AT THE MERCY OF MEN (Select—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest Hawk's Dramatic—Hawk, L'Arlesieime—Bizet, or Meditation —Delmas.

This picture is dramatic and needs big stuff. Many agitatos, misteriosos and hurrys will fill the gaps and fit the action. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Select exchange.

A MODEL'S CONFESSION (Universal—Six Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest Why Don't You—Caldwell, Serenata—Cajani, or A Spring Morn—Morris.

Light music will fit this picture nicely. "Just a Little Love," by Silesu; "Japanese Reverie," by Bartlett, and "Egmont Overture" are numbers that can be used to great advantage. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Universal exchange.

BRAVE AND BOLD (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest Ariso—Frey, Meditation—Leigh, or Nocturne—Karganoff.

There will be needed for this picture a slow misterioso, two furiosos, a few agitatos and a galop. Use "Hello Frisco" if possible and "We Won't Go Home Till Morning." Cue sheets may be obtained from the Fox exchange.

$5,000 REWARD (Bluebird—Four Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest Eileen Asthore, from Victor Herbert's "Eileen," or Miss Molly May, by Edwards.

Stirring adventures are depicted in this little feature. Use big stuff. Have a few misteriosos, hurrys, agitatos, and dramatic tensions ready. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Universal exchange.

GOLDEN GOAL, THE (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest Purity—Borch, Adieu—Karanoff, or Elysian Dreams—Renland.

This is a dramatic and requires big treatment. At "T. (?) One of those seaman's mission," use the hymn, "Throw Out the Life-line," on the organ if possible. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

MYSTERIOUS CLIENT, THE (Pathe—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest Premier D'Amour—Benoist, Astarte—Mildenberg, or Over the Waters—Hoffman.

This picture is a melodrama filled with dramatic action requiring dramatic music. There is a bit of Italian-American atmosphere which can be well taken care of by the use of some well known Italian folk song. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

OLDEST LAW, THE (World—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest Mountain Music Song—Borch, Moonbeams—Keiser, or Salut D'Amour —Elgar.

This picture is dramatic, with many Maine woods' exteriors which can be well fitted by pastorales. Although the picture is dramatic there will be no need for heavy music. Use melodious stuff of an andante or slow nature. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

PRUNELLA (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lente. Suggest Maytime—Romberg, or Girl from Brazil—Romberg.

The story is somewhat light, and as you have played Marguerite Clark many times before you can readily guess the class of music which will fit her light heartedness. There is little chance for dramatic stuff, and no opportunity for hurrys, agitatos or misteriosos. In the third reel a semi-misterioso might be used at the "T. That Night," but it must be very light. Choose dainty music as far as possible. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

SHACKLED (Paralta Plays—Six Reels)—Theme—Moderato and Dramatic. Suggest Nocturne No. 2—Chopin, Melodie—Friml, or Serenade—Chaminade.

Nothing is found in this picture but drama, with the exception of a few light touches, which are short. There is a place for the "Wedding March" played briskly, "Home Sweet Home," and close with "Song of Songs," by De Moya. Cue sheets may be obtained from the Hodkinson Distributing Corporation.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. What are harmonies on the violin, and how are they produced, and what is their scientific cause?

A. One of the series of tones which usually accompany, more or less faintly, the prime tone produced by a string, an organ pipe, the human voice, etc. The prime tone is the strong tone produced by the vibration of the whole string, or the entire column of air in the pipe; the partial tones are produced by the vibration of fractional parts of that string or air or air column. These same harmonics are obtained on any stringed instrument which is stopped by lightly touching a nodal point of a string.

Q. Now that the French Society of Composers is to follow the lead of the American society in imposing a music tax on picture houses, is it not most likely that the Italian, Russian, and other foreign societies will attempt to do likewise? There's danger ahead! Unless there is a check to this movement the exhibitor will be forced to employ his own composer or disband his orchestra. Can you throw any additional light on the situation?

A. The Italian society is already in the field as a part of the American. Russia is not likely to enter for a long while, and so far as any danger is concerned, it would be absurd to consider it in that light. What the exhibitor must fight for is a more equitable method of collecting royalties as no one questions the duty involved in the principle.

Q. I am desirous of obtaining a novel and freak effect. Do you think an orchestra made up entirely of red-headed musicians would produce a soft amber light in the orchestra pit if direct light rays were projected upon their heads?

A. If your likes run to red-heads, by all means get them. But as you are not running a circus or side-show why collect monstrosities.

Q. Do the makers of player-pianos and automatic organs produce pictures scores in roll music form?

A. So far there has been no way discovered to make the idea practical, owing to the fact of the altered footage in a feature as it goes from theater to theater. Some day, when they invent unbreakable film, all these things will be possible.

Q. Are there such things as glass "wind" instruments? I should think glass would produce much sweeter tones than brass. And, too, the player would always be able to see the notes he was making, provided the instrument was of transparent glass. Cut glass should produce clean-cut tones.

A. This question does not fall within our jurisdiction and we refer you to your nearest jeweler.

Q. There are several scales in music which we all know, such as melodic, harmonic, etc. Is there such a scale as a major-minor scale?

A. The following definitions of major and minor scales will preclude any further misunderstanding on this subject: A major scale is one composed of five full tone and two semi-tones, the latter falling between three and four and seven and eight. A minor scale is one composed of four whole tones, two semi-tones, and a tone and a half, and the semi-tones falling in between two and three and seven and eight while the augmented second lies between six and seven.

Q. Kindly give me an idea of how to arrange my orchestra on the stage. We have just moved from our old theater across the street into a house that was formerly used for the legitimate drama and the stage is very large. I only have a small orchestra of ten pieces with piano. Is it advisable to put the piano on the stage with the orchestra;

A. We must answer your last question first in order to arrive at a reasonable result. If your piano is an upright it will obstruct the view of your screen when placed on the stage or it will be misplaced if used on either side of the orchestra. We would advise you to exchange it for a grand piano and place the same up stage and a little to the left, with the keyboard hidden from the audience. This will give the pianist an unobstructed view of the leader and at the same time allow him to play to the picture if necessary. With regard to your orchestra we would suggest that you add two more first violins and arrange to have your leader conduct with the baton, as it makes the music more impressive. The strings should be on the left of the leader and the wood-wind and brass on the right, the drums being on the extreme right. By the use of palms and other flowers placed about the stage you can make a very good showing even with such a small combination.

Q. I am a leader in a house changing pictures every day and I depend a great deal upon cue sheets. There is no similarity in the various cue sheets that I get and it is difficult in many cases to read them. Can you help me?

A. We are not in a position to suggest any relief at the present, but your problem is one that has appealed to us, and upon which we have had many complaints. This department is making every effort to force a standardization of all cue sheets, and we hope that the time is not far distant when the petty jealousies of carping caddishness will give place to a broader outlook among the various cue sheet arrangers.

Q. What can I do to overcome the nuisance of "substitutes" in my orchestra?

A. In a small town like the one in which you work it is almost impossible to avoid the "substitute" habit. No doubt you have the cream of the players in your orchestra and any society event means new faces to play the picture. You dare not lay down the law and force your men to stop the practice, as it would probably be your undoing as a leader. We believe a serious talk to the "boys" would have its effect if you used tact and clearly defined your reasons for requesting that they devote their entire time to you.

To Change Pathe Slip Claw to an In and Out Movement.

Contributed by Geo. Roy Clough, Galveston, Texas.

EXAMINE length of crank-pin throw on claws, and if more than ¾-inch on one frame remove connecting rod crank-pin cam and drill hole to fit crank-pin threads exactly 25/64-inch from center of shaft hole, as near as possible to old hole to maintain the same balance.

A ½-inch frame is 24/64-inch from center, and the extra 1/64-inch will allow for clearance between pins and film perforation when entering.

Now, to change the design of the slip claw shuttle to a pin shuttle, remove the intermittent shuttle, then remove the claw member from the shuttle by removing the small hinge pin at the bottom. File the back of claws slightly to remove the burr in riveting, then pull them out with a twisting motion. This leaves small holes in the claw member as shown in Fig. 2.

Secure at any hardware store two steel brads that will fit these holes exactly (with flat heads, if possible). Allow them to project about ¼-inch through shuttle, or slightly longer than old slip claws. Sweat the heads securely to the claw member with good clean acid and half-and-half solder, then polish with oily rag to remove all traces of acid which would tend to rust the movement.

Now secure several inches of brass spring wire, about No. 12 B. & S. Gauge and make a "U" (see Fig. 3) about ⅝-inch long and ½-inch wide at open end. File the ends square with each other, then stand on crossbar of claw member and sweat with solder to the center of the crossbar, so that connecting rod will come in exact center of under side of this inverted wire.

Now assemble the complete movement and allow the connecting rod to come inside of the loop of wire, between wire and pin shuttle crossbar. The height of the wire loop regulates the time of entering and withdrawing of pins. Adjust this until the pins enter slightly before the downward pull starts, and withdraw the instant the shuttle starts on its upward movement so as not to touch the perforation at the top. Care in this matter is very essential, but once adjusted you need not bother with it. When this change is made the film may be run backward and forward equally well, nor will the camera lose its loop and buckle when turned backward, as with the old slip claw. It is a good idea to file the under side of pins flat, and be sure that they are both in perfect line and have the same tension on the film perforations. If too long, file them off until they project through the film about 1/16-inch and dress them up with very fine emery cloth or on an oil stone until they are well rounded on the ends.

The shape of these pins has a great deal to do with the steadiness of the picture, so get them right.

The shutter may require about ⅛-inch more closing than in the case of slip claws. In threading, no attention need be paid to the pins as they will catch the first perforation which they encounter, due to the spring on shuttle. These machines can only use 2-inch lens on account of the outside shutter and, if desired, I will show an inside shutter that can be put on for about $2 worth of small gears, so that any lens of any focal length may be used.

Partial reversals of negatives have been obtained by the addition of thio-carbimide and similar reagents to the developer, but completely successful results are seldom, if ever, obtained. The writer has tried a reversal process similar to that used in the development of the Lumiere Autochrome plates, but has never succeeded in getting good, clear, high lights.

For the benefit of those who care to experiment with this interesting subject, the following details are given:

Give about twice the normal exposure required for a ful-timed negative and develop in the developer ordinarily used, until the high lights show through plainly on the back; after washing well for one minute the film may be brought out into the ordinary light of the room and the remaining operations carried on in this light. Immerse in either of the following solutions until the black negative image has completely disappeared:

Potassium Permanganate, 10% solution	1 dram
Sulphuric Acid, 10% solution by volume of 1.98 acid	5 drams
Water	5 ounces

or, use this solution:

Potassium Bichromate	100 grains
Sulphuric Acid	7 fluid drams
Water	10 ounces

The latter solution is probably preferable, as it works faster and is not so liable to stain as the permanganate. Immerse again in the developer when the positive image will develop up. Wash and dry. It is not necessary to fix in hypo, as the silver which is ordinarily dissolved out by the hypo is what forms the positive image.

Instead of the second development in developer a sepia brown positive may be obtained by using:

Sodium Sulphide, 20% solution	3 ounces
Water	20 ounces

Formulas are given for small quantities, as experiments are most economically conducted with short lengths of film of from one to four feet.

It would be of interest to the department if such of its readers who have tried any of these experiments would send an account of their results for comparison.

Sergeant Richard H. Gamble

SERGEANT RICHARD H. GAMBLE, amusement inspector for Providence, R. I., is perhaps one of the best known and liked men filling this difficult office in the East. He has filled the position for seven years, and during this time has been instrumental in effecting a closer and more harmonious relationship between his work and the exhibitors and manufacturers of moving pictures. Sergeant Gamble, who is a member of the advisory board of the National Board of Review, occupies one of those difficult positions which tax diplomacy and energy, yet he manages to pacify "cranks" and too ambitious manufacturers.

Sergeant Richard H. Gamble.

Perhaps the genial police officer has done more for the public in eliminating the "fly-by-night" moving picture manufacturer and agents than any other man in New England for his city, and has been set up as a sort of criterion for his district, which even the larger communities follow in most instances without question. He is known as square and industrious, equally ready to give the public and manufacturers a just consideration. Although crusades have been started in Providence to "clean up the city" as it relates to moving pictures he has always sat tight and watched. Invariably these so-called crusades were launched by simple-minded moralists, who believed the city was going straight to perdition because a red-blooded picture reflected life in any way.

In these instances the sergeant has refused to stop the exhibition of a picture no matter how great the demand was if he honestly believed the photoplay was not detrimental to the morals of the public. Yet, on the other hand, he would order stopped and the picture taken off if a photoplay was vulgar or revealed the seamy side of life too graphically. His popularity and success have been due wholly to this same impartiality to influence. His lectures on the duties and purpose of censorship have attracted wide attention, and he is in great demand as a speaker, for he intelligently outlines his views of the problem of his office. Although his work includes a consideration of the legitimate houses, vaudeville and cabarets, Mr. Gamble has been particularly interested in motion pictures, and has used every influence in his power to make them better and thus benefit moving picture patrons and the manufacturers as well.

Why Shea's Hippodrome Is Famous

What Manager Harold B. Franklin Does to Increase the Power of Appeal of Great Buffalo Picture House.

IN an amusement business possessing 10,000 show places covering every state and virtually every cross-roads town as well as large city in America, a man has attained an honorable estate when, offhand, well-informed persons elect to name him as being one of the ten most distinctive and resourceful managers in the country.

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, takes this rank in the opinion of men who are watching the continuous development and improvement of motion picture presentation.

Mr. Franklin is the unhampered employe of a big boss named Mike Shea—amusement man and magnate of widespread theatrical and amusement interests and a fortune with which almost anyone would be quite content. Like most big men, Mike Shea works long hours, watches the details of his many interests and loves his job. And he has followed the wise precedent of leaders in other businesses and professions by surrounding himself with able, fighting, imaginative lieutenants.

Mike Shea's lieutenant and manager of the big Hippodrome, Buffalo, is Harold B. Franklin, who, when you take his measure, would be listed as about thirty-two or three years old at top; a young man who lives and dreams "show business" and gives everything that is in him to his "house."

Franklin passed his novitiate as manager of a theater in an outlying district of Detroit. His enterprise soon won him advancement, and for two years he was solely responsible for the success attained by one of Detroit's largest downtown theaters. Later Franklin answered a call from the Lyric Theater, Buffalo, at that time one of the city's most prosperous vaudeville and picture houses. It was his splendid achievements at the Lyric that prompted Mr. Shea to obtain his services for his mammoth playhouse.

Readers of the Moving Picture World know him best perhaps through the frequent reproductions of distinctive stage sets that have found imitators all over the country and by Trade Brevities by our Buffalo correspondent that show he understands showmanship, publicity exploitation and newspaper advertising. These things that have made him talked about in the industry at large have likewise made him known to virtually everyone in Buffalo and an influence for good in his community. Stimulated by the liberal support of his chief, Mr. Shea, he is able to give the Hippodrome presentations of pictures a standard of excellence not exceeded anywhere else in America.

Has Solved Problem of Harmonizing All Elements.

Like other able managers Mr. Franklin has solved the problem of keeping his feature picture, his musical program, his lighting effects, his theater's internal atmosphere and the curiosity values of his newspaper and outdoor exploitation in tune.

A great believer in paid advertising in newspapers, Franklin knows that his basic product, the amusement he has to sell to the public, must be sound, must be clean, entertaining and challenging. Of course, this is what any and every manager is supposed to do, but there are thousands who do not; they are haphazard men.

"If I have a strong well-balanced show that is the time I call upon the big siege guns of paid newspaper advertising and publicity," says Franklin. "And I lay off to a minimum on a show that does not come up to expectations. I know that if I sell a poor show or just an average show I am doing Mr. Shea harm for his big institution. I would be destroying confidence and injuring our standing. The people of Buffalo know that when we say we have a good show at the Hippodrome it is a good show. Naturally, we try to do this every week.

"I think that one of the greatest errors showmen make is the misuse of newspapers. They are the great mediums for instant communication with the public, and the exhibitor who promotes bad shows through his local papers is doing himself harm. The boomerang always comes back.

"At the Hippodrome, having brought the public inside our theater, we take pride in what we give them. We think we have found restfulness to the eyes for our audiences in our frequent resort to most unusual stage sets—sets created for the purpose of inducing relaxation, for relieving tension and strain; sets lighted so as to be visible and effective. These sets, during recent months, have done much to strengthen the patriotic feelings of the time—sets for War Thrift Stamps; sets for the birthday weeks of our nation's founders and preservers; sets for the Liberty Loan campaigns."

Makes Theater Brighter for Comedies.

Mr. Franklin has just evolved a new plan for the presentation of screen comedies and will introduce it with Goldwyn's "Smiling Bill" Parsons Capitol Comedies and with the occasional farce comedies or melodramatic comedies in which Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand are seen—for the Hippodrome is the first-run home of Goldwyn Pictures in Buffalo.

"Laughter is contagious," explains Franklin. "If you see a man, woman or child begin to smile or laugh heartily you yourself relax. Unless you are an exceptional human being, your own inclination is to laugh or smile, for most of us react alike from the same causes. But how can you see whether some one near to you is going to laugh in darkened motion picture theaters? The answer is, lighten your house a bit when a comedy is being run; use a three-quarter light; maybe more light than that—get as much light as you can without hurting your screen values. Immediately everyone will be able to see others nearby and people will no longer keep laughs exclusively to themselves. They will share their amusement with others."

In Buffalo the amusement enterprises are fortunate in having several newspapers most friendly to all forms of amusement and especially to motion pictures. The late Edward H. Butler, owner of the Buffalo News, always was a friend of the theater, a lover of good music and a believer in the development of motion pictures. His son, Edward H. Butler, Jr., the present owner of the News, goes even farther in his loyalty to clean amusements and the dramatic and screen pages of his newspaper give liberal treatment and co-operation to the screen theaters.

William J. Connors' two big newspapers, the Buffalo Courier and the Buffalo Enquirer, devote a great amount of space to pictures, and their intelligent assistance has caused the managers of Buffalo to repay these properties and the News liberally in the form of paid advertising space. Norman E. Mack, owner of the Buffalo Times, also gives liberal space to motion pictures of worth in his daily and in his widely-read Sunday edition.

Buffalo is not a city of distinctive looking newspaper advertising. A great deal of the copy is formal billing in which "human interest" is ignored. The local inclination is to rely largely upon type advertisements instead of upon illustrated copy. But it will not be surprising in the near future to find Shea's Hippodrome taking the lead for perfection copy and giving to "the look" of the house advertising the same individuality that its successful stage settings have had. In fact, Mr. Franklin predicts that this innovation will soon be under way.

Goldwyn Takes Horace Greeley's Advice

President Goldfish Announces in Los Angeles the Coming Removal of Company's Stars to Coast.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is in Los Angeles to arrange for the purchase or erection of a great studio in Los Angeles and the removal of all of Goldwyn's stars and producing activities to the coast. Goldwyn is the last picture plant of the first magnitude left in the east. In confirming the reports of the early advent of the Goldwyn forces Mr. Goldfish said:

"You will recall that when I formed and conducted the Lasky Company my first move after its organization was to send Cecil De Mille here with $20,000, which constituted a larger percentage of our available capital than I care to think about at this late date.

"From the day that I organized Goldwyn I have intended to come out here to attain our fullest expansion and to bring with me many of the able and brilliant men and women associated with Goldwyn.

"You will soon have with you in Los Angeles, for example, Rex Beach, one of our country's most popular authors. Where the previous policy has been to make one or perhaps two Rex Beach productions annually, there will be hereafter a series of Rex Beach production a year—four to six of them."

Mr. Goldfish then referred to the expansion of Goldwyn's program, details of which were printed in last week's World the making of six productions with Geraldine Farrar, of eight productions annually by Pauline Frederick, and of the same number by Mabel Normand, by Madge Kennedy, and by Mae Marsh, as well as by a male star as yet unnamed.

"So you see from this that Goldwyn can forecast more than forty productions next year of its own making," concluded Mr. Goldfish, "and there are likely to be still more in addition to worthy independent productions which we will distribute for other concerns, as we are equipped to distribute any productions of a high standard."

Soldiers Constitute New Audience Type

Captain Warwick, Back From France, Graphically Describes Attitude of Fighters When in Theater.

CAPTAIN ROBERT WARWICK, who recently returned from the front in France, and whose last film production, "The Accidental Honeymoon" is now scoring a hit, told the other day in a graphic way of the effect various forms of entertainment—especially pictures—have on our boys "over there."

"The war," said Captain Warwick, "has created a new type of audience, and the privilege of watching our soldier boys enthuse over the entertainment provided them has afforded me the keenest pleasure. I had thought that I was acquainted with audiences of all sorts, but these soldier-audiences are distinctly different and that is why I say the war has created a new type of audience.

"In the first place, the soldiers, without any exception, go to these shows with a determination to be pleased. They are less critical than audiences are wont to be, for the hardships of war have taught them to appreciate. They magnify the fine points of a picture and they minimize the occasional flaws if they notice them at all.

"But whether it is romance, tragedy or comedy that is unfolded before them they follow it all with an interest that is intense. Whether the actor appears in his physical being or only in his screen impersonation he receives an undivided attention which is the highest tribute an audience can pay.

"With the atmosphere of war around them, with mental visions of the battlefield ever present with them and the imaginary din of artillery ever ringing in their ears, entertainment to the soldier means in an exalted way rest, surcease from worry and partial forgetfulness of the things which are so abhorrent and so terrible. For that reason it is not to be wondered at that the soldier-audience is strangely emotional.

"When the simple home scenes are thrown upon the screen more than one brown sleeve is drawn surreptitiously across the eyes and a shame-faced soldier looks sheepishly toward his companion to see if the evidence of weakness has been noticed. The chances are that the companion has been guilty of the same weakness and, perhaps, he in turn gazes at his friend and their eyes meet in a message of understanding.

"Anything that carries the soldier boy's thoughts back home to the mother and father, to the sweetheart—causes a quietude to settle over the audience which is akin to the quietude of the room where death has just entered. But the next moment the scene may be one to arouse the patriotism of the boys in uniform and then the enthusiasm is unlimited.

"No one can measure the good accomplished by the entertainments arranged for our boys. They make them better men and better soldiers; they soften their hearts for the moment only to give them a firm grip on their weapons in the battle of the morrow; they fill them with a new desire for home-life, the peaceful joys of life and love, but they give them a new determination to die if necessary for the cause of world-democracy."

No Stock Salesmen for Affiliated

Success of Distributing Organization Due in Part to Exclusive Use of Exhibitor Organizers, Pettijohn Says.

ANNOUNCEMENT that six more states: Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada and Wyoming, have subscribed their quota for membership in the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, brought forth the statement from C. C. Pettijohn, General Counsel of the organization, that one of the reasons for the remarkable progress of the new unit is the fact that it is being presented solely by exhibitors.

"The Affiliated is a case of exhibitors only, even to the organization of the booking units comprising it," said Mr. Pettijohn. There are no stock salesmen on the payroll of the organization. Our feeling is that groups of exhibitors prefer having an exhibitor's proposition presented to them by exhibitors.

"The exhibitors doing this organization work are giving their time and energy to the movement, because they believe in it. Outside of the fairness such organization methods insure, they represent an enormous saving to the exhibiting branch of the industry. A large staff of high-salaried stock salesmen runs into several thousand dollars a week. As usual, the exhibitors pay the freight, either in an out-and-out assessment on their stock for promotion expenses, or through a cut-in on the profits that stock should earn. Under the Affiliated plan, every dollar invested by the exhibitor goes for the single purpose of obtaining better pictures, at lower prices. Not a penny of it can be touched for organization or promotion expenses."

The Intermountain states which have just completed their quota were organized by Byron Park of Salt Lake City, the secretary of the exhibitors' committee, which drafted the Affiliated plan of operation. Following the election of officers of the booking association in these states, Mr. Park will go to Nebraska and Iowa to organize the association in those states. In the meantime, Fred Herrington, having gotten the Pittsburgh territory underway, is devoting his efforts to the organization of the Kansas City and St. Louis territories and early in June he will go to Oklahoma.

Frank Rembusch has the Indiana interests so well lined up that this week he is helping Ohio exhibitors in the organization of a Cincinnati Unit. Messrs. Hopp and Frank, of Chicago, in addition to completing the subscription of the Association for Illinois, are lending their efforts to the organization of the Wisconsin exhibitors.

In the East, John Manheimer, president of the Manhattan Local of the M. P. Exhibitors' League, is assisting in the organization of the New York State Association, spending most of his time in Buffalo, while Sydney S. Cohen, the president of the New York State League, is working with the Philadelphia exhibitors.

Mr. Pettijohn left New York Tuesday for a swing around the circle of the associations already organized or in process of completion. He stated that twenty-six states were lined up to the extent of all or more than three-quarters of their quota of booking days. In some cases, as in Chicago, this quota, had been voluntarily increased by the exhibitors.

Emile Chautard Renews Contract

EMILE CHAUTARD, the noted French motion picture producer, has made a long-term contract to direct Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Mr. Chautard is one of the prominent figures in the producing field. Recent pictures produced by him are "Magda," "Marionettes" and "The House of Glass," with Clara Kimball Young; "The Eternal Temptress," a Paramount picture, featuring Lina Cavalieri; "The Ordeal of Rosetta," with Alice Brady, and "Her Final Reckoning," starring Pauline Frederick, a Paramount picture just completed. Mr. Chautard will direct Miss Frederick in her next picture.

Emile Chautard.

The director has been a life-long student of drama, and was a well-known actor on the continent before associating himself with the silent drama. He played the role of Napoleon 1,600 times in "Madame Sans Gene" with Madame Rejane, with whom he was leading man for many years. Among other well-known plays produced in France in which he played the leading roles are "La Gamine," "Le Scandale," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "A Doll's House," "Divorcons" and "Alsace."

Mr. Chautard also acted as general manager and stage director of the Rejane theater in Paris, and was the producing director of the Renaissance theater and the Gymnase theater, staging the productions of great actors. He left the stage to become producing director for the French Eclair Company, and his artistic work attracted attention.

MOSES VISITS THE OLD HOME TOWN.

Vivian M. Moses, director of publicity for Select Pictures, left May 15 for a twelve-day vacation. The illness of his mother gave him the needed impetus and he left New York for the quiet confines of Sumter, S..C., his old home town.

In this, his first visit in several years, he will be joined by Mrs. Moses, who is attached to the personal division of the Fuel Administration at Washington. After their visit Mr. Moses is coming to "burn up the track" at Select, while his wife will go back to picking the nation's coal-savers.

Educational's Navy Film Nearly Ready

Will Show Jack Afloat and Ashore, at Work and at Play—Illustrates Submarine Fighting.

THE Educational Films Corporation's great feature, illustrating the war activities of the Navy, is being rapidly put in shape for presentation at a Broadway theater early in June. After this pre-release, the spectacle will be distributed direct to the exhibitors of the New York district. Outside of New York "Your Fighting Navy" will be sold on the state right plan.

"Your Fighting Navy" will differ from all previous Navy films in the uptodateness of the material, the accuracy of the information conveyed in the captions, and the "punch" of the big scenes, which are not allowed to drag but tell the story in terse flashes. It is believed the submarine fighting, smoke screen work and the torpedo destroyer work have never been more graphically illustrated than in this picture.

Scene from "Your Fighting Navy at Work and Play" (Educational).

Another pleasing novelty is the careful alternation of grave and gay.

The bluejackets are shown as their friends, relatives and admirers would like to see them. Every part of the twenty-four hours of the day aboard the fighting fleet is vividly represented. Jack afloat and ashore is shown as the likable, human, alert and efficient chap that he is. Furthermore, each of the reels is said to end in a big sweeping climax that will aid the patriotic cause so dear to every American heart.

"The Kaiser" Hits Snag in Havana

Local Official Causes Indignation When He Orders Removal of Illuminated Sign.

THE Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," will be presented in Havana, Cuba, only after a determined fight against pro-Germanism. It is apparent the pro-Germans have a strong organization which reaches, possibly through devious channels, into official circles in Cuba. So strong are the pro-Germans that they have forced the removal of an electric sign in front of a local theater. The sign read: "Biggest attraction ever presented. Coming, 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin.'"

The sign had been ordered erected by B. Lichtig, Havana manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is handling the Jewel Production there. It was illuminated for only a few moments when Mr. Lichtig received notice that the sign would have to come down. As the notice was official down it came, and it has not been replaced.

President Menocal, of Cuba, is said to be taking a personal interest in the investigation as to why the local authorities in a Cuban city should feel sympathetic toward the Kaiser when Cuba is fighting beside the rest of the Allies.

Havana newspapers are a unit in labeling the removal as an outrage. All of them are carrying daily stories demanding of the authorities to know the reason why the Kaiser should receive any consideration.

The Havana Anti-German League, which numbers among its members several Cuban senators, has started an official investigation and threatens internment or deportation to the person responsible for the original order that caused the removal of "The Kaiser" sign.

Salesmen Must Push All Propaganda Films

Joe Brandt, of Universal, Starting on Country-wide Trip, Says That Is Policy of Company.

JOE Brandt, assistant treasurer and in charge of exchanges of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, on Monday, May 20, started on a trip which when completed will cover the United States and include a visit to every exchange owned or controlled by the Laemmle organization.

The purposes of the trip are manifold. Mr. Brandt first expects to become personally acquainted with every member of the sales force, many of whom he never has met owing to organization changes caused by war necessities. He also will instruct the entire personnel of the organization as to what is expected of them in assisting the government to win the war. In commenting upon this phase of his instructions before leaving New York, Mr. Brandt said:

"President Laemmle feels that the first duty of every employee of Universal is to do everything in his power to help the Allies win this war. To accomplish this, patriotism must be placed before business and personal ends. This fact naturally upsets many selling precedents especially in the film business.

"There are many good war propaganda pictures on the market. One of the best, 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' is being rented through Universal Exchanges throughout the country.

"But there are several other splendid war propaganda pictures being released by other companies. The American public should see them.

"One thing the members of our sales organization must do is to promote the rentals of all of these war propaganda pictures. It doesn't make any difference to Universal if it is 'The Kaiser' or some picture released by another distributor, if the picture brings home to the American people the necessity of standing squarely behind our armies at the front, the picture must be promoted."

Another duty of Mr. Brandt during the present trip is to explain to members of the Universal organization the significance of the move which went into effect on May 20 by which all Universal controlled exchanges were taken over by the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. This is an efficiency move aimed to do away with much overhead, but without materially changing the personnel of the organization.

During his trip Mr. Brandt also probably will employ capable publicity and sales promotion men, one of whom will be attached to each of the more important branch exchanges.

"The Romance of Coal" Under Way

Company to Go to West Virginia in June for Making of Big Educational Subject.

DIRECTOR Frederick A. Thomson started production work on "The Romance of Coal" for the Educational Films Corporation May 27, having engaged Harry Lyon as head photographer and Charles Chapman as technical director. Two or three of the principals are yet to be engaged. The last week in May and the first week in June were to be devoted to staging a few interiors for the one or two scenes of the play laid in New York City. The company will go to Charleston, W. Va., not later than June 15. The scenario is practically complete.

Director Thomson is familiarly known as "Bing" Thomson. His energy has been tried in many fields, in each of which his Scottish genius has achieved something worth while. Harry W. Lyon, the official photographer of the Educational's "Romance of Coal" expedition, is a graduate of Yale University, Class of 1899. He practiced photography from early youth, in fact, made his way through college by earnings from it, and then returned after graduation to the same vocation from the sheer love of it.

The technical director of "The Romance of Coal," Charles Chapman, occupied a similar position with the Vitagraph for twelve years. He is an indefatigable student of costume, scenery, furnishings, properties and all that relates to the outward dress of a picture.

"CECILIA" TO BE RELEASED JUNE 3.

Announcement is made by the Marion Davies Film Company that its first picture just completed, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," starring Miss Davies, will be released through the Graphic Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, on June 3. The production is booked for simultaneous exhibition at all the Marcus Loew theaters of Greater New York.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

WHO better than a soldier who volunteered—beat his draft board to it by several hundred numbers—may express an opinion upon the possible results of war on the Well Known Industry? Especially if that same young man had, previous to enlisting, reviewed pictures by the score and won an excellent reputation as a result of his good judgment and fairness. We venture to opine that Ben Grimm has a right to his "say."

The following contribution was written nearly three months ago. The former film reviewer for the Moving Picture World had been sent to Kodak Park, Rochester, there to be trained as an aerial photographer and map-maker. Ben is not in Rochester now—he has gone forth to practice what he was "teached." He had previously been in training along the Jersey Shore, in preliminary work.

Ben's contribution has been kept waiting until the psychological time had arrived for its release. We think that time is now. Manufacturers of motion pictures who read anything except the outgivings of their own publicists will find the expressed opinions of Ben Grimm worth while. Go to it.

"Sometimes, when I have time to think, I wonder what effect the war is going to have on the screen. I believe that it is going to have a great and, if I must say it, a revolutionary effect on motion pictures. It cannot help having such an effect. It seems to me that people these days think, act, breathe and live nothing but war—that the composite mind has come to cast aside many of the superficialities that formerly seemed so highly important to life.

"If you observe you can see the changing attitude on all sides. Even the short time I have been in camp near a city has shown me that folks are really different than they used to be. As far as being in touch with the world is concerned I have been virtually a hermit for six months, and brushing up against people in civilian clothes has opened my eyes to the change of attitude.

"Last night I was on a street car coming home from a picture show. Just to prove it to myself I found that more than half the people in the car were talking about war. It was not that way a year ago. When last I pushed my curiosity to the point where I was bold enough to eavesdrop to learn what occupied peoples' minds, I found that the percentage was about one in twenty who had a serious line of conversation. That was in the subway last summer. I merely mention the two incidents to show you how things have changed.

"And I feel certain that the composite mind is going to change even more within the next few months. So far we have been only preparing for our part in 'The Big Show.' But as soon as the Hellhounds turn loose on Americans in earnest the people of this country are going to drop their frivolishness and live in earnest. They are going to be made to think—and their minds are going to require more stimulation at their motion pictures than they have been receiving.

"What form that stimulation is going to take I do not know. I do know, though, that Susie, who has been working at a factory all day, and who has not heard from her brother in France for four months, is not going to be satisfied with five reels of mushy nothingness when she goes to a show. She want something deep—something that 'has guts.' Until now her world has been made up of romance—the things she saw happen to other people on the screen were 'only stories anyway.' But now something is happening to her—to her, Susie Brown, who is known perhaps only by her number at the factory.

"The war is going to make individuals of all of us. The Susie Browns, who up until now never had anything exciting happen to them, are going to know and feel the emotions they have seen interpreted so often by their favorite actress. And that is going to change them mentally. The Susie Browns are going to be individuals, not numbers. They are going to pass through phases of life that make them realize that they have been chasing phantoms—that they have found the end of the rainbow and found it dross—that they are real human beings. And, being human beings, the Susie Browns are not going to be satisfied with the load of junky superficiality some of the producers have been inflicting on them."

"Hook up with your bookseller" is kept standing as advice to exhibitors. If the prospective ticket-purchaser first reads the book he will not want to see the picture. If the prospective purchaser sees the picture first he will not want to buy the book. The only way for an absolutely 50-50 break would be to buy the book and read it while the story is being pictured upon the screen.

Plenty of Petrova Poetry.

Bert Ennis is authority for the carbon-copy statement that "Madame Olga Petrova is the recipient daily of many hundreds of letters from movie fans in all parts of the United States. Among the many novel, pathetic, humorous and interesting communications received by her, a real piece of literature or poetry is often discovered."

The poem appended and which was dedicated to Madame Petrova by May K. Terry, No. 500 First street, Brooklyn, N. Y., is submitted by Petrova Publicity as possessing "real lyric qualifications"—whatever that is:

I watch your ever changing moods
In wonder, as from time to time
Upon the screen I see revealed
The perfect art of pantomime.
Your eyes reflect each inmost thought
Each great emotion you portray
And every move of grace
Express far more than words could say.

There's fascination in your smile,
There's magic in your depth of power,
And shining from those wondrous eyes
A deep sweet love for child or flower.
You've risen in the realms of art,
You've known renown and world-wide fame
Success be ever yours to reach
That goal for which you aim.

We have printed the foregoing poem, if such it be, in the hope that someone will send us a better example of really poor verse. We would, ourselves, write a sonnet to the right side of Petrova's face if we ever saw it in print—a threat that will probably keep her turning her left cheek to our view (as usual) for some time to come.

Famous Reviewer Lured to Screen.

Joseph Limerick Kelley, one of the most conscientious writers that ever told an exhibitor a picture was good for a two-day run, began leading a double life Saturday afternoon, May 25, when "Cecelia of the Pink Roses" was shown to other reviewers at the New York roof. Mr. Kelley was then revealed as a camera actor in support of Marion Davies, star of the Ben Atwell press-agented production.

A large and excited assemblage of his fellow reviewers marked the showing by their critical presence and "a good time was had by all." Never before in all his experience did The Rambler so yearn to be a film reviewer—that there might at least be one complete and full exposure of Mr. Kelley's jaunty artistry in gamboling on the screen. It was a great day for the man who invented Kelley pool.

Stenographer Saves Brother Joseph.

Joseph Doyle, of No. 1817 Morris avenue, the Bronx, declares that he owes the fact that he is visiting there at the home of his parents instead of being held in an internment camp in Canada to a letterhead of "The Eagle's Eye," the screen serial by William J. Flynn, the recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service.

Joseph and his brother William arrived at their home in the Bronx from Canada last Saturday. Both are of draft age. Joseph was in Canada at the time of registration, and following advices of the American Consul there did not register in the Canadian enrollment on the ground that he was merely a visitor in the country.

William joined him there later after he was exempted by the local draft board in the Bronx. They had no trouble getting passports, but the one given Joseph got him into trougle at the border. It described him as a resident of Canada and immediately the authorities wanted his registration card. When he could produce none he was placed under arrest.

He was searched and was on his way to a detention pen when one of the immigration authorities who had been searching through the young man's possessions called for him to be returned. When Doyle was once more before him he saw the official was holding a letter on the stationery of "The Eagle's Eye." ,

"Do you know Chief Flynn?" he was asked.

"No," answered Doyle, "but my sister is a stenographer for the Wharton Releasing Corporation, which is producing his motion picture."

His questioner reflected for a moment and then told Doyle to have a seat. Joseph sat. Doyle doesn't know yet what was done, but in about half an hour he was told that he was free to cross the border.

Gertrude McCoy's Busy Week-End.

On Saturday afternoon, May 18, at 3 p. m., Gertrude McCoy, of the Paramount-Artcraft forces, reached Baltimore as the guest of Manager Weber, of the Gertrude McCoy theater, and remained over Sunday and Monday. On the first day of her visit Miss McCoy appeared personally at the theater named in her honor, in conjunction with the showing of Maeterlink's "The Blue Bird," in which she has the character of Light, and made a short speech after each performance and then greeted the patrons of the house.

For Sunday Mr. Weber made arrangements to take Miss McCoy to Camp Meade, where she was the guest of one of the Colonels and while there appeared at the main Knights of Columbus hall in a vaudeville show and then made a stirring, patriotic address to the assembled soldiers. "The Blue Bird" was also shown while she was there, through the activities of Mr. Weber.

On Monday she again appeared at the Gertrude McCoy theater and at night she aided the drive for selling War Savings Stamps at the corner of Baltimore and Holiday streets, where, mounted on the wooden tank "Thrift," which was built to aid the drive, she sold flowers, one to each purchaser, for $50. A picture of the girl on the tank was taken and eighteen people subscribed $50 each to get one. The total amount of the subscriptions was $3,500.

Miss McCoy stated to the correspondent of the Moving Picture World that she has been in touch with the Woman's War Relief of New York for some time and has made application to go to France as an ambulance driver. She appeared very anxious to go "over there."

Stuffed Lions To Advertise Feature.

A unique method of advertising Marie Walcamp in "The Lion's Claws," was arranged by Pierce and Scheck, the pioneer film men of Baltimore, for their Grand theater at Baltimore and Holiday streets, one of the chain of theaters operated by them in that city. Recently when this feature was run at the Grand Philip Scheck conceived the idea of placing a cage of stuffed lions in front of the theater to attract attention. He saw the mother lion and the cubs advertised in a department store for $25 and after purchasing them had his boys at the Leader Theater make the cage out of old broomsticks and a couple of boards. He has made arrangements for the display to be used at other theaters in Baltimore booking the feature. In the photo are shown John Scheck, manager of the Grand, and George Mathews, with Pierce and Scheck.

Not only are special articles by Hearst's most important special writers to appear as the film is shown locally, but there is a series of strong art features by Nell Brinkley, Hal Coffman and other people of the drawing-board enlisted to put "Moral Suicide" on the map of big-punch hits.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Fox to Exploit Bara-Farnum Reissues as "The Big Six"

THEDA BARA'S famous vampire production, "A Fool There Was," is to head the list of the Bara and William Farnum subjects that Fox will release in re-edited and revised form beginning in June. The statement from the Fox offices says the pictures, for which Mr. Fox has adopted the official slogan of "The Bix Six of 1918," will be issued in the following order: "A Fool There Was," "The Bondman," "The Clemenceau Case," "The Plunderer," "The Two Orphans," and "A Soldier's Oath."

"As is apparent from the list," the statement continues, "the Bara and Farnum dramas are alternated. We have not yet decided definitely just when the first of these Bara productions is to go out, but the date depends largely upon the time when the new matter for their exploitation is finished.

"We are not only having them completely revised by Miss Hettie Gray Baker, the editor of our productions, but we are preparing entirely new lithographs, new lobby displays, new slides, new cuts, new mats and new press matter.

"Our branch offices are going to conduct a vigorous campaign on 'The Big Six' and, incidentally, we plan to make that slogan known well throughout the film world. Their efforts will be backed up by the home office by extensive advertising and publicity.

"We desire to call the attention of exhibitors everywhere to the fact that each of the six photoplays, in its 1918 version, is to be released in five reels. This should make them even snappier and brighter and faster-moving than in their original form."

Universal to Star Polo in Big Circus Serial

BOYS from six to sixty to whom the odor of the sawdust ring, the blare of the ballyhoo band, and the shout of the peanut vendor are either present day realities or treasured memories will hail with delight the reappearance of their idol, Eddie Polo, in a big circus serial that is in course of preparation at Universal City under the supervision of Director J. P. McGowan.

For Polo it will be but a flash-back to a few years ago when he was starred performer "under the big top," and many of the thrills that will be reproduced in the various episodes of the serial will be merely pages lifted from the diary he kept while trouping under canvas.

Polo broke into screen limelight three years ago in "The Campbells Are Coming," when he gave to photoplay fans the first of a series of athletic stunts.

While Polo's work has been largely confined to serial work he has appeared in a number of features that have shown his versatility and ability to act as well as perform feats of daring. Notable among these were "Onda of the Orient" and "Behind the Lines."

His work with Marie Walcamp in "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," as well as the following serial, "The Bulls' Eye," is still pointed to.

Newspaper Atmosphere in Ray Story.

Every newspaper man from cub reporter to managing editor will appreciate "His Own Home Town," Charles Ray's newest Paramount picture, from Larry Evans' story, directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, because it contains enough of the characteristic "graft" quality to prove entertaining and evoke memories of big "stories" that have broken in the past.

Every small town has its "Tweed Ring" in little. However small the circle, it is generally successful in a measure and for a time, in encompassing all the good people of the village. Such a ring exists in this picture, which Thomas H. Ince supervised and now presents for the edification of Paramount patrons.

Truex to be "Opposite" to Miss Shirley Mason

ERNEST TRUEX, juvenile actor, has been engaged to play opposite and to be featured with Shirley Mason in the John Emerson-Anita Loos productions, which will be released under the Paramount trade-mark.

Ernest Truex is the youngest comedy star on the speaking stage. One of the biggest hits of his career was scored in "The Very Idea," which closed recently at the Astor theater after a long run. He is now on tour with a new comedy, "What Could the Poor Girl Do?" Other vehicles in which Truex added notably to his prestige were "Very Good Eddie," "The Dummy" and "The Good Little Devil."

The comedian received his first dramatic training when a baby, and his first public performance was given as he had just reached his fifth birthday. Little Ernest and another infant phenomenon, Helen Fairbanks, then went on tour under the management of Mrs. Truex.

Truex appeared in the title role of "A Good Little Devil," produced by David Belasco. This was the production in which Mary Pickford appeared. The same roles were played by Truex and "Little Mary" in the Famous Players screen adaptation, and Truex also had an important part in "Caprice," another Mary Pickford photoplay.

The comedian is five feet one inch in height, and Shirley Mason is a trifle below five feet, making them well matched for the vivacious photoplays in which they will appear together under the direction of John Emerson. Work on these pictures will be commenced shortly.

Animated "Gets" Cement Steamship.

America's first "stone" steamship has proved a success. The suggestion of a "stone" vessel seems ridiculous at first to the mind of the layman. "Stone won't float," he says. True, and neither will steel or iron, yet steel steamships traverse the ocean lanes every day. That "stone" ships not only float but make considerable speed is well proven by Universal Animated Weekly No. 24, where pictures of the trial runs of the Faith, the only large concrete vessel is the world, are shown. The Faith, in the opinion of shipbuilding experts, has solved the problem of lumber in ship construction. With the demonstrated success of the concrete ship America has immediately set about building many more.

Another Rupert Julian Picture Coming.

Exhibitors throughout the country who have added to their bank accounts through the presentation of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which was directed by Rupert Julian, and in which he picturized the Kaiser, will have an opportunity to capitalize on the popularity of the star by booking "Midnight Madness," which will be released by Bluebird on June 3. The picture was directed by Julian. He was just about to finish it when work was stopped in order that he might play in and produce "The Kaiser."

Ruth Clifford plays the leading role. She has the support of Harry Von Meter, Harry Holden, and Louis Willoughby. "Midnight Madness" is a mystery story.

Eleventh Episode of "Lion's Claws" Leads Universal

FOR the first time in several months the release list as issued weekly by the Universal Film Company for the week of June 10 lists but one serial episode, that is the eleventh episode of "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp.

The final, or eighteenth, episode of "The Bull's Eye" had its presentation in the first-run houses during the week of June 3. Universal failed to schedule another serial to follow "The Bull's Eye" in place of the usual second serial, scheduling the two-reel western drama, "Play Straight or Fight."

"Merry Mermaids," a two-reel L-KO comedy, in which the L-KO beauties are given unsual prominence, also appears on the schedule for June 10. The comedy revolves around a swimming-school tank, on the edge of which the mermaids disport attired in the latest bathing costumes, the creation of American makers who have been thrown on their own resources as designers since the war shut off the Paris modes.

"Stepping Some," a Lyons-Moran one-reeler, according to Universal, is strong enough to help along any feature. It is the unfortunate mix-up of a commission man who has to use his own wife to entertain an out-of-town buyer. The commission man then has to entertain a visiting female buyer. Of course both parties go to the same cabaret with the usual family row resultant.

The third comedy on the list is a Nestor, with Gale Henry and William Franey, entitled "Butter Again."

The usual split-reel subjects, consisting of the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Screen Magazine and Universal Current Events complete the regular releases for the week.

Higher Thought Stuff In Coming Fisher Comedy

THE American-Mutual production starring Margarita Fisher, "A Square Deal," was adapted to the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney from a story by Albert Payson Terhune. As a magazine story it attracted wide attention. It will be released June 10.

Miss Fisher gives an unaffected portrayal of a type that has achieved more or less notoriety of late, a young girl who finds home tedious and seeks diversion in the dubious society of a "Higher Thought" clique. There is some similarity in the theme to that of Charpentier's opera, "Louise," with the exception that the setting is an American one and the ending happy.

The direction was in the hands of Lloyd Ingraham. Jack Mower plays the lead, that of the young husband, and does some excellent work. Others in the cast are Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Louis M. Wells and Nanine Wright.

Romantic Drama Picked for Lockwood.

To obtain the exterior scenes for his newest Metro starring vehicle, "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama based on Henry Kitchell Webster's novel of that name, Harold Lockwood with his director, Fred J. Balshofer, and members of his supporting cast, will leave the Hollywood studio this week for a location off the Pacific Coast near Monterey, California.

The locale is an island in the semi-tropics which is being developed under the supervision of a former New York newspaper reporter for a syndicate of Wall Street promoters. In spite of its military title, "A King in Khaki" does not bear on the war either directly or indirectly. It is a drama of romance which begets its title from the king of the island, whose habitual dress is khaki. The role of the picturesque, khaki-clad Smith will be played by Mr. Lockwood.

Locomotive Upsets Film Players.

Three young women members of the Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy companies were injured recently when a locomotive struck a wagon in which they were riding during the filming of a picture. Miss Sylvia Day suffered bruises on the arms, and the Misses Betty Carpenter and Mary Eccleston were bruised about the body and legs. All three were hurled from the wagon.

Pathe Shows Thrills of Allied U-Boat Hunters

THE thrilling life of the Allied U-boat hunters is graphically portrayed in "With the Drifters and Mine-sweepers in the Danger Zone," the gripping Official British War Picture released exclusively through Pathe on June 9. This remarkable picture is the fifth of Pathe's "Britain's Bulwarks" series of official scenes from all phases of the great world war. The opening scene shows the "sea dogs" who man the drifters and mine-sweepers. Next we see the two kinds of mines sown within the submarine zone.

Included in the feature are scenes of the British destroyer leaders, which act in close co-operation with the drifters and mine sweepers. Two of these famous destroyers, "Swift," and "Broke," are shown.

Mary MacLaren to Make "Bread."

"Bread" is the tentative title of Mary MacLaren's latest Universal special feature production, work on which has begun at Universal City under the direction of Ida May Park. Evelyn Campbell, who wrote the story, has shown what tremendous effect on humanity may be brought about through such a simple atom as a loaf of bread. Kenneth Harlan and Edward Cecil will have the principal masculine roles, while Gladys Fox and Louis Morrison also have important parts.

"The Spawn" Is After-the-War Story.

A daring theme is followed in "The Spawn," a new Bluebird photoplay, in which Grace Cunard stars under the direction of Joseph de Grasse. The play deals with conditions as the author assumes they will be after the war. A diversity of opinion as to the attitude of the allies toward the Beast of Berlin when peace is restored makes "The Spawn" a photodrama to which great interest is directed.

Three Boroughs House Fox Studios.

The recent use by an editor of the term Fox's "Eastern studios" as synonymous with William Fox's "New Jersey studios" moves the company to call attention to the fact that three boroughs of New York City house Fox studios; also there are companies engaged at the several New Jersey plants.

The Fox organization is said to be the only one that has this distinction, and Mr. Fox points to it as one sign of the steady expansion that is taking place in the East as well as the West.

"Her Final Reckoning" Completed.

Emile Chautard has just finished "Her Final Reckoning," the famous director's first production for Paramount release, providing Pauline Frederick with a starring vehicle of intense emotionalism. The character she portrays is a creature of moods, inheriting a passionate nature from her gypsy mother which is disclosed in her love of outdoor life, and her partiality to wandering gypsy bands whose wild music touched responsive chords in her heart.

The hundred thousand feet of film taken for "Love's Conquest," the Paramount picture starring Lina Cavalieri, has been trimmed to about fifteen thousand, and Director Edward Jose is engaged in cutting it down to its final length.

Hodkinson Service Scores on East Side.

The Meyer & Sneider Circuit, controlling a large number of houses on the east side of New York, has written an enthusiastic letter to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in reference to Paralta Plays. The circuit claims unqualified success with the Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, and Henry B. Walthall productions in all its houses.

"The Girl and the Graft" (O. Henry).

Another trio of popular players is featured in an O. Henry story, "The Girl and the Graft," released this week by General Film. Edward Earle, Florence Dishon, and Adele De Garde are the principals in this sprightly story of New York life. The surprise ending adds greatly to the strength of the tale.

Hart Finishes "Shark Monroe."

"Shark Monroe," William S. Hart's latest Ince-Artcraft picture, is at last completed, after numerous delays occasioned by the star's Governmental service for the Liberty Loan. Katherine MacDonald, who appeared as his leading woman in "Shark Monroe," will again fill that post in his next picture.

Julian Directing Ruth Clifford.

Rupert Julian, creator of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," is now directing Ruth Clifford, Zoe Rae and Kenneth Harlan in a southern romance, similar to "A Kentucky Cinderella," in which Ruth Clifford made her first big Bluebird hit.

Pathe's New Serial "Hands Up" Combines Old and New

PATHE announces that the next serial of the big distributing company will be "Hands Up," produced by the Astra Film Corporation, story by Gilson Willets, scenario by Jack Cunningham, and starring Ruth Roland with George Chesebro as the hero. "Hands Up" is a western story dealing with a field of motion picture material not yet touched for the screen—the traditions and legends of the Inca Indians with a modern story of romance and adventure. The cast further includes Easter Walters, Geore Gebhardt and William A. Carroll. James Hall, who produced the "Bull's Eye," will direct.

It is stated that "Hands Up" will be a most elaborately and expensively produced western serial and that it has a story of real literary value.

Gilson Willets in preparing the story of the serial has made a minute investigation of the material with which he has worked. His ability as a builder of fiction assures a story of love and romance that will have as wide an appeal as his many works have had. Ruth Roland, the star of "Hands Up," won the hearts of countless screen enthusiasts by her work in "Who Pays," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife," also in several five-reel features released by Pathe.

George Chesebro will be remembered for his recent work in "Broadway, Arizona." He played lead with Olive Thomas for many months, also with Mae Murray, Dorothy Philips and others. Before his present engagement for "Hands Up" he was leading man with Viola Dana.

Easter Walters, because of her expert skill in various fields of athletics, was engaged by Louis J. Gasnier to play one of the principal parts in the serial. Miss Walters "photographs like a million dollars."

George Gebhart is known as the greatest portrayer of Indian characters on the screen. Like Mr. Gebhart, William A. Carroll grew up in the show business. He has a wide range of work and has appeared in many notable films.

Bud Fisher Puts Over Novelty in a Cartoon

The greatest success that has attended the release of any of Bud Fisher's animated Mutt and Jeff cartoons thus far, according to a statement by an official of the Fox Film Corporation, through whose exchanges they are now being distributed, is that scored by "A Fisherless Cartoon," issued a fortnight ago. The picture is "a cartoon within a cartoon" and recites in clever pen-and-ink drawings the efforts of the genial Mutt and Jeff to make a cartoon without the aid of their creator, Bud Fisher.

The statement says that the contract department at the Fox headquarters has received many letters and telegrams from exhibitors complimenting the Fox offices on the novelty and the originality of the subject and appreciating the extra footage that the film carries.

The picture, it is explained, runs about 650 feet—150 feet longer than the usual Mutt and Jeff. It had drawn extraordinary attention from the public and the exhibitor because it is believed to be the first that has shown the difficulties with which an artist making animated cartoons has to contend.

The artist's troubles are dealt with in humorous vein, of course, but the seriousness of the problem is there, nevertheless. Few persons realize that it requires thousands of individual sketches for the material from which an animated cartoon is derived.

"Not the least of the several good twists in 'A Fisherless Cartoon,'" the statement continues, "is the effect that is obtained when the cartoon that Mutt and Jeff have drawn is shown on the screen—all within the cartoon.

"When Mr. Fox took over the releasing of the Bud Fisher's work, he promised that the pictures would be funnier than ever. That is a promise that has been kept faithfully—and the cartoons for June are the most enjoyable group we have had for any month. We are particularly gratified to find, upon examination of our contracts, that the cartoons are being booked equally by the large downtown theater and the small neighborhood house."

Select's "Over There" Fits Red Cross Work

In the week of the second war drive of the American Red Cross, when every exhibitor was doing his utmost to enlist the sympathy of his patrons for this noblest of all causes, and when many showmen found a most successful method lay in cooperation with local branches of the Red Cross in showing "Over There," comes again the news of the continued public approval of Select's patriotic photodrama. "Over There" features the work of "the greatest mother in the world," as this organization of mercy has so eloquently been called.

In a testimonial from C. M. Peregrine, manager of the American theater at Corning, Iowa, that well known exhibitor writes:

"'Over There,' your patriotic production, smashed our box-office record to smithereens. We played to more gross business on the last day of the run than was ever known before in our seven years' experience as an exhibitor. Ordinarily, by 11 o'clock p. m. people begin to grow restless and want to get to their homes, but not so with this picture. In fact, we were standing them up at 1 o'clock in the morning and, to my knowledge, not a person left the theater until the last 'Good Night' was flashed on the screen at 1:30 a. m."

A. T. Campbell Comes to Vitagraph.

A. T. Campbell, a former exhibitor in northern Michigan, started out Monday morning as traveling salesman for Vitagraph pictures. He will cover the western part of the state, from Detroit.

"Wolfville Tales" Are Meeting Exhibitor Favor

So far two of the Wolfville Tales have been released by General Film, and they have already established themselves in favor, according to officials of the company. Many inquiries for new subjects in this series followed the release of "The Clients of Aaron Green" and "Cynthiana."

Patricia Palmer.

The Wolfville Tales, by Alfred Henry Lewis, present a tangible thing to pin to a set of truly human characters carried along generally through the series. Although each story is complete the effect is similar to that of a serial, as the atmosphere is always the same and the fortunes of the characters constantly overlap. The better known Wolfville characters are brought to life in a successful manner. Patricia Palmer, featured in numerous O. Henry and other Western film stories, plays the leading feminine roles in these Broadway Star Features. Tex Thompson's part is taken by Tex Allen, a well known Western player, and the part of Old Man Enright is portrayed by George Holt. Mrs. Rucker, another familiar Wolfville character, is presented on the screen by Hattie Buskirk, who has done many character parts of an attractive type. William Lester as Doc Peets and Robert Burns as Cherokee Hall also contribute to the success of these delightful stories.

The Wolfville Tales are released fortnightly, alternating with O. Henry stories to provide a weekly high class two-reel comedy-drama or drama interpreting the most popular short stories of the day. Intensive productions, similar to that given the O. Henry stories, is being devoted to the Wolfville Tales, and forthcoming releases under the Broadway Star Features brand are expected to prove a revelation.

What Triangle Has In Work For Distribution In June

At the Triangle Culver City studio, in addition to "The Heritage," "Station Content," "The Last Rebel," and "The Poor Fish," a Keystone comedy heretofore announced, the June schedule of Triangle includes several unusual productions which are now in production.

In response to the demand for diversity of theme in Western dramas, Triangle will offer Roy Stewart in a series of cowboy plays adapted from the famous "Red Saunders" stories by Henry Wallace Phillips.

"The Fly God" is the working title for the second of this series of Western thrillers, and will be released June 23. "The Red-Haired Cupid" was the first.

A new two-reel Triangle-Keystone comedy to be put into production, with William Beaudine handling the megaphone, has been temporarily titled "Flapjacks." This is scheduled for release the week of June 9. It was written by Frank Condon, and has a Western locale.

Director J. W. McLaughlin has started work on a picture that will serve as a vehicle for William Desmond. The story opens in the East, and then jumps to the Canadian Northwest, where Desmond is shown as an officer of the Northwestern Mounted. Maude Wayne will be seen as Desmond's leading woman.

Standard Releases the "Wolf Girl."

The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation will shortly release the western drama, "The Wolf Girl," starring Beatrice Allen. The picture is the first of a series produced by Square Films, Inc. "The Wolf Girl" was directed by Will Rex, and it is based upon a story by Fred Lucas.

William Farnum and Mary Mersch in "Riders of the Purple Sage" (Fox).

Farnum Completing Grey's "Riders of the Purple Sage"

After having spent three weeks in Arizona and the Grand Canyon working on outdoor scenes for "Riders of the Purple Sage," the William Farnum Standard Picture release for June, Farnum and his company are back at the William Fox Hollywood studio. In Hollywood the Fox star will complete the final interior scenes for the completion of the production, which is based on the Zane Grey novel of the same name. In the cast besides Mr. Farnum are Mary Mersch, Murdock McQuarrie, Marc Robbins, William Scott, Katherine Adams, Nancy Caswell and J. Holmes.

To give the proper atmosphere to a street set in the subject Mr. Farnum enlisted the aid of 150 Civil War Veterans from a government home and not only tided himself over a difficulty, but also gave the old men a treat in the way of entertainment.

Ten big automobiles were sent to the home with the message that it was Farnum's treat. Besides it was said that there was a five-spot in it for each of the men who took part. This was enough for the veterans. When they were told that they would have to discard their blue uniforms and don civilian clothes of the early Mormon period, however, many balked. Informed of the exact reason, they acquiesced, and the scenes were a huge success.

Ebony Burlesques Flat Life.

"The Janitor," another of the series of Ebony comedies to be released by General Film, presents the company of negro players in one of the most laughable stories they have screened. New talent has been added to the company, and much attention has been given to the development of the plot, which is said to present a convincing burlesque of flat life off South State street in Chicago, where the picture was filmed.

Ned Finley in Mystery Role.

"The Man from Nowhere," a Blue Ridge Drama featuring Ned Finley and Marion Henry, is the fifth Ned Finley production for General Film. "The Man from Nowhere" abounds in tense situations, and contains a heart interest note as well. Ned Finley plays the role of Jud Lindsay, the man from nowhere, who witnesses a murderous attack upon a new millhand by the foreman and one of his helpers. As a result he becomes the central figure in a fast moving drama which revolves around the attempts of the foreman to remove the lone witness to the crime. The climax is reached in a thrilling sawmill scene.

Several well known players formerly associated with Finley at the Vitagraph studio are now working with him at Bat Cave, N. C. Among them are Harry Hammel and Logan Paul.

Times Square Doubles Up On Norma Talmadge

A MOTION picture star's feature production is being shown simultaneously in two prominent photoplay houses on Times Square. "De Luxe Annie," the Select Picture made by Norma Talmadge, was the feature attraction at the Rialto during the week commencing May 19, and also at Loew's New York theater across the street on Wednesday and Thursday of the same week.

This is the first time that Maanager Rothapfel has consented to play a star's production day and date with any other Times Square theater, and this is the first time in the history of that neighborhood that two photoplay houses which show first runs exclusively and which are practically across the street from one another have played the same attraction on the same day.

Strong Supporting Cast For Artcraft's "A Doll's House"

THE main supporting characters in "A Doll's House" are of importance. In the Artcraft picture, released June 2, which is adapted from the Ibsen drama, particular attention was given to the cast supporting Elsie Ferguson.

The part of the strait-laced husband is played by H. E. Herbert. Alex K. Shannon has the part of Krogstadt, the blackmailing money lender, who brings grief to the Helmar household. His better nature is touched by the plea of Mrs. Linden, played by Ethel Grey Terry. Warren Cook is Dr. Rank, the family physician. Mrs. R. S. Anderson convincingly plays the part of Anna, the nurse, and Tula Belle, who appeared in "The Blue Bird," and Ivy Ward are the Helmar children and Douglas Redmond and Charles Crompton the Krogstadt children. Maurice Tourneur directed the picture.

World Pictures Making An Oriental Production

AFTER several weeks preliminary work, Director Oscar Apfel has "Mandarin's Gold" under way at the World studio. Miss Kitty Gordon is the star, and Irving Cummings is her leading man. The other members of the cast include George MacQuarrie, Warner Oland, Anthony Merlo, Marguerite Gale, Veronica Lee, Joseph Lee, Marion Barney, and of the Chinese professionals Charles Fang and Alice Lee are the best known. Philip Lonergan, the pioneer scenarioist, wrote the story.

The picture has an Oriental locale, and requires a large number of Chinese. Because of this fact an interpreter had to be engaged. Director Apfel and the technical director made a tour of New York's Chinatown for the purpose of selecting the necessary and unusual properties. Mr. Apfel, believing in absolute fidelity to the requirements of his stories, located as many scenes as possible in Chinatown. A school in Mott street, the principal thoroughfare in Chinatown, where the children of the vicinity attend, was secured for the prologue of the picture.

The most difficult task for the casting director was to obtain suitable Orientals for important parts and extras. Scouts canvassed the Chinese district, visited the Chinese theater in Doyer street in securing extra people. One was fortunate in discovering a Chinese girl who had previously appeared with success in pictures.

Four Artcrafts Listed For Release in June

FOUR Artcraft pictures are listed for release by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, presenting two female and two male stars. Two of the pictures were produced in the western coast studios and two in the east, the Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks offerings coming from Los Angeles and the Elsie Ferguson and George M. Cohan photoplays from New York.

The first subject is Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," adapted from the play by Henrik Ibsen. On the 16th Douglas Fairbanks creates a new character as a newspaper reporter in "Say, Young Fellow," and it is quite likely that the novelty of this picture will make it the most attractive of his screen successes.

On the same day "Hit the Trail Holliday," starring George M. Cohan, is released. Mary Pickford makes her appearance on June 23 in "How Could You, Jean?" It was adapted by Frances Marion from the novel by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd.

Current Events Has Bit that Thrills.

The "Blue and the Gray" in a new combination is one of the striking patriotic features of Universal Current Events No. 53. The blue is the blue of the "Blue Devils" of France and the gray the gray of the marvelously efficient young men composing the crack cadet corps of West Point Military Academy. The "Blue and the Grey" mingled on the visit of the famous Alpine Chasseurs to the most famous military academy in the world. The Alpine Chasseurs watch the future generals march, and in turn parade for the cadets. It is a picture that will thrill.

Nine Essanays Released in June.

Essanay's schedule of releases for the month of June includes nine pictures. Four of these are Western pictures, the revivified Broncho Billy dramas, and five are comedies, the Snakeville series.

On June 1 comes "Slippery Slim's Inheritance," followed each week by "Sophie's Legacy," "Sophie Gets Stung," "Slippery Slim—Diplomat," and "Slippery Slim and the Claim Agent."

Beginning June 7 the weekly releases are "Broncho Billy's Grit," "Broncho Billy's True Love," "Broncho Billy and the Western Girls," and "Broncho Billy Wins Out."

Many Unusual Settings In "The Venus Model"

IN "The Venus Model," her latest Goldwyn picture, Mabel Normand appears in a production replete with movement, interest and unusual beauty. And in the person of the sprightly star all these elements of success are concentrated, although the production in itself is unique.

Settings of unusual richness and beauty have been devised by Hugo Ballin. They range all the way from a shop window simulating a sandstrewn beach, where Mabel Normand poses in a chic bathing costume, to a restaurant where living birds are used in great numbers for decorative purposes. They are not caged, but are grouped on branches of trees set in niches in the walls. Love birds, parrakeets, and Java sparrows are used, with some magnificent parrots hanging in ornamental rings. The effect is original with Mr. Ballin, and is an outstanding feature of the production.

From another standpoint the bathing suit factory is equally interesting, with its array of dummies clad in the garb of the beaches. The scenes which show the chute down which boxes are shot for shipment are highly diverting. When the star herself elects to shoot the chute and slides down head first at high speed audiences are assured the heartiest laugh of the season.

A child, a little girl named Nadia Gary, contributes almost as much as Miss Normand to "The Venus Model" with her beauty and sympathetic acting. She is the first model on whom Mabel Normand fits the bathing dress she has designed—the costume which brings the star success and love and exciting adventures.

Much of the excitement for the audience will be found in the episodes in the shop window and around it. A great crowd surrounds the place, drawn there by the promise of seeing the wonderful "Venus Model." When Mabel Normand appears clad in the already famous swimming suit she creates a sensation. That sensation fortunately is not confined to the shadow people on the screen, but spreads to the audience in the theater.

Robert Thornby Is Now William Fox Director

ROBERT THORNBY has been added to William Fox's directorial forces and will work in the Western studios at Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Thornby has already taken active charge of a vehicle starring Jewel Carmen, the story of which is based on Gouverneur Morris' dissection of metropolitan life and character, "You Can't Get Away With It."

A Fox statement says that this production will be by far the most pretentious starring film Miss Carmen has had and will be one of the most expensive photodramas the company has ever released as a Special Feature. Scores of scenes will be taken in Arizona and on wonderful locations at Catalina Island. Because of the nature of the play, the indoor settings, it is said, will also be more costly and ornate than usual.

Director Thornby has been busy during the week casting the subject and supervising the creation of the first "sets."

Several of the leading film corporations are said to have been in a spirited competition for the motion picture rights of "You Can't Get Away With It" and the Fox scenario department is delighted at having made the purchase. The story is not only the work of one of America's most distinguished and widely-read authors, but has the further advantage of being admirably suited to the screen.

Dramas are now being produced in the West by a staff of five Fox directors. These men are J. Gordon Edwards, Frank Lloyd, Edward J. LeSaint, Lynn Reynolds and Mr. Thornby. In addition, there are a number of Sunshine Comedy makers under the supervision of Henry Lehrman.

Triangle Releases June 2 Southern and Western Dramas

THE first release on Triangle's June 2 program, "The Man Who Woke Up," is a picturesque story of the South relating the conflict between the unyielding character of a staid, old aristocratic Southerner and the progressive ideas of a kindly Northerner who is residing in Oglesby with the philanthropic intentions of investing his millions to the welfare and progress of this small town community. Many trying experiences are encountered by the Southerner before his prejudiced dislike for the Northerner is overcome, but when his good wife finally asserts herself he awakes to a realization that the intentions of the philanthropist are sincere. Then the romance which has developed between the son and daughter of the feudists reaches a happy climax, and the two journey onward with the parental blessing.

Pauline Starke is featured in this production with William V. Mong, who wrote the story. Darrell Foss has the part of Foster's son, while George Hernandez appears as old man Foster. J. W. McLaughlin directed, and Steve Norton photographed.

"The Red-Haired Cupid," featuring Roy Stewart, is the second release for the week. It is the first of a series of the screen adaptations of the famous "Red Saunders" stories by Henry Wallace Phillips. It is a comedy of the West relating the adventures of a ranch foreman who, through his natural interest in "things human," becomes involved in the love affair of his pal with an attractive little woman from the East. As a modern cupid with Western diplomacy he guides their romance to a happy conclusion. Roy Stewart is William (Red) Saunders. Others in the cast are Ray Griffith and Peggy Pearce. The picture was directed by Cliff Smith, and Steve Rounds photographed.

The concluding release of the week is a Keystone comedy, "The Poor Fish," featuring Ed. Brady and Claire Anderson.

"Good Night, Paul" Is Good Type of Farce

OF all the various types of acting, one of the hardest and one requiring the most skill, is farce. For this reason the hardest working actor or actress, and the one who must pay the greatest attention to the fine points, is the farceur, or his feminine co-worker, the farceuse. For the aim of farce is, primarily, to make a series of unreal incidents seem convincing; their very improbability and the speed with which one incident follows another bring forth the situations with arouse us to merriment. Constance Talmadge has achieved her best in the characterization she has created in the heroine of "Good Night, Paul," a Select subject.

Doris Kenyon Selects Cast For "Inn of the Blue Moon"

DORIS KENYON has completed the cast for "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, the second feature to be produced by Miss Kenyon's own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. In this picture Miss Kenyon assumes two roles, impersonating twin sisters whose parents separated when they were infants, the two girls being brought up in wholly different environment. Miss Kenyon has two leading men of totally opposite types—one a stalwart, manly American, and the other an Englishman of the fortune-hunting variety.

For the part of the American, Miss Kenyon selected Harry C. Browne, at present appearing as leading man in "Oh, Lady, Lady!" at the Princess theater. His most recent film work was with Constance Talmadge in "Scandal." The other leading man is Crawford Kent. Mr. Kent will assume the role of the Englishman. In addition to a long list of stage successes, Mr. Kent's most recent screen activities were as leading man for Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs" and for Pauline Frederick in "Double Crossed."

Lyn Donaldson, whose impersonation of "Night" in "The Blue Bird" attracted attention, has been cast for the part of an unscrupulous half-sister of the twin's father. Other prominent members of the cast are John Hopkins, William Walcott, and Harriet Ross.

William S. Crolly has been retained by De Luxe as cameraman, while E. C. McCarthy, formerly Mr. O'Brien's assistant, is technical director and studio manager.

Miss Ferguson Plays "A Doll's House."

Portraying one of the most arduous roles in her screen career, Elsie Ferguson will be seen as Nora Helmar, the chief character in "A Doll's House," an Artcraft picture released June 2, adapted from the famous play by Henrik Ibsen. The role of the husband is played by H. E. Herbert, and Ivy Ward and Tula Belle are the children. The heavy part of Krogstadt is interpreted by Alex K. Shannon. Maurice Tourneur directed.

World Pictures Announces List of Its July Releases

FIVE World Pictures are scheduled for release during July in which Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans, Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, and June Elvidge are starred. Care has been exercised to produce program releases which would bear favorable comparison with special features sold on the open market.

Barbara Castleton in "The Heart of a Girl" is scheduled for July 1. John G. Adolfi handled the direction of this picture, and his initial World Picture is said to be of marked superiority. Irving Cummings is the leading man.

The second production, released July 8, is "Neighbors," featuring Madge Evans, the child star, and Johnny Hines, who makes his first appearance as a World star in this picture. Frank Crane was responsible for the direction.

Kitty Gordon appears on July 15 in "Tinsel." Oscar Apfel directed. The cast assisting Miss Gordon is almost entirely composed of principals; namely, Miss Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, Anthony Merlo, Bradley Barker, George de Carleton, and Marie Nau.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greely make their joint appearance in "The Golden Wall" on July 23, which was produced under the direction of Del Henderson.

On July 29, June Elvidge in "The Judge" is released. Travers Vale was in charge of the work of production. John Bowers plays, as usual, opposite Miss Elvidge.

Carey in Bear Valley.

Harry Carey and company are now in Bear Valley shooting snow scenes under the direction of Jack Ford for Carey's new Universal special feature production, "Hell's Neck."

The cowboy star in this photoplay leaves his western atmosphere and invades the Canadian Northwest—where the adventures of the mounted police are rich in romance and furnish ideal themes for red-blooded melodramas. Neva Gerber will again be Carey's leading woman. Eugene B. Lewis wrote the story and scenario.

World Names Tincher-Dressler Dates.

The first four comedies by "fascinating Fay Tincher" and "irresistible Marie Dressler" have been completed. Beginning with the week of May 27, World Pictures will release a comedy every two weeks alternating the two stars. The schedule reads: May 27, Fay Tincher in "Main 1-2-3"; June 10, Marie Dressler in "Fired"; June 24, Fay Tincher in "Some Job"; July 8, Marie Dressler in "Agonies of Agnes."

Miss Tincher and her company are busily engaged in making future releases at her studio in California, and has the picturization of several well known comedies under consideration.

Miss Dressler will soon return to New York for the purpose of beginning a series of new comedies with her own company for World Pictures.

Mary Garden in Paris Sees Herself On Screen

HER friendly relations with Goldwyn by no means at an end with her appearance in "The Splendid Sinner," Mary Garden has cabled news of her safe arrival in Paris after what she describes as "the most gorgeous winter in my life." With her all triumphs on the operatic stage the singer declared before sailing from New York on April 3 that her debut on the screen as a Goldwyn star and the subsequent success of "Thais" and "The Splendid Sinner" did more to bring her to a realization of her powers and her hold on the hearts of the largest audiences she has ever known than all her operatic furores put together.

Remaining in Paris a few days to transact some business and close her apartment on the Avenue Malakoff, Miss Garden had an opportunity of seeing her two cinema productions in surroundings distinctly different from those of the Strand theater and Broadway. The Goldwyn pictures were shown at one of the great cinema palaces on the Boulevard des Italiens, and Miss Garden reports that the crowds "went quite mad in their darling French way."

Now she has gone down to the Riviera to rest for the summer, occupying the apartment she never tired of enthusing over to her friends at the Goldwyn studios. It is in the Park Palace at Monte Carlo, faces the Casino gardens, and overlooks the Mediterranean. Her neighbors are Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Williamson, known the world over for the romances they write under the names of C. N. and A. M. Williamson. There Mary Garden plans to spend the entire summer, with, perhaps, a week or so at Aix and some motor tours through the Maritime Alps. It is not likely that she will sing in opera, although she says she will probably give some war concerts at the theater connected with the Casino, where she has often sung in the past.

Goldwyn Makes Cuts of "Joan" for Red Cross Work

AT the request of the campaign committee of the Canadian Red Cross Society, Goldwyn has forwarded nine prints of generous cuttings from Mabel Normand's latest and greatest Goldwyn success, "Joan of Plattsburg," to Canada for incorporation in a special patriotic film which is being prepared for Dominion-wide exhibition during Red Cross week.

This novel film is being assembled by George F. Gault, the president, and other officers of the Manitoba Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society. Though cuttings from several other currently popular motion picture productions are being used the greater part of the finished composite will be made up of telling scenes from "Joan of Plattsburg." Regal Films, Ltd., the Winnipeg representatives of Goldwyn Pictures, are handling the negotiations for the use of the "Joan" cuttings.

Under the auspices of Porter Emerson Browne, author of the story, and Herman Hagedorn, one of the chiefs of the Vigilantes, "Joan of Plattsburg" was shown last week to an audience of farmers at Greenfield Church, Conn., as part of an evening's entertainment arranged by Messrs. Browne and Hagedorn. These two are preaching American propaganda in the Connecticut rural districts in what Mr. Browne terms a sugar-coated form. Since "Joan of Plattsburg" reflects in a quaintly amusing yet forceful way the power of the faith of a nation's women in time of war it was selected as part of the evening's lesson.

Arrangements are being made through Charles J. Rosebault, managing editor of the Vigilantes, with the Western Newspaper Union to use as "boiler plate" Mr. Browne's fictional version of the picture. This will be offered for publication in several thousand small towns and cities throughout the United States. Already Goldwyn has placed the story in full-page matrix form illustrated with stills from the production in more than 200 newspapers in the larger centers.

Second Series of Ebony Ready.

L. J. Pollard, general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, announces that the second batch of Ebony comedies are now ready, and that the General Film Company, distributors for these comedies, have already announced the schedule of the releases. It is in this batch of subjects, he claims, that exhibitors will find the kind of slapstick comedies which always go over big, and in these particular pictures is proof that colored players are right at home when it comes to putting over real, "honest to John," natural slapstick stuff. The first of the new releases is "The Bully." This will be followed by "The Janitor." Then will come "The Reckless Rover," "Mercy, the Mummy Mumbled," "Help Wanted—Female." "The Millionaire Piker," "The Politician," "A No Account Count," etc.

It has been the aim of the producers to translate on the screen the inimitable humor of the negro which always meets with such popular approval.

Standard to Distribute Brett Comedies.

The Tom Bret Comedies, it is announced, will be released on the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation's program. The comedies will be distributed through the American Standard's own exchanges operating in the principal cities of the United States. The foreign rights of the comedies will also be handled by the American Standard.

Pathe Features That Promise Good Things

PATHE has three interesting features in store for exhibitors during the early summer: Bessie Love in "A Little Sister of Everybody," dated June 30; Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in "Annexing Bill," July 7; Frank Keenan in "More Trouble," July 14.

"A Little Sister of Everybody" was made at the Paralta studio from the story of William Addison Lathrop, under the direction of Robert Thornby. The scenario was written by Jack Cunningham. The leading man is George Fisher, known for his work as the Christus in "Civilization." The picture marks the return of Bessie Love to the type of "raggedy" parts in which she made her first successes. With a strong human interest story and good support she scores not only another personal hit, but the best all-around production she has yet made for Pathe.

"Annexing Bill" is expected to prove a fitting successor to "For Sale," in which the popular co-star team of Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale score heavily. It was scenarioized by Tom Cushing, and it was produced under the direction of Albert Parker. The picture is a high comedy of modern American life, youth and love, in which a young man refuses to marry the girl he loves (and who loves him) because of her wealth. They encounter thrilling adventures in attempting to get rid of it. Margaret Greene also shares honors.

"More Trouble" has caused comment on the Pacific Coast, since it is something new not only for Mr. Keenan but for photoplays as well. It is a comedy in which there is not a single comedy character, in which every person is serious, and in which the events that throw them together, following in rapid fire succession, create one laughable situation after another.

Bushman and Bayne in "Both Members."

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne have placed in production at the Metro studio a comedy-drama by Corporal Luther A. Reed, at present entitled "Both Members." Charles J. Brabin is directing. George A. McGuire is assistant director and R. J. Bergquist is responsible for the photography.

The feature is of the type of brilliant comedy in which the co-stars have put forth their best efforts. Prominent among the cast is Gerald Griffin, Jessie Stevens, Charles W. Sutton and Edward Lawrence.

Scene from "The One Woman" (Mastercraft).

THOMAS DIXON, JR., promises photodramatic achievement in "The One Woman." The production is now in the making at the Brunton studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Reginald Barker. When the story appeared in book form it created a furore, and was looked upon as a strong preachment against socialistic ideas. The characters of the story are few, but vivid. The atmosphere is well done, tense and vibrant with the jangling, discordant note, the misery, the injustice, cruelty and hopelessness of the life of the metropolis.

The story in book form is overwhelming in its convincingness. It shows marriage for what it is—a sacred institution, the foundation stone of character, of morality, of cleanliness, of civilization itself.

As a photoplay the story will be presented with still broader strokes and with wider range than cold type could possibly permit. The photoplay version of the story has been prepared under the supervision of the author, who has insisted on the action of the novel being closely adhered to. It will be presented with a strong cast of players, including W. Lawson Butt, Adda Gleason, Clara Williams, Herschel Mayall, Thurston Hall and Joseph J. Dowling, with Mary Jane Irving and Ben Alexander portraying the sympathetic roles of the children.

The production when completed will constitute an entire evening's entertainment.

Love and "Tenderfeet" in Sennett June Releases

Two Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy productions are being issued from the Sennett fun-factory during the month of June, including "Love Loops the Loop," directed by Walter Wright, on the 3d, and "Two Tough Tenderfeet," directed by Richard Jones, on the 17th.

"Love Loops the Loop" derives its title from one of the most sensational feats ever performed in a motion picture, Mary Thurman "looping the loop" on roller skates. The picture is a cyclone of fun, in which other thrilling acts are done. Wayland Trask is in love with Mary Thurman, a cabaret girl. Charles Murray is a rival of Trask.

"Two Tough Tenderfeet" presents Ben Turpin and Charlie Lynn as two exceedingly tough individuals. Their adventures land them in the desert, where they successfully escape lions, wild men, jack rabbits and other fierce creatures, and reach a frontier settlement which was so tough that the two tough tenderfeet are made to feel themselves mere amateurs in the line of toughness. Ben falls in love with Polly Moran, the female sheriff.

Booksellers Aid in Exploiting Picture.

Exhibitors throughout the country are to have the active assistance of numerous book dealers in the production of "The Doctor and the Woman," the picturization of Mary Robert Rhinehart's popular novel, "K." The co-operation between exhibitor and bookseller is being arranged by Grosset & Dunlap, the New York publishers, who have caused a popular-priced edition of "K" to be printed. Every large bookseller in the United States has been circularized. The advantage of having an exclusive window display of the novel "K" just prior to the presentation of the picture is urged as the best kind of a selling campaign for not only the book but for the picture.

Good Publicity with Pathe's "For Sale."

Farsighted exhibitors who have already booked "For Sale," the Pathe feature play released June 9, will find that they have obtained something especially fine, according to all reports.

Strong Cast for Metro's "The Way to a Man's Heart"

METRO announces an unusually strong cast of screen favorites who will appear in support of May Allison in the star's third starring vehicle in her own right, "The Way to a Man's Heart," written by June Mathis. Katharine Kavanaugh prepared the continuity and Harry Franklin is directing the picture, which will be Miss Allison's next comedy-drama following "The Winning of Beatrice."

Harry Hilliard, one of the popular leading men of the screen, plays opposite the star in the role of Perry Arnold. For two years Mr. Hilliard was leading man under the Fox banner. On the stage he has appeared prominently with Wilton Lackaye, Blanche Ring, Florence Reed, Marie Dressler and Cyril Scott.

Frank Currier, Metro's sterling character actor, is seen in another "father" role as Daniel Houston, the parent of Virginia Houston, who is portrayed by Miss Allison. One of Mr. Currier's greatest characterizations is that of Pharos, the old gypsy chief in "Toys of Fate," the latest picture starring Nazimova. Edward Connelly, another actor who distinguished himself in "Toys of Fate," plays Lionel Houston, the brother of Daniel.

Christine Mayo, who is a member of the all-star cast in "The House of Mirth," which was recently completed at the Metro studio, is cast as Rose Mason. Fred C. Jones essays the role of Marvin Du Bois. He has played under the Metro banner in "Threads of Fate" and "The Girl Without a Soul," both starring Viola Dana. Kate Blancke, who plays the aunt of Rose Mason, is remembered for her work as Mme. Heriot in "Lest We Forget" with Rita Jolivet.

Pauline Dempsey, a well known colored player, enacts the part of Aunt Judy. Anthony Byrd is another colored member of the company, being cast as old Uncle Joshua. Mr. Byrd is an old-time minstrel man and is the originator of the musical act called the "Darktown Follies."

Four clever children are members of the cast—Phoebe Starr, Maury Steuart, Howard Oppenheim and Lionel Houston. Dion Muse, a diminutive colored lad, is seen as his own true self in many amusing scenes.

Director Franklin is being assisted by P. Thad Volkman, and the photography is in charge of Arthur Martinelli, assisted by Michael Whelan.

Edna Goodrich to Make Series of Mutual Productions

EDNA GOODRICH has begun work on "The Gadabout," the first of a new series of productions to be released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. The pictures are to be made at the studios of the Biograph Company in New York. David Powell has been specially engaged to support Miss Goodrich in "The Gadabout." It is under the direction of Burton King, whose screen career covers a series of successful productions, including "The Public Defenders," "The Flower of Faith" and "A Soul of a Magdalen."

The Goodrich pictures will be released at intervals beginning August 5, following "Impossible Susan" in the Mutual schedule.

"The Gadabout" is the work of Maibelle Heikes Justice, whose status as a writer of picture plays has been amply established by important successes released by various distributors of quality dramas. She is the author of "The End of the Trail," starring William Farnum; "Durant of the Bad Lands," in which Dustin Farnum played; "The Glory of Yolande," an Anita Stewart vehicle, and plays in which Mary Miles Minter and Peggy Hyland have starred.

"A very large collection of material, including all that we thought best in the New York play market, has been considered in selecting the coming vehicles for Miss Goodrich," remarked James M. Sheldon, the Mutual president, who is devoting a large share of personal attention to the matter of production as a preliminary to the execution of important distribution plans.

"There are few women of the stage and screen so well known to the followers of the drama, throughout the United States and abroad, as Miss Goodrich. She is famous most particularly as a woman of beauty and beautiful dress. 'Regal' seems to be the word that fits best, and we are seeking to express that in the productions to come. We aim and expect to put into the productions the material which will make it possible for the exhibitor to realize to the maximum on the name and fame of Miss Goodrich."

Miss Goodrich has had a period of several months' rest, spent at Palm Beach and her newly completed country home at Mamaroneck, near New York. She is entering the production of "The Gadabout" with special energy and fitness.

As might be expected, "The Gadabout" is a society tale, laid in New York, with some highlight splashes of color and lively action. It is the story of a society-mad lady who finds other things and an opportunity for playing a bigger game for a bigger stake.

Eddie Polo has Big Top for "Lure of the Circus"

EDDIE POLO, often referred to as "the Hercules of the screen," started work last week on the sensational new serial, "The Lure of the Circus," a chaptered melodrama of life under the "big top." Molly Malone will be seen as Polo's leading woman. J. P. McGowan, famed for the excitement he injected into the Helen Holmes railroad series, has been engaged by the "Big U" as director for Eddie Polo. William E. Wing is writing the script for the production.

The Sells-Floto circus, playing a three day special engagement in Los Angeles was commandeered by Director McGowan for several extra performances in order to take a score of the scenes for the serial. A monster tent will be erected at Universal City, and for the next few months every day will be circus day.

The Universal zoo will play no small part in this serial of side-shows, pink tighted women and red lemonade.

Good Supporting Cast for "A Man's World"

AN exceptional cast of players has been engaged by Metro to support Emily Stevens in the picturization of Rachel Crothers' big Broadway success, "A Man's World," which is being produced under the direction of Herbert Blache.

John Merkyl is Miss Stevens' leading man. Frederick Truesdell plays the heavy lead. Florence Short, whose last Metro appearance was as Mrs. Standish in "The Outsider" with Emmy Wehlen, portrays an Italian opera singer. Walter Hiers, well known as a provoker of mirth, essays the light comedy role of an Irish dramatist.

Baby Ivy Ward, Metro's four-year-old actress, is Kiddie, a mischievous boy. Lucile Dorrington is cast as the mother of Kiddie. Sidney Bracy plays a French artist. Vera Royer is a water-color artist. Vinnie Burns, who is remembered as a Lubin star under the name of June Daye, plays a slavey character role. Lisle Leigh is cast as the landlady of the quaint French lodging house. Jack Newton is seen as a book reviewer.

Lytell Company Goes to Catalina.

Bert Lytell and members of his support in the Metro production, "No Man's Land," are on location at Catalina Island. The star's second picture under the Metro banner is well along, a majority of the interior scenes and a number of exteriors having been filmed before the company left the Hollywood studios for the Pacific Coast resort so renowned for its natural beauties.

Catalina was chosen as the locale for the Lytell picture because many of the stirring episodes in "No Man's Land," an adaptation by Mr. Lytell and A. S. Le Vino of Louis Joseph Vance's novel, take place on a desolate island in the Pacific, where a young man falsely accused and convicted of a murder runs his nemesis to earth and works out his own regeneration.

Strong Cast in Mix's "Ace High."

Although Tom Mix and his extraordinary ability as a horseman are the major attraction in "Ace High," the current William Fox release, the picture is made notable by a particularly strong cast.

One of the supporting players is little Virginia Lee Corbin. Another is Louis Sargent, and a third is Kathleen Connors, an actress of ability who makes her debut with the Fox forces in this picture. Others in the cast are Lloyd Perl, Lawrence Peyton, Colin Chase, Jay Morley and Pat Chrisman.

The story, which was written and staged by Lynn Reynolds, is laid in the Canadian Northwest and depicts the exploits of Mix as a member of the Mounted Police.

"Missing" is Full of Pathos.

In his latest Paramount picture, "Missing," taken from the well-known and widely- read novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, J. Stuart Blackton is developing a story that cannot fail to impress by its dignity and power, presenting as it does the woman's side of the great conflict. The scenario is by J. Stuart Blackton and James Young; the latter is directing with the Commodore supervising. The story in brief is that of two sisters, one an elderly and much-soured woman, and the other young and beautiful. The former hopes to replenish the family exchequer by marrying off her sister to wealth and title. The story is full of pathos, yet shows the bravery of women in the face of great sacrifices.

Mix Starts "Slow Burgess."

Tom Mix has started the transfer to celluloid of Charles Alden Seltzer's story, "Slow Burgess." Lynn Reynolds is directing the picture from a scenario by Bennett Cohen.

The cast consists of Kathleen Connors George Nicholls, C. McHugh, Jack Dill Annette DeFoe, Val Haul, E. E. Wallace and Clarence Burton.

Alice Brady in "The Order of Rosetta (Select).

Fox Reviews Nine Months' Issue of Standard Picture

FOX Films call attention to the fact that it is just a year since work was started on "The Spy," the first issue under Standard Pictures. "The Spy" was the initial Standard release and was sent out on August 19.

Director Richard Stanton commenced on that drama in the latter part of May, and since then Fox has made twenty other films for release as Standard Pictures. Here are the pictures and the order in which they have been issued:

"The Spy," "The Honor System," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Conquerer," "Camille," "When a Man Sees Red," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Rose of Blood," "Treasure Island," "A Daughter of the Gods," "Trouble-makers," "Du Barry," "Cheating the Public," "The Forbidden Path," "Les Miserables," "Woman and the Law," "Rough and Ready," "The Blindness of Divorce," "The Soul of Buddha," and "True Blue." Among the more attractive production for Standard that are to be released within the next few months are "The Caillau Case," "Queen of the Sea," "Under th Yoke," and "Riders of the Purple Sage."

"When we made our preliminary an nouncement about the forthcoming drama last year, we promised that Standard Pictures would be all that their name implie —films worthy to be a Standard of com parison," says a company statement. "W have been careful, as the list shows, t cover a wide range of subjects. We hav made historical plays and have had im personated historical characters of firs importance; we have screened propogand films such as 'Woman and the Law' an 'The Blindness of Divorce,' and we wer responsible for the innovation that was in troduced as 'Jack and the Beanstalk' an others in that series."

Scene from "What the Wind Did" (Mutual).

"What the Wind Did" Is Story of Black and White

THE horrors of a white mother who finds a black baby in her perambulator have frequently been pictured, but the fury of a black mother who finds a white baby on her hands has been cleverly portrayed in "What the Wind Did," the Strand-Mutual comedy starring Billie Rhodes, scheduled for release June 4. What the wind actually did was to blow the black mother's baby check into the hands of a white baby's youthful nurse. The indignation of the black's mammy knew no bounds when the nursery attempted to give her a white baby.

A world of funny things happen in the department store nursery, including the embarrassment of a youthful gallant to whom the safety of a pretty baby has been entrusted.

Screen Telegram Shows Events Home and Abroad

AMERICAN troops being rushed across the plains of Picardy to help check the drive of the Huns in the world's greatest battle is a graphic scene in Screen Telegram No. 25, released by Mutual May 26. Other war pictures in this issue show heroic French soldiers taking a huge contingent of German shock troops after a fierce encounter at Maille Raineval.

A special feature of Screen Telegram No. 24, released May 22, shows President Wilson viewing the start of the aerial mail route. The first plane is seen leaving Washington with special delivery mail for New York.

The first pictures ever presented of the greatest boat building plant in the world at Hog Island, Pennsylvania, are seen in this issue of Screen Telegram. The plant is putting on extra steam and running full shifts in order to rush ships for Pershing.

Official French war pictures show the destruction of towns along the western front as a result of the recent great offensive of the Kaiser's hordes.

Pauline Frederick Plays Gypsy Role.

To portray the role of a "tiger woman" artistically, necessarily calls for talents of a high order, and "Her Final Reckoning," a Paramount picture released June 9, makes heavy demands upon Pauline Frederick, who stars in such a role as Marsa, the half-gypsy heroine of this photoplay, which was adopted by Charles E. Whittaker from "Prince Zilah," the play by Jules Claretie, the noted Franch dramatist. Mr. Whittaker's scenario is an elaboration of the stage play, in which Miss Frederick plays the two roles of herself and her mother.

"Her Final Reckoning" is the first Paramount picture directed by Emile Chautard. John Miltern plays the chief supporting male role.

New Irene Castle Picture Pleases.

"The Mysterious Client," Irene Castle's latest feature, recently described as "one of the best mystery plays that ever came out of a developing laboratory," is proving one of the best attractions among the current Pathe features. Milton Sills and Warner Oland, who made such individual and collective hits with the star in the serial "Patria," appear again with her in "The Mysterious Client." It is an unusual play.

It was made under the direction of Fred Wright from the clever story by Charles Davey. The scenario was written by Roy Somerville. The story opens as a conventional society drama, but rapidly assumes the character and intensity of a gripping melodrama as the exciting scenes are unfolded.

Mlle. Una Dances for Universal.

Mlle. Una, headlined over the Orpheum circuit as a premiere danseuse and featured in a similar capacity with the California grand opera company and Oliver Morosco's "So Long Letty," spent a day at Universal City recently, appearing as a dancer in the big cafe scene in "Discipline and Genevra," Dorothy Phillips' Universal production.

"Doing Their Bit" Is Comedy-Drama for Lees

JANE and Katherine Lee, William Fox "baby Grand" stars, who have been active far beyond their years in the various drives for war funds and who have been lending their efforts to putting the Red Cross fund over the top, did a double patriotic duty last week. By strenuous work they completed a finely spirited picture that is described as "showing how two petticoat patriots lend a hand to Uncle Sam."

The photoplay was written and staged by Kenean Buel, who has had charge of all of the starlets' vehicles. Mr. Fox selected the title, "Doing Their Bit," for the subject, which is of the comedy-drama type.

With the completion of the production, Jane and Katherine did further good work by accepting an invitation to be a conspicuous part of the entertainment arranged by Private Irving Berlin for his colleagues at Camp Upton. The children were not only by far the youngest persons present—on either side of the footlights on the Yaphank stage—but they were also the only motion picture players there.

The Lees' skit consisted of a song by Jane, a recitation by Katherine, and a dance by both.

Madge Evans Wins Honors.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has just conferred a high honor on Madge Evans, the World's kiddie star. Little Madge has received from Secretary McAdoo an honor button in recognition of her efforts in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan. Madge made a great number of personal appearances during the campaign for this loan, and also made speeches herself, selling more bonds than any other child actress. Madge has also been made a major in the Junior American Guard, an organization of young patriots who are whole-heartedly serving their country in many capacities.

Air Raid Boosts Film's Drawing Power.

The recent raid upon the city of London by Hun aviators has served to arouse interest in "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21," reports General Film, which is distributing this two-part war news thriller for the Interstate Film Company. Exhibitors have been quick to realize the great advertising value of this subject at the present time and are booking it for extended runs as a feature production. It presents the amazing manner in which the British capital is defended from air raids and culminates with the destruction of the murderous dirigible that was brought down on English soil.

Hulette and Hale Lead Pathe in "For Sale" on June 9

BACKED by strong indorsements of critics who have enjoyed private showings of "For Sale," Pathe's program for release the week of June 9 appears to be a fitting successor, from a box-office standpoint, to the one for June 2, which was headed by "The Yellow Ticket."

In "For Sale," in which Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale have the leading roles, Pathe has come upon an unexpected "find." Everybody who has seen the play has become enthusiastic. The title is strong as a draw, the acting, production and story remarkable, and the play stands up with a strong and unconventional punch at the end.

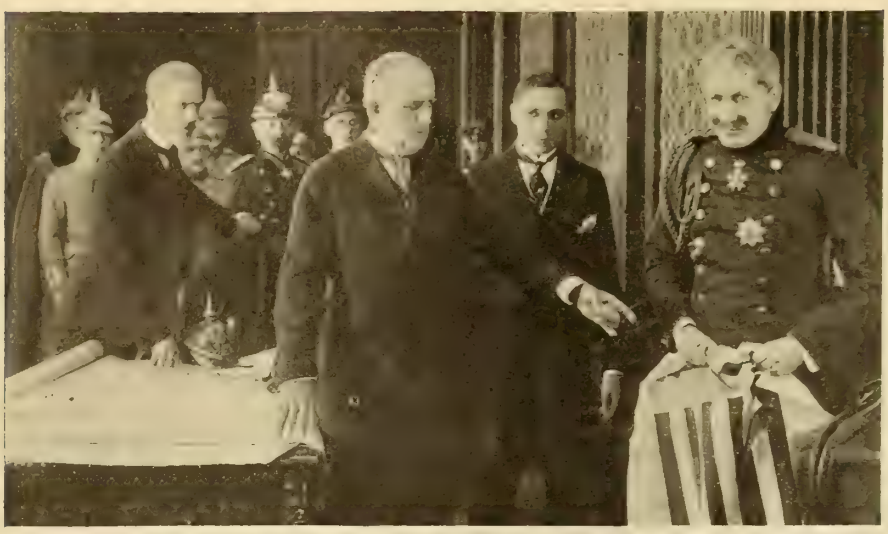
"Underworld Allies" is the title of the two-reel episode (No. 14) of "The House of Hate," in which Pearl White and Antonio Moreno are given plenty of opportunity for dare-devil stuff. This Pathe serial seems to be growing in intensity and strength of plot. There will be a total of twenty episodes, as has been announced, and it appears that each builds to a more absorbing climax.

Harold Lloyd comedies are becoming the one best bet with the Pathe branches, and in "Sic 'Em, Towser," the new one released on this program, the young screen funmaker, who has discarded all conventional "comedy" make-up save for a pair of horn-rimmed spectacles, and gets over better than ever, is going strong.

Part V of "Britain's Bulwarks," the Official British War series, released exclusively by Pathe, has to do with the work of drifters and mine sweepers in the danger zone.

The scenic for release on this program is that one described as a sure draw for summer business, "Yosemite in Winter," showing the beautiful snow-clad scenes of the garden spot of America.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 48 is released June 12; No. 49 on June 15.



Scene from "To Hell With the Kaiser" (Metro).

"To Hell with the Kaiser" Is to be Made on Big Scale

"TO Hell with the Kaiser," a seven-act super-feature built around the obsessions of Germany's mad war lord, is Screen Classics, Inc., latest offering. The final scenes of this production, which has been made on an unprecedented scale, with an all-star cast and a company of twelve hundred, will be finished and assembled within the next few days. Metro will distribute it.

Based largely on facts which Screen Classics, Inc., had access to during the making of the picture, the story is most dramatic and sensational. In a highly original manner it reveals the machinations of Europe's military monster before and during the war, his contempt for Americans and their ideals, his elaborate plans to crush France and destroy Russia and partition the world, including the United States, among his sons and his court favorites; his indorsement of and order to Germany's chemists to employ deadly gases in the war, the true circumstances under which he ordered the sinking of the Lusitania, the raiding of hospitals, his plan for the disintegration of Russia, and other intimate glimpses into the character of Germany's ruler never accurately and fully revealed before. Throughout the drama runs a gripping and appealing love story. The scenario is by June Mathis and the direction was under George Irving and a staff of capable assistants.

Through the co-operation of the Government a fleet of aeroplanes is shown to give a faithful idea of what real air fighting at the front is like. These scenes are doubly interesting because the heroine, played by Olive Tell, and the hero, John Sunderland, a real aviator who has seen much service at the front in the air, take part in these flights.

Miss Tell is a former Frohman star, and only recently left Broadway to appear especially in this production. Mr. Sunderland as well as being an aviator hero of many battles around Liege and Namur and Ypres at the beginning of the war is an actor of exceptional talents.

The producers have made a most happy selection in choosing the player to portray the Kaiser. He is Lawrence Grant, an Englishman, who has made a study of the German ruler. The Crown Prince is played by Earl Schenck, who has previously distinguished himself in this despicable role. All of the Kaiser's retinue, including Von Hindenburg, Von Hollweg, Von Tirpitz, Mackensen, Von Moltke and General Truchess, are portrayed with true characterization. Frank Currier plays Miss Tell's father, and W. P. Lewis has the part of Satan, the Kaiser's co-partner.

Russell's Second Comes June 24.

William Russell's next production for Mutual is "Up Romance Road," a story of sabotage and how a wide-awake American chap frustrated the plotters. The scenario was written by Elizabeth Mahoney from a story by Stephen Fox, and the production made under the direction of Harry King. This is the second picture made by William Russell Productions, Inc., the first of which was "Hearts or Diamonds?" It is set for release June 24.

Universal Starts Drive on Its Two-Reel Dramas

The first of the two-reel dramas upon which Universal will make a drive for several months is scheduled for release on June 10. It inaugurates the attempt of President Laemmle to turn back the clock to the time when every person connected with the motion picture industry was prosperous and happy. That was the time exhibitors were presenting programs made up entirely of short-reel subjects.

In making its selection for its first release Universal has picked a good average product, refusing for the sake of future business to place its best foot forward and give the exhibitors the best of the two-reel subjects, several score of which have been made.

"Play Straight or Fight" is the title of the first of the two-reelers. It is essentially a western, with Helen Gibson playing the lead, and a supporting cast consisting of Hoot Gibson, M. K. Wilson and G. Raymond Nye.

Miss Gibson appears in the role of a strong-minded, upright, two-handed gunwoman, the protector of a younger brother with all the vices of mankind as a result of coming under the domination of unscrupulous companions. The scenario is by Karl Coolidge from a story by Leon de la Matte. Paul Hurst directed.

Zoe Rae Back in Los Angeles.

Little Zoe Rae, Bluebird's stellar child actress, after six weeks in Chicago, where she was loaned to Essanay for a picture, has returned to Los Angeles Bluebird studios, and will appear with Ruth Clifford and Kenneth Harlan in a new Rupert Julian-directed production.

Betzwood's Premier, a Story of China, Nearly Ready

THE Betzwood Film Company's first production at their plant on the Schuylkill River, at Betzwood, Pa., is nearing completion under the direction of Ira M. Lowry. The combination of its star, Lady Tsen Mei, said to be the only Chinese woman film star; its Chinese settings, its story by J. Allan Dunn, and its generally unusual atmosphere augur its being a "feature de luxe."

Lady Tsen Mei.

In introducing Lady Tsen Mei, a brilliant stage star of the vaudeville circuit, the producers feel they have an unusual and versatile film star to introduce. Quite apart from the novelty of Tsen Mei's nationality, however, her ability to portray many types other than celestial ones make her a "find." It is the purpose of the Betzwood Film Company to present her in various roles of the Far East in big stories written around those types. In the present story of China and Washington no expense is being spared to secure the richest settings and costumes to surround their star.

Mr. Lowry was producer of "For the Freedom of the World," and for many years at the head of film studios and laboratories. The supporting cast is composed of Robert Elliott, Benjamin Hendricks, Jr., and Herbert Pattee and a host of Chinese actors and actresses. Camera and laboratory are under the expert handling of William Cooper and Davide Calcogni.

The Betzwood company announces that on or about June 3 they will begin production of their second feature starring Louis Bennison, the stage star of "Johnny Get Your Gun," who will be presented in a "Western" feature of a different type It will be a comedy-drama based upon the character creation of "Sandy Burke" by J. Allan Dunn.

Arrangements for release have not yet been made, all possible attention being given to making these productions.

With its unusual facilities, location stars and big laboratory equipment stages, 500 acres of variable scenery on its own plant, the Betzwood bids fair to become one of the big producing plants Its first release will be ready some time in July, and its second a month later.

Theda Bara Working on Brueil Story.

"The Message of the Lilies" is the tentative title of the picture on which Theda Bara is working, but this is to be changed it is understood. The story was written by Betta Brueil and the scenario by E Lloyd Sheldon. J. Gordon Edwards is director, this being the twenty-seventh h has done since joining the Fox forces.

Gaumont Invites Suggestions for Name of New Serial

Endeavoring to Find an Appropriate and More Pleasant-Sounding Title Than One Originally Selected.

ASSISTED by many buyers who have applied for territory on the ten episode serial which is being prepared for early release, the Gaumont Company is wrestling with the subject of a title which will not only describe the principal character, but be short, snappy and attractive.

The hero, whose daring deeds and thrilling adventures gain the sympathy of the spectators, is a man who has been wronged and for years supposed to be dead. He returns and finds a man who stole his fortune and attempts to kill him. When his vengeance is completed, he becomes a champion of the oppressed.

It was at first decided to call the serial "The Man From the Dead," but the word "dead" has a gruesome look, and this is said to be anything but a gruesome picture. Several exhibitors have suggested "The Avenger of Wrongs," and, as this title is aptly descriptive, it may be used.

The Gaumont Company will be glad to receive suggestions of other titles which may be more suitable.

Cartoons and Ditmars Subject on Same Reel

THE title of the latest Katzenjammer Kid animated cartoon offering of the International Film Service, released by Educational Films Corporation is "Fishermen's Luck," and, as the name implies, the theme is "fish."

The Captain and the Professor are supposed to do the fishing and while the Professor makes a very successful "catch," the Captain, thanks to the Kids, only catches a cold. With the aid of a trained duck to steal his bait, a dead whale with a live cat and a bulldog inserted as its respiratory organs, and a stovepipe camouflage as a periscope, the rejuvenated sea monster makes the captain's life a miserable one. But he who laughs last has the best of the argument, and the Captain's tormentors are far from the laughing stage when the Captain invokes the aid of an octopus to administer punishment to the Kids.

"Night Animals" is the title of the Ditmars picture on this same reel. The long-tailed tropical o'possum is shown and the manner in which it adapts itself to a life in the trees. This is a slow but sure creature that depends largely upon the use of its prehensile tail, and is very easily caught. Another interesting specimen of the night animals is the ant eater of South America. When in captivity this animal's diet consists mostly of milk. The sloth, an animal very unprepossessing in appearance, is shown. A peculiarity of this animal is that it will not take its meals otherwise than from the protection of a basket.

"Eagle's Eye" Aids Liberty Loan Drive.

The worth of "The Eagle's Eye" and the "Uncle Sam Trailers" used on each episode, according to the report of the manager of the Hippodrome theater, Newport, Kentucky, is visible in the showing made by that city and Campbell county in the recent Liberty Loan Drive, the county subscribing 282 per cent. of its quota, while Newport quadrupled its assignment. It aroused talk, enthusiasm and bitterness toward Germany, put the people in proper mood to heed the admonition of the trailer to buy Liberty Bonds. They became boosters, signed up themselves for bonds and urged their friends to do so.

ONE of the principal roles in the forthcoming Graphic production, "When Man Betrays," produced by Ivan Abramson, that of Raymond Edwards, is portrayed by Robert Elliot, an actor of long and varied stage experience.

Born in Tipperary, Ireland, he began his career as a newspaper man. He then appeared in London in repertoire with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, and Sir George Alexander. He is also the author of several successful one-act plays which he produced in the English provinces, and is likewise the author of a volume of theatrical short stories entitled "Between Shows," which had a large sale.

On coming to America, he again took up newspaper work, and for three years during Roosevelt's second term was employed by the government in a confidential capacity. He later appeared on the stage in New York in the leading role in "The Country Girl."

"When Man Betrays" is now being cut and assembled and will be ready for release in the very near future.

Physical Culture in New Offices.

Pre-Release Bookings for Marion Davies Film

FOR what is said to be the first time in the history of the Marcus Loew circuit of theaters, a motion picture has been booked for presentation throughout the seventy days showing in Greater New York without awaiting the completion or having seen the film. This unusual proceeding was taken in contracting for the premier showing of Marion Davies in "Cecelia of the Pink Roses," adapted from Katharine H. Taylor's novel of the same title. A number of other exhibitors have also booked this picture without having seen it.

It is claimed that this production will enjoy the largest budget of pre-release bookings in the history of the film business in America. This is said to be due to the glowing reports from the studio, the interest attached to the film as the first motion picture made by the musical comedy beauty at the head of her own company, the big sale of the story in book form and its popularity as a serial; the reputation enjoyed by its producer, Julius Steger, and the whirlwind publicity campaign that has been given it. Many huge electric signs on Broadway announce the forthcoming release, and this week an intensive billing starts.

Mr. Steger is now putting the finishing touches to the picture, cutting and preparing the titles so as to be in readiness for the Loew showing commencing June 3. The picture is said to be a story of pathos and heart interest, dealing with the vicissitudes of a poor family suddenly overtaken by immense wealth and its attendant responsibilities; and to afford an interesting psychological study and to have strong dramatic moments and touches of comedy which are more strongly emphasized upon the screen than in the book.

Posters for Rialto Film Designed by Burton Rice

Paper for "The Unchastened Woman" the Work of this Well-Known Artist—To Be Used at Opening of Symphony Theater, New York.

IT is with more than a little pride that Dr. Lamberger, of the Rialto-De Luxe Production, "The Unchastened Woman," calls attention to the paper for the opening at the Symphony theater at Ninety-fifth street and Broadway, New York. Miss Grace Valentine, star in this Oliver Morosco photoplay, is featured, and her beauty and the unique character she portrays are said to have proven a real inspiration to the artist, Burton Rice, of Rice-Kavanaugh, Inc.

A "Burton Rice" Poster.

Like many of the successful artists Mr. Rice came to New York unheralded and unknown, and it is by the strength and character of his individuality, so vividly expressed in all his work, that he has achieved recognition in a comparatively short time. After a year's work here Mr. Rice enlisted in the American Ambulance Corps, and sailed for France in December, 1916.

So well did he perform his arduous duties that before returning to America he was made a brevet-lieutenant. Like all artists he felt the call of Paris, and studied there, but on account of conditions there his plan of foreign work was given up and he came back to New York.

It is claimed that in none of his work has he so completely expressed his own ideas of what poster art should be as in the series of one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters for "The Unchastened Woman." Miss Valentine's head alone is the extent of the pictorial work on the twenty-four sheet, which presents striking color combination, and effective composition arrangement. Impressed as it is with a certain distinction of drawing, in both line and color, the secret is set forth in Mr. Rice's own conception of the art of the poster. "The object of the poster," he says, "is primarily that of catching the passing crowd. There is no time or room for literary qualities. Attraction is the first element; that quality of distinction expressed by 'different' is another—but all its qualities must be blended by that art which conceals art. A poster must not be fussy. Simplicity in a poster is strength. Color adds charm, while grace too is essential. It has been a pleasure to work on 'The Unchastened Woman' series. Miss Valentine's personality and the character as well have lent themselves most happily to effective poster designing."

That Mr. Rice is still in his early twenties speaks well for his achievements. Constant study, high ideals, a marvelous color facility and command of lines should take him ever farther along the road to artistic success.

First Aerial Mail Trip Shows in Gaumont Graphic

GAUMONT Graphic No. 8 shows the inauguration of the United States aerial mail service. The aeroplanes leaving New York at 11.30 a. m. on May 15, and three hours and twenty minutes later Major Fleet, of the Aerial Mail Service, arriving in Washington and being greeted by President Wilson, the Cabinet, Foreign Ambassadors and other distinguished guests are shown.

First stages of the German Drive of March 21 are pictured, we see the British holding back the Huns, the heavy artillery in action, the bringing up of the left flank of the French which reinforced the British, the evacuation of threatened villages, the arrival of English reserves, thousands of captured Germans, and finally the American troops rushed to the front.

Another subject shows how by means of scientific cultivation in France the land is being made to yield the maximum. In Chicago, an improved steam shovel digging underground and doing the work of two hundred men; the repairing and laundering of flags, and the training of boys for the Navy are shown.

The annual rush of students of the University of Pennsylvania is depicted and the motion picture actress Gertrude McCoy is shown, turning over her scrap books to be auctioned off for the benefit of the Red Cross drive.

Several Houses Increase Runs on "The Eagle's Eye"

SOME of the leading motion picture exhibitors have found "The Eagle's Eye" such an attraction that they are increasing the run of each episode. Nixon & Nirdlinger recently forwarded a contract calling for three days on each episode instead of the two days originally booked for the Colonial theater at Germantown, Pa. Poli's Bijou at New Haven changed original booking to open on Sunday night instead of Monday, and the Strand theater at Youngstown, Ohio, increased their original booking from three days to four days run on each episode.

S. Z. Poli, the proprietor of Poli's Theatrical Enterprises, wrote the following to the Wharton Releasing Corporation in regard to the change at the Bijou:

"I am pleased to inform you that we have been very successful in presenting 'The Eagle's Eye' the past few weeks by opening it on Sundays rather than on Mondays as formerly.

"The Sunday opening gives a greater scope for advertising in the Sunday papers and to my way of thinking, based on personal observation, 'The Eagle's Eye,' properly exploited by the man who exhibits it, is unquestionably one of the biggest draws on the screen, especially for a Sunday night concert. It is timely, and surely authentic, which adds greatly to its drawing powers."

"Universal Appeal" in "Mickey."

IN speaking of the requirements for successful motion pictures a representative of the Western Import Company says: "A universal appeal is the guiding star toward which producers are straining. They are agreed on the essentials like heart interest. That is evident, for even some of the big war pictures of today have the heart interest to bind together the other essentials of the play.

"The result of producer efforts, and how far they have succeeded in producing this universal appeal is evidenced by the public's response. Each of the objections is only to an essential basic appeal which has been overdone. How Mack Sennett, who produced 'Mickey,' analyzed the situation is interesting and unique. He supervised the direction. He could handle the humorous situations, as humor was his field, but he did not want 'Mickey' to be a comedy, pure and simple. It must be a step ahead, interwoven with humor and pathos, love and adventure. He therefore secured four directors, each an expert in his particular field. No one but an expert could have produced the original humorous situations in 'Mickey' or the wonderful horse race, or the romantic wistful love story, with its pathetic touches. And no one could better portray the versatile, mischievous little tomboy, or the vivacious debutante heiress of a gold mine than Mabel Normand. When the picture was finished 'Mickey' was screened for a typical moving picture audience. They were unanimous in their expressions of praise, but to almost each one it appealed from a quite different angle. That was Mack Sennett's answer—'Mickey' had the universal appeal he had aimed for."

Stuart Holmes in "When Man Betrays."

In the new Graphic Film production "When Man Betrays," directed by Ivan Abramson, the "heavy" role, that of Frederick Barton, is portrayed by the well-known actor Stuart Holmes. In this role he is said to have created a character of great worth from a dramatic point of view because it so strongly emphasizes its unworthiness from a moral standpoint, and shows the depths to which an unscrupulous man can descend in furtherance of his own ends.

In contradistinction to his work on the screen, Mr. Holmes is said to be in real life a man of kindly impulses, intensely fond of animals, and in no way to resemble the characters he portrays.

All of the scenes for "When Man Betrays" have been "shot," the film is now being cut and assembled, and will be ready for release within a short time.

"It's a Great Life"—Fifth Jester.

After much discussion as to what the fifth of the Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, the International Mirth Maker, was to be named, the title "It's a Great Life" was finally decided on. Giving a picture a proper name today is said to be as big a problem as it is to get the right kind of material, as a name can hardly be suggested that has not in some way been used before.

Mr. Steiner has impressed upon his entire production staff that under no circumstances are they to use a name similar to one already on the market and in no way to trade on what has gone before, claiming that there is still enough originality left in the world of pictures to be able to create new ideas.

New Leading Lady for King-Bee Films.

The King-Bee Comedy company at their Hoolywood studio are working at top speed. During the month of May they turned out three two-reel comedies, namely "Bright and Early," "Straight and Narrow," and "Playmates."

In the last two comedies a new leading ingenue is prominently cast. Her name is Myrtle Lind, and she is said to be the handsomest of all the beauties that have played opposite Billy West in the King-Bees.

"Playmates" Is Latest King Bee.

The name of the new Billy West King Bee Comedy just completed at the Hollywood studio is entitled "Playmates." It will be released by the King-Bee Film Corporation July 1.

The other "playmates" in this new comedy include Babe Hardy, Leo White, Budd Ross, Ethel Gibson, and Director Chas. Parrott, who makes his debut as an actor in King-Bee Comedies, portraying a dope fiend.

Advertising Aids For Fourth Petrova Picture

IN order that exhibitors may exploit "Tempered Steel," the fourth special Petrova picture on the widest scale, arrangements have been completed whereby the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and the Petrova Picture Company will join publicity forces to accomplish this end. The story of "Tempered Steel" is said to offer unlimited possibility in the way of exploitation and advertising, inasmuch as it is a melodrama with innumerable "punch" scenes and wonderful photographic effects. The following exploitation aids and accessories have been prepared at the First National Exhibitors' Circuit office for the benefit of exhibitors.

A varied assortment of one, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters, complete sets of black and white photographs, size 8x10 of scenes from the play. A set of photographs size 11x14 for lobby display. Additional photographs of the star herself and scenes from the play in size 22x28 for lobby and window display. A complete assortment of single column and double column cuts suitable for newspaper use, together with slides, novelty heralds, window cards, and a four-page press sheet containing suggestions and other aids.

Combined with this advertising matter, the publicity department of the Petrova Picture Company will offer for the use of exhibitors the following material: Special cuts of Madame Petrova and her leading man, Thomas Holding, suitable for newspaper, magazine and program use, together with matrixes of same. A complete set of thumb nail cuts of Madame Petrova and Thomas Holding to be used as a border for newspaper advertisements. Special photographs of Madame Petrova and Thomas Holding in several different poses for newspaper and program use. Exclusive photographs done in sepia brown of Madame Petrova, together with a set of photographs size 10x14 for lobby display and additional special pictures of the Polish star size 15x20 personally autographed. Special twenty-four sheet art stands of Madame Petrova and publicity stories, together with suggestions and stunts.

In addition, the Petrova Picture Company has prepared a beautiful lobby display novelty for the use of exhibitors. It consists of a photograph on glass of the Polish actress, done in several colors. This novelty is electrically lighted and as the passerby watches, the photographic pose changes into many different positions, each change being accompanied by a different color effect.

Twede Dan Starts on Tenth Jester.

Twede Dan, the International Mirth Maker, has returned from a brief vacation and will start work on the tenth, eleventh and twelfth of the Jester Comedies, which will complete the work of the first year's output, and bring the releases up to January, 1919.

Warwick Back Gets First View of His Last Picture

CAPTAIN ROBERT WARWICK, star of "The Accidental Honeymoon," only saw the screen presentation of this, his latest picture, a few days ago; after many thousands of his admirers had already seen it.

Actors have their favorite roles and best liked vehicles, and Captain Warwick is said to have a warm affection for this production. It was his last work before going to the fighting front in France from which he recently returned. As it was not possible for him to pass upon the actual screen result before going abroad, he arranged to see it immediately upon his return.

In speaking of this rather unique experience, Captain Warwick said, "So long a time had elapsed between the making of the picture and my inspection of it, and so much has happened to me in that time, that I was able to look upon it in a very impartial way. It almost seemed to me as though it was another actor rather than myself, who was appearing before me. However, I was immensely pleased at the production and will say, though I fear it may seem a trifle immodest, that I think the 'Accidental Honeymoon' one of the most pleasing pictures I ever worked in."

"Million Dollar Mystery" a Thrilling Six-Reeler

THE revised "Million Dollar Mystery," now being released, is the result of cutting down the original serial, which is said to have been one of the most successful serials ever filmed.

Produced originally by the Thanhouser Film Corporation from a story by Harold McGrath arranged for the screen by Lloyd Lonergan, it was directed by the late Howell Hansel ,and numbered among the cast, James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Sidney Bracey, Frank Farrington Irving Cummings, and the late Florence LaBadie.

It was released in twenty-three episodes of two reels each, and the Thanhouser Film Corporation offered $10,000 for the solution of the mystery which was to be used in the two closing reels. The prize was won by a St. Louis stenographer.

The cutting of this serial from 47,000 feet to 6,000 feet is said to have consumed seven months and two weeks, during which time the film was run off several hundred times while the best sections were being selected, and the story gradually reduced in length. In its present shape, the thrills, suspense and continuity are said to have been retained.

The United States and Canadian rights to the serial are controlled by the Randolph Film Corporation, and the revised six-reel edition is being sold on state right basis by Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York.

"News" No. 9 Shows President Leading Red Cross Parade

AMONG the many items of interest in Gaumont News Number Nine are views showing President Wilson leading the parade in New York which inaugurated the Red Cross drive for $100,000,000, also a view of the President, together with Mrs. Wilson and Colonel House.

The arrival at San Francisco of 300 Belgian fighters who are returning from Russia to the western front, after journeying across Siberia and the Pacific Ocean is also pictured. Accompanying these soldiers is Madame Maria Botchkarova, who organized the famous Russian "Battalion of Death."

In connection with the war news, the battle in progress on the Picardy front occupies a prominent portion of this reel. There are shown, soldiers and "tanks" hurrying to the front, the bombardment by the monster guns which stopped the Prussian advance, the replacement by fresh soldiers of those fatigued by ceaseless fighting, and thousands of Germans happy because they have been captured.

Another scene shows Captain Resnati, of the Royal Italian Flying Corps, who recently plunged to his death while exhibiting a large Caproni bi-plane. The testing of thousands of pigeons, to be used by the army, a military horse show and other timely subjects complete the reel.

Binney Building Laboratory

HAROLD J. BINNEY, who produces the "Josh Binney Comedies," is building a thoroughly up to date laboratory in Jacksonville, Florida. The new building will be of steel and concrete faced with cream colored brick and will be of fireproof construction throughout. It will be located on Ninth street immediately adjoining the Klutho Studios, in which Mr. Binney is producing his pictures.

This laboratory is designed very much like the one which he built in Houston, Texas, for the Master Motion Picture Company, which was pronounced by many as being the most ideal in the country. It is necessary, in the South, to give great care to atmospheric temperatures and this condition is uniquely taken care of in the new plant.

A circulation of air will always be maintained and the means of heating or cooling same, so as to be able to always maintain an even temperature of 65 degrees is very simple and effective. The system used is the result of long and careful study and many experiments on Mr. Binney's part.

This side of picture producing is not one that every director attempts to master, but it has been more or less of a hobby with Mr. Binney. His work in this respect has resulted in many unusual and novel effects in his comedies. It is announced that the new laboratory will be operating not later than the first of July.

Petrova Preparing for War Savings Stamp Tour

Finishes Final Scenes for "Patience Sparhawk," Her Fifth Special Picture, and Is Getting Ready for Country-Wide Trip.

MADAME OLGA PETROVA is now winding up her affairs prior to her departure on a country-wide tour in behalf of the Thrift Stamp movement. The final scenes of "Patience Sparhawk," her fifth special production, were filmed during the past week, and she expects to leave New York early in June. Her representatives is in Washington at the present time conferring with government officials regarding co-operation during the campaign.

Many requests are said to have been received from War Saving Stamp Committees throughout the country for Madame Petrova to work in conjunction with their efforts, including a wire from D. S. Culver, of the Minneapolis commission, to Petrova's representative: "Understand you start nation-wide tour next Monday to promote war saving stamp purchases, please register this as most urgent request that you be sent to Minnesota between now and May 20 for week in this state; need you badly, as we have drive scheduled first week June."

Efforts are being made to arrange for the use of a special train so that no time may be lost in making jumps from one territory to another. The itinerary will embrace Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Omaha, Butte, Laramie, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Phoenix, Tucson, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and New York.

It is said that the trip will be exploited in the same manner as a theatrical attraction, with advance agents, twenty-four sheet billing, and newspaper stories. A camera man will also accompany the party to film items of interest and make a pictorial record of the trip.

Fine Settings a Feature of Bacon-Backer Picture

CONTRACTS recently entered into by Foursquare Pictures provide for the showing of "Men," the Bacon-Backer six-reel feature, in some of the William Fox theaters, including the Terminal theater in Newark, the Academy of Music in New York, and other first run houses in this circuit.

In addition to the interest in the story and strong cast, the settings, which are the work of George Backer, are said to be a feature of the production. "Those who know Mr. Backer's skill as a builder are aware that he is no less expert in the matter of interior furnishings," says an official of Foursquare, "and to 'Men' he gave the closest attention with respect to the design of the settings and selection and arrangement of furniture, hangings and decorations."

Reports from the various exchanges are said to indicate that exhibitors are well pleased with this picture, and a large number of bookings are being secured.

Elmer J. McGovern

THE work of re-editing and retitling productions which are being released by the W. H. Productions Company, including the William S. Hart and Bessie Barriscale features, together with the series of Shorty Hamilton, Charlie Chaplin and Keystone comedies, is being done by Elmer J. McGovern, who is the production editor.

Work of this kind requires considerable experience and understanding of the various phases of the motion picture industry, and Mr. McGovern in addition to possessing these requirements is also acquainted with a large number of exhibitors and has made a thorough study of the industry for a number of years, having practically grown up with it.

In the past four or five months he has re-edited and retitled twenty-eight Keystone comedies, three Hart features, five Bessie Barriscale features, sixteen Shorty Hamilton western comedy-dramas and twenty-six one and two-reel Charlie Chaplin comedies.

Entering the film business several years ago in the employ of a trade paper, Mr. McGovern has been identified with the industry in several capacities, such as assistant to the president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, general manager of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., and studio and casting director for the Vitagraph Company. He is also the author of a number of successful photoplays.

Girls of Two Boston Exchanges Form Club

The Nicawaba Girls of Pathe and General Film Offices Will Run a Summer Home Near Sea—To Commute to Work Daily.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—"The Nicawaba Girls," a club made up of the girls of the General and Pathe exchanges, is to have a summer's vacation and at the same time do a summer's work. They will rent a cottage at Nantasket Beach, one of New England's popular summer resorts, from which they will travel to work every day and return in the evening. The cottage is to be rented for the entire season. This plan will afford the girls the full opportunity to enjoy the real outdoors and turn them out in perfect condition for a good day's work. A dance is to be held soon after the club is established in its new quarters and the employes of the two exchanges will be invited.

The cottage will be leased from May 30 till the latter part of September. The girls who will make up the party are: Miss May Brown, president of the club; Genevieve Taylor, Dolly Lynch, Lula Sullivan, Lydia Brown, Marion Scully, Mildred Pratt, Irene Grant, Ernestina Brown.

Robert Cobe Traveling.

Robert Cobe, assistant to manager Harry Segal of the Globe Feature Film, Boston, is now traveling in the New England territory, handling special productions for both the Globe and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Newsies See Empy Film Free.

Boys of the Boston Traveller-Herald to the number of several hundred were guests of the management of the Globe theater one night this week at the showing of Sergt. Arthur G. Empey's war film, "Over the Top." The Traveller-Herald gave a large amount of free advertising to the film showing as a result of this action by the management.

Keith's Net Sum for Red Cross.

During Red Cross drive week here the B. F. Keith's vaudeville theater and the Boston theater, one of Boston's largest motion picture houses, also owned by the Keith's interests, took up a collection for the fund and also sold articles which had been donated to the Red Cross. The sale and subscription netted $1,673 for the Red Cross.

"Hearts of World" Show for Red Cross.

A special performance of Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was given at the Majestic theater for the benefit of the Red Cross. The total receipts of the performance were turned into the Red Cross fund. A large sum was realized. The picture is on its eighth week at the Majestic and playing to big houses daily.

Red Cross Benefit at Tremont Temple.

A benefit performance was held at the Tremont Temple, Boston, showing "My Four Years in Germany," the proceeds were turned over to the Red Cross, and the receipts were very large for that night. The picture will now be shown on Sundays at Tremont Temple, which will be the first Sunday showing of the film in New England.

Quincy Woman's Club Asked to Censor.

Quincy, Mass.—The Woman's Club Federation of this city has been asked by Mayor Joseph Whiton to censor the motion pictures shown in the local theaters. This action is the result of the showing of a film recently which had girls in semi-nude attire gamboling about on a stage, and some with American flags about them. Members of the Grand Army and other patriotic bodies took exception to this misuse of the American flag. The federation has taken the matter under advisement and may appoint a committee. Quincy has four motion picture houses.

Bobby Connolly at Soriero Houses.

Manager Thomas D. Soriero, of the Park theater in Boston, and manager of the Strand theater in Lowell, Mass., played a regular Red Cross program in these two houses during Red Cross week. He made a special trip to New York and secured the juvenile Vitagraph star, Bobby Connolly, to appear in both houses the first three days of the week. "Bobby" was introduced to Boston audiences by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The first night of his campaign Bobby secured $17,000 for the Red Cross.

Ernest Whitford at Camp.

Ernest Whitford, who has been with the General Film, Boston, for over five years, has been taken in the national draft and is now training at Camp Devens.

C. S. Baldwin Buys Another Theater.

Keene, N. H.—The Majestic theater, formerly owned by E. L. Campbell and H. C. Campbell, has been sold to Charles S. Baldwin, owner of the Scenic theater of Keene. The Scenic and the Majestic are the only theaters in the town. Mr. Baldwin will close the Majestic and run the Scenic for a time. When the Majestic is rebuilt and refurnished he will close the Scenic and run only the Majestic. The policy of the theater will be announced later.

Louis Mayer Takes More Features.

Louis Mayer, of the American Features Corp., Boston, has taken over a number of the Universal state rights pictures, among them are: "The Risky Road," "Scarlet Drop," "Two-Souled Woman," "A Bride's Awakening," "Her Body in Bond," "My Own United States" and "Even as You and I."

Maritime Provinces Letter.

By Alice Fairweather, "Standard," St. John, N. B.

Tax Driving Exchanges from St. John.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—An item of much interest to exhibitors in St. John is the possible removal of the exchanges at present located in St. John to the city of Moncton.

I. Soskin, representing the Film Exchange of Canada, was in Moncton on May 17 and interviewed the city council of Moncton with reference to the change.

Mr. Soskin said it has been found necessary to make this change on account of the excessive taxation in St. John, the recently imposed municipal tax proving to be the last straw, in addition to censorship taxes and licenses. Mr. Soskin left for Truro and Halifax, both of which places are anxious to secure the exchanges in their cities.

There are about seventy people employed in the offices, and the move will mean the changing of the centre of the film exchange business from St. John, where it was originally established.

It is claimed by the exchanges that the overhead expenses are heavy and that money is being lost in the offices of all firms. The taxes of one company would amount to nearly $450 under the new regulations and this, in addition to all other expenses, is felt to be too great a burden.

Among Theaters of the Provinces.

J. M. Franklin's new theater, the Strand, at Sydney, C. B., is progressing rapidly and is to be a very fine house.

Billy Cozner's theater at Sydney will not be ready till about October, as it has been found necessary to remove some buildings upon the site chosen.

Both pictures houses in Campbellton, N. B., are doing well. The Imperial, managed by Miss Laura MacIntyre, has splendid houses. The Opera House, under the management of Don McRea, plays to good audiences.

The Unique theater, St. John, has been running several Fox pictures with good success. Recently the latest of the Pathe service opened at this theater, "The Price of Folly."

The Opera House, St. John, continues to attract its usual splendid crowds, who seem deeply interested in "The Mystery Ship" (Universal) and the adventures of "Vengeance and the Woman" (Vitagraph).

At the Star theater, St. John, the Fox picture, "Fair Play," drew a good crowd and is a really fine production in every particular. "The Hidden Hand" opens here this week.

The Nickel theater, St. John, showed Frederick Warde in "Silas Marner" to good audiences.

Made Children Demand Vaccination.

Owing to the prevalence of smallpox the theater managers were asked to cooperate with the City Board of Health in an endeavor to have the children vaccinated. It is not compulsory as yet throughout the city, but this was regarded as a precautionary measure. An order was passed that after Saturday, May 18, no children under sixteen may enter any city theater unless a certificate of successful vaccination can be shown. A placard to this effect was posted in the lobbies, and the popularity of the movies has been shown by the very large number of children who have demanded that they shall be vaccinated.

What Exchange Men Are Doing.

The Regal Film Company and the Metro Film Service have moved into new quarters, sharing the same office and working together under the same roof.

E. Bizar, manager of the Regal Film Company and the Metro Film Service, has gone back to the United States and his place is taken by E. Teele, formerly of His Majesty's theater at Sherbrooke, Que. The combined offices are in the building on Dock street formerly occupied by the Perkins Electric Company.

The Regal Company has H. H. McArthur as manager, E. A. Brown as sales-manager. The films handled are Goldwyn, Globe, Triangle, Paralta and World.

The Metro has the Petrova, Charlie Chaplin, and the releases of the First National Exhibitors.

Baltimore Trade Letter for the Week

Baltimore Film Exchange in Its New Offices—Managerial Changes Among the Distributing Companies and Theaters—Notes of Interest.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

Baltimore Film in New Office.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The new location and arrangement of the Baltimore Film exchange, on the second floor of the building at 412 East Baltimore street, is a veritable model for cleanliness, efficiency and layout. This exchange is under the management of Peter Oletzky, who has surrounded himself with a corps of hard workers, among whom are M. Seigel and S. Pelsweig, salesmen; Miss Virginia Reihl, bookkeeper, and Miss Anna Hastry, stenographer. The film and poster department include two men and two women.

As you enter the new quarters you find yourself in a large, spacious room, on two sides of which run a counter, over which the business of the film and poster department is done. To your right, behind the counter, you can look straight into the poster department and back into the film mending room, while on the left, opposite the poster racks, is the neatly arranged private projection room.

From this counter to the back of the building is about 70 feet with a width of 20. In the rear, to the left, as you face the back, is being built a concrete vault for the storage of film, which will measure about 6 by 10 feet.

Then when you turn to the front you enter a small private reception room from which doors open into the clerk's office and the private office of Mr. Oletzky.

The measurements of the whole floor space are about 100 by 20 feet. There are many windows on the sides, front and back.

E. Schucks Now in Service.

The Fairmount theater, 121 North Clinton st, will now be run under the management of John Schilpp, as E. Schucks, who has piloted the affairs of this playhouse for several years, has now been called to the colors.

Philadelphia Trade Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Historic Scene Filmed.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A motion picture of the members of the League to Enforce Peace signing a declaration of international importance was made Thursday, May 16, at Independence Hall. The same room was used in which the Declaration of Independence was signed. Headed by ex-President William Howard Taft, the scene was made a notable affair by reason of the members having enacted a part similar to the ones made by their famous predecessors. The picture is expected to be shown by the various weeklies in the very near future.

William Katz Back at the Stanley.

William Katz, formerly a manager of the Stanley theater, has returned to Philadelphia after a brief vacation and will resume work in a managerial capacity in the very near future. His career at the Stanley has been a notable one, inasmuch as he was employed there for over three years, while the theater has always been considered the criterion of Philadelphia for the finest presentation of photoplays.

Joe Battersby in Khaki.

Joe Battersby, formerly manager of the Savoy theater, has answered his country's call and enlisted in the aviation branch of the army.

A Rather Dull Week in Philadelphia.

The apparent dropping off of the attendance at the photoplay theaters has been the topic of discussion among the exhibitors of Philadelphia during the past week. In view of the reopening of all of the amusement parks, this apparently is the chief cause for the short dull period now being experienced.

War Chest Drive Film Ready.

A trailer nearly 200 feet long, boosting the Philadelphia War Chest drive, has been made and is now being distributed by the Motion Picture Committee, made up of L. C. Beggs, Frank W. Buhler, A. L. Einstein and M. Greenwalt.

Lewis Newman with United Exhibitors.

Lewis Newman, formerly manager of a local exchange, has been appointed the manager of the United Exhibitors' Cooperative Booking exchange, of Philadelphia.

W. D. Reel Dead.

W. D. Reel, who was assistant manager of the Market Street theater and also formerly manager of the Ruby theater, died last week at the age of 68 years. Mr. Reel has had quite a varied career, having been in the navy for several years before he entered the amusement field. H was in the employ of the Central Market Amusement Company for over three years while employed in the above theaters.

Utica Trade Letter

By Clifford A. Carroll, Utica Observer.

Exhibitors Are on the Job.

UTICA, N. Y.—The summer season for the silent drama has opened in Utica in a fine manner. Practically every house is offering the best to be had in the line of big features. The Alhambra and De Luxe recently played Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," and with the co-operation of a Utica newspaper asked the people of Utica with automobiles to donate them for the purpose of bringing the children from the orphan homes to the theater so that they might see this picture as the guests of the management. The picture played each of the two houses for three days during the week. During its run at the DeLuxe a chorus of 60 voices from a local choir sang appropriate songs before, during and after the picture. The same theaters this week are showing Arteraft's "The Whispering Chorus," and as an added feature "A Dog's Life," Charlie Chaplin's latest picture.

The Avon opened the week with "Joan of Plattsburg" and a new episode of "The Son of Democracy," and the last half of the week Charles Ray in "The Hired Man" with an O. Henry story.

The Hippodrome, changing programs daily, offers a big generous show made up of mostly first-run releases.

The New Orpheum, a neighborhood house, is doing a fine business considering the fact that all of the booking is done at the owner's home in Niagara Falls.

The Orpheum was formerly the South Street theater and is using second and third-run features, with sometimes two five-reel features in one day.

Fox and Vitagraph features are found regularly at the Majestic. The Colonial, the local Keith house, is playing the last three days Bryant Washburn in Pathe's "Twenty-One." The popular Metro brand of features is shown at this theatre the first three days of every week.

Instead of cutting down their advertising space in the daily papers, as is usual in the spring, considerable more space is being taken, and window cards, used by the Alhambra and De Luxe, are considered a fine aid to business. These two houses have an enterprising advertising manager who has placed wooden frames in advantageous positions in store windows in which the cardboard signs are placed. It is a good stunt, for the cards are assured of the same fine location every week. The exhibitors of Utica are a wideawake bunch and are constantly springing new stunts and playing only the best of pictures, thus assuring Utica patrons fine entertainment in the photoplay world.

CINCINNATI TRADE BREVITIES.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

Red Cross Atmosphere at the Gifts.

CINCINNATI, O.—McMahan & Jackson, who have been prominent in all of the patriotic movements in Cincinnati, helped along the Red Cross drive during the week of May 20 in more ways than one. Visitors to the Gifts theater were reminded of the Red Cross campaign by the fact that the pretty girl ushers and ticket-sellers at the theaters were garbed in the attractive Red Cross uniform, while the fountain in the foyer at the Vine street entrance was removed to make room for a booth at which contributions were received for the benefit of the relief organization. The latest Fox release, "Rough and Ready," featuring William Farnum, was the attraction during the week.

Clifford Theater Burns.

Urbana, O.—A fire destroyed the Clifford theater, erected by Billy Single Clifford, with a loss of about $75,000, partially covered by insurance.

"The Remaking" Is Packing Houses.

Canton, O.—The exhibition of the Camp Sherman film, "The Remaking of a Nation," at the Alhambra theater, was a huge success. Several civic organizations, including the Rotary and Aderaft clubs, aided by the Boy Scouts, helped the engagement by selling tickets. At Massillon, also, the picture drew heavily when shown at the Lincoln theater, Manager F. A. Kelley reporting a total attendance in one day of over 3,000 people. "The Remaking of a Nation" bids fair to become the official picture of cantonment life, and its historical and educational value as a true portrayal of the making of National Army soldiers is beyond question.

What Pictures Are Doing.

The Jewel production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which ran for a week at the Lyric theater, has made a record as one of the most exciting of the string of patriotic films which have been seen in Cincinnati recently.

The enthusiasm with which Cincinnatians greeted the third engagement of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand was such that the engagement was extended into a second week.

Newark Trade Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

Exhibitors Aid Red Cross.

NEWARK, N. J.—The exhibitors have been of material aid to the Red Cross workers in Newark in their effort to "go over the top." Of course, every theater visited by the World correspondent had at least one of the official Red Cross signs, showing that the exhibitor was a member. But not only by contributing money to the fund were the exhibitors helpful. In the choice of their programs, which were at least partially patriotic, they also scored.

Spring Theater Changes Hands.

The Spring theater at West Hoboken, N. J., has been taken over by a newly-organization corporation, and after necessary alterations and improvements the show house will reopen under the new name of the Strand. The theater is at 405 Spring street. The official title of the corporation, capitalized at $5,000, is the Strand Theater Company of West Hoboken, and the registered agent is A. L. Kohnfeld. The incorporators besides Mr. Kohnfeld include Leo Weil and A. Jacobs.

Newark Exhibitor Bankrupt.

William S. Umberger, formerly owner and manager of the Avon theater, 7 Avon avenue, Newark, has filed in the United States District Court a voluntary petition in bankruptcy.

"Joan" Retained at Strand.

Booked originally for four days, Mabel Normand's "Joan of Plattsburg" proved such an excellent drawing card that it was retained to finish the week at the Strand theater, 120 Market street, Newark.

New Distributing Corporation.

The Liberty Distributing Corporation, Hoboken, N. J., has been formed to deal in moving picture film. George A. Enright, with offices at 53 Newark avenue, is listed as statutory agent. The concern has an authorized capitalization of $100,000. The incorporators are Paul A. Chase, H. S. Hadley and E. Kelly.

CAPITAL CITY NOTES.

I. Smith Called in the Draft.

A sixth star has appeared in the service flag of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., Washington, D. C., marking the calling of I. Smith, another of its employees, to the colors. Mr. Smith has filled various capacities in the exchange, his most recent position being that of booker. He is at present at Spartanburg, S. C.

A. J. Nelson Wins Promotion.

The exhibitors in Washington, D. C., although glad to see a friend promoted, were very sorry to part company with A. J. Nelson, who, for the past two and a half years, has been manager in this city for the General Film Company. Mr. Nelson has been called to the home office for further service.

Mr. Nelson will be succeeded by Herbert E. Elder, who for the past year or so has been manager of the St. Louis branch of the General. Prior to that he was connected with the New York branches. He started with the company less than four years ago as shipping clerk at one of these branches and, being a regular fellow, promotion came his way.

Mr. Elder comes from the East and is glad to get back in this section again. During the past week or ten days he has been going through the territory, meeting the exhibitors whose names appear on the General's books, and he expresses himself to be well pleased with the outlook.

Jake Flax, who for many years has been associated with the Washington branch, will remain assistant manager under Mr. Elder. However, instead of spending all of his time in the office here, Mr. Flax is going to mingle more with the trade.

Cunningham Heads First National Branch

Tom Moore Gets Former Manager of Famous Players Exchange to Guide Washington, D. C., Office of the Big Circuit—New Plans.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—B. C. Cunningham, formerly manager, and E. G. Evans, formerly assistant manager, of the Famous Players exchange in the Capitol city, have just joined the Moore interests. The former has taken charge of the office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in the Capital. Mr. Evans becomes personal representative of Mr. Moore at the several theaters.

Both of these men are well known throughout the territory. Mr. Cunningham entered the film business in 1912 as manager of the Baltimore office of the Mutual Film Corporation. Within a year he came to Washington for the same company and in the same capacity, remaining here until the formation of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation. On August 16, 1916, he opened the Philadelphia office for the latter concern.

After remaining in Philadelphia for exactly eight months he went to Seattle, Wash., and a couple of months later he was recalled to the East to become manager of the branch office on Twenty-third street, New York. When the vacancy occurred in the Washington office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation he was transferred back to this city.

He will be located at 419 Ninth street, northwest, until the Rialto theater is completed, when he will have modern quarters there. Mr. Cunningham stated that Mr. Moore was kept very busy handling his large theater interests and wanted to devote more of his time to that work. Thus he has turned over to Mr. Cunningham full charge of all films he secures under his franchise in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The Moore franchise covers Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, but it is stated that the local organization is going into the market with a view to the future handling and distribution of large productions "on a basis that will insure the greatest measure of returns both to the producer and the exhibitor." With films secured outside of the circuit the Virginia territory also will be secured.

"Our policy," continued Mr. Cunningham, "will be to secure exhibitor-control that will do the utmost for the exhibitor and yield the greatest returns to the producer. We are going to franchise the exhibitors in this territory. Plans are now maturing whereby we will issue stock to all of the representative exhibitors in this territory so that they will become members of the circuit. That membership will entitle them to these films at the lowest possible rental price and enable them to participate in such profits as may be made in the circuit."

Mr. Cunningham is very enthusiastic over his new proposition and of its future, pointing to the fact that "My Four Years in Germany" is to run for two weeks at the Academy theater, in Baltimore, it having been booked by Bernard Depkin to start May 27, and that "Tarzan of the Apes" ran a full week in Wilmington and Baltimore, repeating the time in Washington.

Evans to Handle Theater Details.

Mr. Evans will handle much of the detail work incident to the several Moore theaters and becomes, after having been an exchange manager for many years, a real, sure-enough exhibitor. He will have much to do with the booking of films, reviewing them, etc. His duties will be many, but he has "taken to the job like a duck takes to water and thinks it fine."

The new personal representative of Tom Moore was formerly a Mutual man, having been associated with Mr. Cunningham as Baltimore salesman and as assistant manager. When Mr. Cunningham left Washington to join the Artcraft folks, Mr. Evans succeeded him here, and when the latter came back as manager of the Famous Players Washington exchange, his friend became assistant manager of the exchange, and now the two are associated with Tom Moore.

The managers of the Moore theaters are: Strand, Charles Plunkett; Garden, George Schneider, and Plaza, William Moore.

Eugene Wilson Heads Washington Vitagraph Exchange.

Eugene Wilson, who has been covering North Carolina and Virginia for the Washington, D. C., Vitagraph exchange since last September, has been appointed manager, succeeding to the position made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Widner. The new manager has been associated with the amusement game for the better part of thirty years, spending about ten years of that time handling motion pictures. He was with the Mutual for several years before joining V-L-S-E, and prior to that time was himself an exhibitor. For three years he was connected with Poli's Bijou theater in New Haven, Conn., and states he was the first manager to put on Paramount shows in Connecticut.

Mr. Wilson is pretty well known throughout this territory, so really needs no introduction. He has made a host of friends during his stay here and the exhibitors are genuinely glad of his promotion.

Children to See "Careless America."

Major Raymond L. Pullman, superintendent of police, Washington, D. C., is completing arrangements for the presentation of the Universal's film, "Careless America," before all of the pupils of the Washington schools and in the local theaters for the benefit of adult patrons. This is the film produced by the Universal Company under the direction of H. S. Firestone, president of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, and shows the dangers in the big cities from careless and reckless drivers of automobiles, and the general lack of knowledge of the rules of the road. In the reel there is shown the destruction of nine touring cars through careless and reckless driving. The reel is a "thriller," and so impressed Major Pullman that he has gone to the local exhibitors asking them to run it in their houses.

Theater Often Used by Government.

Crandall's Knickerbocker theater, Washington, D. C., is being used to a considerable extent in pushing America's war program to the fullest possible extent. There is not a week passing but that the house is not turned over for a part of one or several days to some organization or part of the Government for propaganda or benefit purposes.

The Knickerbocked has been a favorite with the Four-Minute Men and they are using it to good advantage. Last week, however, they caused a near riot on the part of men and women anxious to pay homage to the war heroes. When the local committee saw the opportunity, without any advance notice to the management, they rushed a delegation of visiting "Blue Devils" for a Red Cross-War Savings Stamp campaign stunt. It was just at the end of the show. The valiant French soldiers were led to the stage, the house orchestra playing the "Marseillaise." The troopers sang the song, and upon its completion the patriotic songs of our own country were played on the organ, the audience singing. The soldiers then went out into the lobby for the benefit of those who had been unable to get into the house. They received a great ovation in the street, for these Frenchmen, heroes all, are great favorites in Washington. They spent the balance of the evening viewing the show.

Few Airdomes Will Open in Louisville

Weather Grows Warm, but Open Air Theaters Have Not Done Well in the Past Two Seasons—Daylight Saving Also a Factor Against Them.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Late May weather has been unusually hot in Louisville this year, necessitating use of electric fans, exhaust fans and cooling systems somewhat earlier than usual. Howevef, the weather has been too uncertain for the airdomes to start operating so far, and it is questionable as to whether many of them will make any effort this year due to the fact that very little money has been made out of the open-air propositions in the past two or three seasons. However, a few airdomes which can call on the soldier business will probably do fairly well this year, as flannel shirts don't carry much comfort in closed theaters, and the male population rather prefers the airdome, where there is greater comfort, and where the male is privileged to smoke.

The daylight saving plan is beginning to be unfavorable more and more as the days grow longer, as people stay out late, and there is hardly any business at the 7:30 shows, while attendance at the 9 o'clock performances is not what it should be.

Reports from Lexington, Winchester and other cities in the boom oil district of eastern Kentucky show that the moving picture theaters have handled a nice volume of business this year. In those cities the moving picture theaters constitute the greater portion of the afforded amusement. Oil operations have been picking up at a fast pace, and thousands of new men have entered the field within the past two years, resulting in several of the towns building up materially.

Paducah Theaters and the Operators' Union At Odds.

A disagreement has come up between the moving picture exhibitors of Paducah and the Paducah operators' union. The difficulties were recently taken up at a meeting of the Central Labor Union and resolutions adopted in which the attitude of the theater men was held as unfriendly. An arbitration committee which reported investigations claimed that union men had been forced to work overtime without additional pay; that exhibitors released union men and filled their places with non-union men secured through representation that no union exists in Paducah, and that a general antagonistic attitude was shown by the employers in regard to union labor. This action followed a conference held in Paducah some time ago between Vice-President Canavan of the International Operators' Union and the local theater men, at which no agreement was reached. The theater managers deny that they have violated any union contracts and claim they have paid for all overtime.

Juvenile Film Censors Elect.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Censors of Children's Motion Pictures for Louisville Mrs. Robert L. Moors was elected president, succeeding Mrs. Fred Levy, through whose efforts the organization was formed several years ago. Mrs. Levy was elected vice-president, Mrs. Hugh Leavell secretary and Mrs. J. B. Arbegust treasurer. It was decided to continue showing Saturday pictures for children at the Strand free of charge until the Lincoln series is completed, about the middle of June, when the picture shows for children will be discontinued until fall.

Suits Follow Theater Disaster.

Winchester, Ky.—The third of a series of suits growing out of the disaster which wrecked the Pastime theater, of Winchester, Ky., a few months ago, was filed last week by Sonny Hatton, through his father, W. F. Hatton, asking damages of $30,000 for permanent injuries. The city of Winchester, the management of the theater, and the owners of the adjoining property from which the wall fell, are made defendants.

Sunday Show Manager Indicted.

The Grand Jury at Henderson, Ky., in adjourning a few days ago, returned six indictments against Louis Hayes, proprietor of the Princess theater, charging him with operating on Sunday in violation of the state laws. So far as is known the jury returnded no indictments against other operators.

Business Notes From Louisville.

Following the completion of the vaudeville season at the Mary Anderson theater, the Keith house, the theater showed the Ambassador Gerard picture, "My Four Years in Germany." This picture made such a big hit that it was carried over for a second week's showing.

The Louisville picture theaters have been doing good work in the big Red Cross drive, showing slides, etc., and arranging to allow speakers to talk to the audiences on the needs of the Red Cross in pushing the big summer campaign.

The Walnut theater, Louisville, packed 'em in during the showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," playing to more than 12,000 people inside of two days.

Tennessee Trade Letter

By J. L. Ray, Nashville, Tenn.

Builds Giant Open-Air Theater.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—At the new government powder works, located in the suburbs of Nashville, one of the largest open-air theaters ever erected in the South is now in operation for the showing of moving pictures. The seating capacity is 5,000, with standing room for additional thousands. A monster screen has been erected, and pictures are shown every night to the great army of men at work on the project. The seats are built on an inclined slope, with the stage and screen at the bottom.

A record was made in building this mammoth open-air theater, the entire structure, including seats, stage, screen and other facilities being put in complete working order in the short period of two days. The rapidity of the work resulted, of course, from a big force of men put to work on the project. First class pictures are shown, both comedies and dramas, with the comedy films having the preference.

"Birth" Film Wrangle in Jackson.

The mayor and commissioners of Jackson, Tenn., acting upon the statutory law and an ordinance of the city, attempted to prevent the play, "The Birth of a Nation," from showing in Jackson. Notice was served on Dan Williamson, owner and manager of the Lyric theater, on May 6 that the picture would not be allowed. Mr. Williamson sought and obtained from Chancellor Ross an injunction to restrian the city authorities from carrying out the order. The Chancellor heard argument on the motion of the city to dismiss the injunction, and held that, under the rule of law, proof was necessary to show the court that the result would be harmful. In the absence of such proof the court refused to dismiss the restraining order, and thus the play was allowed to proceed.

The court gave a very elaborate oral opinion, which was accepted without further action by the city authorities and the Pastors' Association, who sought to prevent the play on the grounds that it was calculated to inflame public opinion.

Dayton Trade Letter

By P. J. G., Dayton Theater Bldg., Dayton.

Famous Players-Lasky Auditor in Dayton.

DAYTON, OHIO.—W. J. Reich, auditor of the Famous Players-Lasky Company from the New York office, was in Dayton last week, and during his short stay the World correspondent had the pleasure of meeting him. Mr. Reich came to Dayton with Lew Foster, manager of the Famous Players exchange at Cincinnati. While in the city Mr. Reich visited the new Dayton theater, and declared it the finest he had seen for some time. In company with Mr. Foster he visited many Dayton exhibitors on business matters.

"Blue Bird" Goes Big at the Dayton.

Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," Artcraft, which was the opening attraction at the new Dayton theater, went over great, and was a money-getter, so says Mark Gates, managing director. Many school children took advantage of the Saturday morning matinee offered the last day of the engagement. High school teachers were admitted free.

Dayton Pick-Ups.

J. F. Brett, "he of the pleasant smile," visited the Gem City several days recently. Mr. Brett is one of the most pleasant men the writer has met, and is a thorough gentleman.

Dayton office of Moving Picture World now in the Dayton Theater building.

Homer V. Guy is once more with us. Homer is now managing the East Majestic, a suburban house, in conjunction with Ben Wheeler.

M. A. Malaney writes that he is to be in Dayton within the next week. Malaney publishes the "Bulletin" at Cleveland, and has a very good paper.

Urlin G. Perril visited Indianapolis last week for a day at the Circle theater.

Milton Gunckle, grand old man of the business, is now on the door at the Strand theater at Dayton.

L. C. Pollack is still at leisure, and states that he will be so for the summer. Mr. Pollack is evidently living on the interest. Anyway he still maintains that look of prosperity for which he is noted. I have not seen that Geo. M. C. cane of his for some time.

Ralph Kretzer has taken over the Victoria theater at Springfield, Ohio. The Victoria has 320 seats, and is to be entirely redecorated.

Nate Le Vene, Jr., manager of the Mutual exchange at Cincinnati, visited Dayton several days last week. Same old Nate Le Vene, Jr. Glasses and all.

Leo Udry, of Metro, "covered" Dayton last week. With him came a representative of Screen Classics, Inc., twin sister to Metro. M. J. Chernoff is the new representative, and he will make a fine impression with Dayton exhibitors.

Isodore Feibleman and Meyer Efreymson, of Indianapolis, both stockholders in the Circle, as well as the new Dayton, were in Dayton recently.

Eddy Gomersall, of Goldwyn, is to join the forces of Uncle Sam soon. Eddy is working till the last minute, however, and was in Dayton last week screening "For the Freedom of the World."

Lou Baum, of the Cincinnati Buckeye, flitted amongst us in the past week. Lou seems to think a lot of "The Doctor and the Woman."

Our old friend Elmer Rauh visited Dayton several days ago. Elmer is working for Uncle Sam at Camp Sherman, Ohio.

Gilbert Chandler, son of Martin G., is once more well, and writes that he will soon be in Dayton.

Buffalo Trade Letter

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Hanover Will Guide First National.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Irving Hanover has been appointed manager of the First National exchange, Buffalo. He has been with the company in New York since December. He was formerly with the Fox Film three years. A. T. Barnett has been appointed road man for the First National. He was former booker for this exchange. The new booker is Bert Ryde.

"This company makes it a point to advance everybody connected with the concern," said Manager Hanover, "and does not intend to look for outside help unless it is absolutely necessary."

D. J. Savage is District Manager.

Daniel J. Savage, former Buffalo manager of the First National, has been appointed district manager of the William L. Sherry Service, New York City. Howard F. Brink, former road representative of the First National, will represent the Sherry interests in the Chicago territory. Messrs. Savage and Brink carry to their new fields of endeavor the best wishes of a small army of Buffalo friends.

Theaters Aid in Red Cross Drive.

The good work which the Buffalo moving picture theaters have been doing in the Red Cross drive continues with unabated energy this week. Red Cross booths have been opened at several of the houses. All the theaters are showing an official picture, "The Spirit of the Red Cross."

New Fox Exchange Praised.

Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, recently made a thorough inspection of the company's new Buffalo branch. He said the exchange was quite up to the standard of Fox offices. This branch has received the enthusiastic approval of many theater managers who visited Buffalo the past week. George F. Hallet, Fox booker, soon will be wearing a uniform for Uncle Sam.

He left Wednesday for Katonah, N. Y., his home, where he will spend a few days before entering the army.

"Pershing's Crusaders" and No Tax.

"Pershing's Crusaders," a war film, was presented at the Majestic theater, Buffalo, one week, beginning May 26. Daniel Roper, commissioner of internal revenue, officially anounced that there would be no war tax on tickets sold for this production. The reason for this concession was that "these pictures are being displayed for educational purposes, and it is the desire of the committee on public information to make the price within the reach of all."

Picked Up Along Film Row.

Daniel Hauser, owner of the Greenwich theater, Christopher and Hudson streets, New York City, was a Buffalo visitor.

S. Handel, auditor for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, visited the company's Buffalo exchange. Earl Brink, booker for the exchange, is included in the latest army draft.

Paul Fenyvessy, of the Strand theater, Rochester, was a visitor in Buffalo, his former home. He has been accepted into the National Army.

G. A. Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn, Buffalo, is among the topnotchers in a national business-getting contest being conducted by that company.

Business is prospering at the Como moving picture theater in Buffalo's steel plant district. The house is conducted by J. S. Savage & Son. Not far from the Como, 7,000 men are employed in the Lackawanna steel plant, and about 4,000 in the Donner steel plant. Many of these employees live in this section and patronize this theater. "Our admission is straight ten cents," said Mr. Savage.

Filmdom News of the Week in Canada

Some Worthwhile Advertising Stunts in Toronto—Interesting Brevities About Exhibitors and Pictures.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

Two Good Advertising Stunts.

TORONTO, ONT.—Manager Stuart, of the Rialto theater, Toronto, played to big business during the week of May 13 through a novel advertising stunt with the presentation of Fox's "The Honor System." The whole front of the theater was made to resemble the interior of a penitentiary, with cells, barred windows, armed guards, and other fixtures of a "hoos gow." The set was painted in deep blue and black colors, giving it a sombre appearance. A husky man, garbed in prison clothes, walked the streets at large. The appearance of this jail character on the main thoroughfares created considerable excitement.

Another interesting lobby display during the same week was used at the Strand theater to advertise Chaplin's "A Dog's Life." This set, which was arranged by William Dineen, consisted of a street scene in which the characters were Chaplin, the dog "Mutt," and a policeman. The figures were cutouts, while the dog was a plaster model.

The York theater, 812 Yonge street, Toronto, presented six different features during the week of May 20, changing the attraction for each day. The attractions were "Under Suspicion," "The Flame of the Yukon," "The Strong Way," "The Face in the Dark," "Twenty-One" and "The Seal of Silence." The York theater adopted the policy of a daily change in programmes about a year ago, and a success has been made of the practice.

Notes About Canadian Theaters.

Manager Wilson opened the "Amuse-U" theater, 1186 Queen street West, Toronto, on May 15. The theater has a seating capacity of 400.

Jack Stewart, of the Unique theater, Hamilton, Ont., has purchased the Crystal theater, Burlington, Ontario, and is now operating both houses.

The Maisonneuve theater, Montreal, has changed hands. It is now manager by Mr. Rochon in succession to Mr. Lebeau.

The Alcazar theater, Montreal, has been reopened after extensive alterations.

Don McRae has been made manager of the Empire theater, Quebec, Quebec.

The Thuotoscope theater, St. Johns, Quebec, has been rebuilt and was recently re-opened, the opening attraction being "When a Man Sees Red." This theater was destroyed by fire a short time ago. It is owned by Mr. O. Thuot.

The Garrick theater, College and Dovercourt road, Toronto, has again changed hands. The new owner is W. C. Wright, a veteran theater man. Mr. Wright has not been engaged in any theatrical enterprise for the past twelve years.

Loew's theater, Toronto, booked a second-run feature for the week of May 20, when Manager Bernstein played Fox's "Les Miserables," which had been shown as a road attraction at the Royal Alexandra theater, Toronto, a few months previous.

"War Chest" Theater Committee Busy.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Theaters here are lining up strong for the War Chest drive which is on all of this week. Some time ago it was decided to do away with separate appeals for the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and other war charities and to form an organization that would cover the ground for all forms of war relief, apportioning the money to various organizations according to their needs. The result is the greatest drive that Rochester has ever known. It is soliciting from each citizen one contribution for the year. The good work done by the theaters in the Liberty Loan and other drives has convinced the committee that the best form of publicity is in the movie theaters, with the result that they are playing an important part in the campaign.

Manager J. H. Finn, of the Temple theater, is chairman of the committee in charge of the theaters, and under him are four teams captained by theater managers as follows: Jack Farren, of the Victoria; A. N. Wolff, manager of the Rialto, and president of the Rochester Exhibitors' League; W. R. Corris, of the Lyceum, and William A. Calihan, manager of the Regent, and secretary of the Regorson Company, controlling the Regent, Gordon, and Piccadilly.

Notes and Personals.

Edith Johnston, who plays opposite Franklyn Farnum, is a Rochester girl, and the Empire theater here took advantage of that fact in lining up a large crowd of fans when one of Franklyn's pictures played at that house this week.

The Lincoln theater has been undergoing its usual spring overhauling and decorating under the personal supervision of the energetic manager, Mike Carr. When the job was completed it was suggested that Manager Carr might qualify for a painting and decorating contractor, but Mike says that as a painter he was cut out to be a movie artist.

R. B. Matson, representing Vitagraph in western New York, is covering a lot of ground and covering it fast with his big National roadster.

Basil Brady, the local Pathe agent, has learned to like Rochester so well in his short time here that he has decided to stay, and is bringing his family here from New York.

MORE BUFFALO ITEMS.

Pick-Up Jottings.

"Over the Top," a Vitagraph feature founded on Empey's war book, recently had a successful run at the Teck theater, Buffalo. Manager Oishei, of the Teck, during this show gave 200 free seats to men in uniform. Henry Carr, manager of Shea's theater, also distributed many free tickets to soldier and sailor boys.

Samuel Strong, formerly with the Mutual, Buffalo, and later with the New England Features, Boston, recently visited this city on his way to Detroit.

Recent visitors in Buffalo were Mr. and Mrs. Herzberger, Auditorium theater, Perry, N. Y., and Mr. Dipson, who controls the Family and Grand theaters, Batavia.

Recent callers on T. C. Montgomery, of the Buffalo Triangle exchange, were Ben Fitzer, manager of the Regent theater, Syracuse; M. Fitzer, manager of the Happy Hour, that city, and Mr. Dygert, manager of the Rialto theater, East Rochester. Edward D. Levy has been appointed supervisor of the poster and shipping departments of the Triangle. William E. Freel, Triangle shipper, has left for Camp Dix.

Theater Changes in New York State.

Mr. Merritt, owner of the Family theater, Leroy, N. Y., has closed the Happy Hour theater, Caledonia, N. Y., formerly operated by Luther & Scott.

Wales & Brown have opened the Bijou, a ten-cent moving picture theater in Binghamton.

William Bean has leased his Majestic moving picture theater, East Ferry street, Buffalo, to Mr. Wischard.

Anderson, Ind., Prepares License Ordinance

City Council Has a Schedule of Rates for Operating Picture Theaters and Action Is Expected On It At Once.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

ANDERSON, IND.—An ordinance which would place a license tax on all motion picture theaters and other places of amusement is pending before the Anderson city council and probably will come up for passage at the next regular meeting.

After considerable wrangling at the first two meetings a motion was introduced authorizing the mayor to appoint a committee to prepare an amendment to the ordinance. The committee reported at the meeting, April 13, and introduced an amendment with the following provisions for motion picture theaters:

Theaters with a seating capacity of 400 or more, $60 a year; $45 a year for not less than 300 seating capacity nor more than 400; $30 for not less than 200 and not more than 300, and $15 for not less than 200.

The amendment was adopted without a dissenting vote and the measure probably will be brought up for a final vote at next meeting of the council.

Major Mellett, who appears to be greatly opposed to the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday, is reported to be considering the matter of closing the theaters on that day. He is said to have remarked at the council meeting recently that he thought the motion picture business should be taxed higher than any other amusement and should not be permitted to open up on Sundays.

Idle Hour Closes for Summer.

The Idle Hour theater, Newport, Ind., one of the most popular motion picture houses in this vicinity, which has been operated by Messrs. Hughes and Payne, of the Newport Hill Motor Company, for the last few years, will be closed for the next few months. It will be dismantled next week and will be converted in the repair and sales department of the company. It is probable that it will be reopened next winter.

M. Switow Will Build Theater.

Michael Switow, of Jeffersonville, Ind., has purchased the Reilly hotel property at 333-337 Spring street with a view of remodeling it and turning it into a motion picture theater, cafeteria and hotel. He says that eventually the building will be torn down and an up-to-date theater and hotel building erected in its place. Work on remodeling the structure for the new theater, cafeteria and hotel will be started immediately.

Angelo Immarino Very Sick.

The many friends of Angelo Immarino, of Cleveland, O., who formerly operated the Lyric theater in Connersville, Ind., were grieved last week when they received word that he is seriously ill and not expected to recover. Mr. Immarino left Connersville about a year ago for Cleveland, where he is engaged in business.

Auditorium at Nappanee Changes.

Charles G. Miller, Charles T. Baker, James Arch and C. J. French, of Nappanee, Ind., have taken over the management of the Auditorium theater here. They expect to make several improvements in the place this summer.

New Terre Haute Home Opens June 1.

A. E. Brentlinger, general manager of the Bankers and Merchants Theater Co., Indianapolis, which operates the Orpheum theater at South Bend and has under construction a new theater at Terre Haute, and one at Flint, Mich., has opened up offices in the Traction and Terminal building in Indianapolis.

Mr. Brentlinger says June 1 is the date set for the dedication of the new Terre Haute theater at Wabash and Eighth street.

The contract for chairs for the theater has been let to Messrs. Haywood and Wakefield, of Chicago. Mr. Brentlinger's son, Byron, will be the manager of the Terre Haute house.

Theater Changes in Muncie.

Two Muncie, Ind., motion picture theaters recently changed hands and a third went out of business. Fred Oland, of Muncie, has purchased the Royal theater here from Dr. J. E. George and expects to do a big Saturday and Sunday business throughout the summer months. The Lyric theater has been bought by John Templer, proprietor of two motion picture theaters at Portland. The Victor theater, which closed recently, has been dismantled and the room converted into a drug store.

ST. LOUIS TRADE LETTER.

Crystal Airdome Opened May 17.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—A new concrete fireproof lamphouse, new entrance and box office, and new seating accommodations throughout form but part of the improvements now under way at the Crystal airdome on Delmar, at Laurel, St. Louis.

When completed the airdome will seat twenty-five hundred people, and in conjunction with the Pageant theater directly opposite will run simultaneous shows. The Pageant has a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, and reports a very prosperous season.

The Crystal planned to open for the season on Friday, May 17, with a program of exceptional merit. Doors open at 7:30.

Cleveland Trade Letter

From M. A. Malaney, 607 Belmont Bldg., Cleveland, O.

Look Out for the Skating Rink.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—A letter received from E. E. Bair, manager of the Fayette theater, Celina, Ohio, indicates that a traveling skating rink has put business on the bum there. Mr. Bair writes so that brother exhibitors in other towns may know what they are up against if such an outfit comes to their localities. He says:

"Business was good until about six weeks ago—until the greatest competitor in years floated into town—a portable skating rink. The rink just took the dimes out of the pockets of the theaters here and also from other local business enterprises, because the people got the skating craze.

"Now what do you think of a city official who relentlessly permits these floating concerns to fly into towns for a two or three-months' period and rob local industry and staple picture theaters presenting only A-1 productions on the market? This week I closed up and gave the theater over to the Red Cross. When the theaters here are closed it loses the city $15 a week each in light current alone. The rink pays $20 per month license. Now, which is better, $20 per month for a few months or $15 a week besides the large amount of money the theaters pay out for help, supplies, advertising, etc.?

"I am writing you this merely as a favor to other exhibitors who might have to face the same conditions, and would advise them to head off anything of this kind."

Zanesville's Weller Reopens.

The big Weller theater, Zanesville, O., has been reopened by Manager Morley. The opening attraction was "The Remaking of a Nation," which is the picture made at Camp Sherman, Ohio's big cantonment.

The Weller seats 1,400. It has been redecorated and improved and no doubt will prove a very popular place of amusement.

Hot Weather Hits Shows.

In spite of the warm weather film exchanges of Cleveland continue to do a good business. Theaters, however, have not done so well, however, since the first hot day, May 5. The real hot weather has come on Sundays, and as this is the best business day of the week, receipts have taken some sharp tumbles.

Syd Rosenthal Feels Proud.

Syd Rosenthal, of the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, was wearing a proud smile the week of May 19. He had short reels playing in six first-run houses of the city. These were the Stillman, Alhambra, Mall, Metropolitan, Strand and Knickerbocker.

Syd says this is the first time a single exchange has pulled off a stunt like this.

Claims 19 Out of 30 Theaters.

Walter Forster, roadman for the Cleveland General Film Co., claims a record for bookings in the city of Akron and challenges any salesman to break it.

Up to May 22 he had booked 19 theaters in that city with Paralta plays. Of course, booking 19 houses in one city does not seem a remarkable thing, but when you consider that there are only 30 theaters in that place it is a record.

Cleveland Trade Brevities.

Walter K. Hill, former manager of the Doan theater, Cleveland, is now connected with Orchestra Hall, Chicago.

Jimmie Beale is with the General exchange, Cleveland, as booker, after having been in St. Louis for some time with the Select. He succeeds Ed Wills, who has received a merited promotion to the sales-force.

Jim Thompson, manager of the Eclair theater, Cleveland, has received a postcard from a former patron now in France with the U. S. army, reading: "Say, Jim, when we get to Berlin I will pick out a good location for a picture show for you."

S. J. Needham, handling "The Remaking of a Nation" in northern Ohio, reports he has about finished the work and leaves for Camp Sherman.

Atlanta Trade Letter

By Linton K. Starr, Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

Chaplin Goes Big.

ATLANTA, GA.—Charlie Chaplin's "A Dog's Life" came near smashing attendance records at the Rialto theater recently, running close to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which recently set new records for this city.

The Criterian also reported good business with Sergeant Empey's "Over the Top."

Oldknow Out Again.

William Oldknow, head of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, who recently underwent a surgical operation, is out again "better than ever."

E. R. Champion in Atlanta.

E. R. Champion is in Atlanta to handle Pathe's new serial, "Moral Suicide," and will cover the main cities of the southeast from this point. Mr. Champion already is well known in this section, having been here a year ago boosting "Civilization." Pathe Manager "Wild Bill" Anderson has completed arrangements with the Atlanta Georgian whereby he expects "Moral Suicide" to get a tremendous amount of publicity.

Visitors to Atlanta.

R. J. Edenfield, of the Dreamland, Augusta, and Joe Burton, of the Star, Toccoa, were among the visitors to a number of local exchanges.

Gilbert N. Tyler With Pathe.

Gilbert N. Tyler, formerly with General and Paralta, has signed up with Pathe to cover Alabama territory out of Atlanta.

IN DETROIT.

Personal and Trade Notes.

The Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Michigan, organized recently to do co-operative booking on the Pettijohn plan, has just filed articles of association under the laws of Delaware for $8,000. Of this amount $4,000 has been paid in in cash.

Harry I. Garson, president of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, purchased $5,000 of the Third Liberty Bonds.

Jack Ryder, of the State Film Co., was recently visited by William Steiner, who makes the Jester comedies, released in Michigan through the State Film Co. This exchange is having big success with these; also its series of Shorty Hamilton five-reel features.

Dave Mundstuk, of the Strand Features, is now releasing a series of four two-reel Chaplin reissues and 20 one-reelers, which he says are booking exceptionally strong.

The Vendome theater, at Grand River and Fourteenth street, has passed into the hands of M. J. Handler, who took it over May 11. He will not change the policy although he plans some extensive improvements.

Herman Warren and Ben Cohen have let contracts for remodeling the front of the Rex theater, West Fort street, Detroit. Besides they are letting contracts for the complete redecoration of the interior.

M. S. Bailey, of the General Film, reports some big bookings on Paralta plays. John M. Kunsky will play the Kerrigans in one of his downtown theaters; the Drury Lane will play the Barriscales, Glaum and Walthall pictures; the Regent, in Bay City, has booked Paralta first run, and "Bill" says the best theaters are now singing up.

Joe Horwitz, now resident partner and manager of the Foursquare exchange in Detroit, is already planning to tour east in his new motor car in time for the branch managers' convention. He will also go to Far Rockaway for a few days to see his family. Hustling Joe, as we all know him, says business is very good.

"Ramona" is now being booked to Michigan exhibitors through the State Film Co., Detroit.

H. M. Berman, general sales manager for Jewel productions, and C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager for Paralta Plays, were recent Detroit visitors.

E. J. Mooney, formerly with the U office in Minneapolis, has been appointed auditor at the Detroit U office, succeeding John A. Webber, who has returned to the home office in New York City.

J. C. Fishman, of the Standard exchange, announces the purchase of a new print of "Cleopatra," with Helen Gardner; also a new six-reel feature called "Mothers of Liberty."

Charles T. Smith, owner of the White Palace theater, Pontiac, for ten years, and one of the very oldest exhibitors in the state, died recently after a long illness.

Notes of the Trade.

Max Milder, manager of the Select exchange, has just returned from an extensive trip throughout the territory and reports satisfactory conditions.

L. Chamberlain, who recently opened the New Victoria theater in Reading, was seen in Philadelphia and reported that although business conditions were generally fair that the shipping conditions were in a most deplorable state with no prospects of relief in sight.

D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" has been booked by Mager Kendrick of the Fairmount theater, where it will be presented for one day.

H. M. Morningstar, formerly manager of the Fifty-sixth Street theater, has been appointed in charge of the Belmont theater.

Special Productions Find Favor in Michigan

Big Patriotic Features and Other Special Films Are Decidedly Popular Just Now—Offerings that Have Won Records.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The success of a number of big pictures now being released in Michigan is proof enough that what the exhibitors and the public want today is special productions. This is no slur on the program pictures because the exhibitor needs them as he does the special. The exhibiting business is a seven-day proposition, but the point the writer makes is that the big specials give new life and stimulant to the picture industry.

There is "The Unbeliever"—a George Kleine picture—that is going over tremendously big in Michigan. Exhibitors are doing so well that in almost every case the picture has been rebooked for a second engagement. Why, last week the Ferry Field, a theater seating around 1,200—four miles from town—booked it for three days—breaking the two-day policy—and it went so big that the engagement was extended to five days. Manager Hal Smith never before believed it possible to show a picture longer than three days at the most—and yet he did capacity on the five days, and would have gone the sixth had it not been for previously arranged bookings.

Then there is "The Kaiser"—this picture is a positive sensation in Michigan, and it is going better each day and even the rebookings are doing as much business for the theaters as the first engagements. The writer has yet to run across a single exhibitor who does not report "we cleaned up on 'The Kaiser'."

Then there is "The Whip," owned by the Dawn Masterplay—this picture has positively played as many as three and four repeat engagements at some houses doing nearly as well on the fourth as on the first engagement.

"Redemption," another big special handled by the Dawn Masterplay, is having big success in Michigan. "My Four Years in Germany" has just started to be released in Michigan, but wherever it has played so far big business is reported. It stayed five weeks at the Washington theater and is booked by all of the biggest and best theaters throughout the state on percentage.

"Over the Top" opened its Detroit engagement at the Majestic theater, May 18, and from the attendance thus far it is certain to remain there no less than four weeks. Throughout the state it is booked solid for many weeks.

Again we say, "this is the day of big specials."

Blankmeyer Takes the Gratiot.

Art Blankmeyer, who recently leased the Duplex theater, Detroit, and who is exchange manager of the Harry I. Garson Productions, has leased for a term of 11 years the Gratiot theater, Detroit, located at Gratiot and Chene. He plans to continue it as a daily change picture house, but may add a few vaudeville acts later on.

Bert Deiner Glad to Be Home.

Bert Deiner, several years ago with the Detroit Universal exchange, and recently with the Standard in Cleveland, is again with the Detroit Universal exchange, and Manager W. D. Ward, who negotiated the deal, is as tickled as a baby with a new toy. He has always admired Bert Deiner as one of the most efficient men in the film business. He will do general utility work out of the Detroit office.

"Fill the Flag" Sung in Detroit.

"Fill the Flag," the official song of the Detroit Patriotic Fund, was sung in most local theaters for the week of May 18, connecting up with the big campaign for funds, Detroit being asked to raise seven millions in the one week. The publicity committee succeeded in getting the song over in theaters throughout the city, believing that in this way they could quicklyn introduce it to Detroiters and serve to work up enthusiasm for the fund drive. Eddie McGrath sang the song at every performance at the Broadway-Strand theater, and every noon in the public square before thousands of people. At the theater, Manager Phil Gleichman had painted a special stage set for the song. Mr. McGrath was each time assisted by a young lady who represented herself as "Miss Detroit."

March to Patriotic Film.

Tuesday night, May 21, was "Patriotic Night" at the Majestic theater, Detroit, nearly 700 soldiers, members of the Michigan state troops, and several squads of Canadian returned soldiers, Mayor Marx and city officials, marching to the theater from downtown to see "Over the Top." The opening number of the program was the National anthem with the soldiers standing attention. The theater was especially decorated for the occasion.

Majestic Will Have New Policy.

For the engagement of Vitagraph's big special feature, "Over the Top," Manager M. W. McGee, of the Majestic theater, Detroit, will make a change in the house policy on account of the length of the production and the special added attractions.

The new policy will be only two shows daily—one in the afternoon at 2:15 and one at night at 8:15. The 75 and 50 cent seats will be served by coupons, while the general admission price will continue at 25 cents. All seats for the matinee will be 25 cents. It will be the first time that any Detroit picture theater operated under such a policy, which is the same as the legitimate theaters.

M. W. McGee.

Manager McGee is not saying a great deal about the presentation of "Over the Top," but he is working hard on it, and promises some novelties and innovations that are certain to have all Wayne County talking. The engagement of this special feature is for four weeks.

Stanley W. Hatch, the new Metro manager in Detroit, has assumed active charge and is the sort of fellow who will surely make many friends in this territory. He comes from Cincinnati, where he was formerly connected with the Vitagraph and Kleine exchanges.

Texas Exhibitors Are Now Aiding Red Cross

Enter Whole-Heartedly and Loyally Into the Drive—Business is Fairly Prosperous and Rains Are Helping.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—Their successful effort in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan concluded, Texas moving picture theater men entered whole-heartedly and loyally into the drive in behalf of the second war fund for the Red Cross and contributed generously of their time and their money toward humanity's cause. Incidentally, they continued to look after their business, which, from all accounts, continues along the even tenor of its way, with some satisfaction, and, of course, the little drawbacks that are mixed up with it.

More good rains fell in the San Angelo country and west of Fort Worth in the Abilene district on May 16 and 17, the news of their coming bringing a feeling of optimism to folks in that territory, which has been so hard hit by the long-continued drouth.

Rebuild Waxahachie Theater.

Messrs. Davenport, Ginch and Rockett, comprising the Waxahachie Amusement Company—Dixie theater, Waxahachie, Tex.—are soon to occupy a brand new, up-to-date, fully equipped house which will cost close to $75,000 when completed.

Among Texas Exhibitors.

Stuart Bros., Denton, Tex., have sold their interests in the Dreamland theater there to Davenport and Bates.

J. H. Sligh, Teague, Tex., has disposed of the Idlewild theater there, to a Mr. Reed, who will conduct it in future.

Julian Woods, of the Mexia opera house, has disposed of his moving picture interests to O. H. Brannon, who will continue operation of the theater.

A charter has been granted the Trinity Amusement Company of Dallas, with a capital stock of $25,000. Incorporators are C. F. Tandy, R. B. Strayhorn and George M. Bailey, Jr.

Corp. Kent Watson Edits Camp Paper.

Corporal Kent Watson, former Moving Picture World correspondent at Dallas, Tex., is now editing The Reconnaissance, a weekly paper published by the 36th division at Camp Bowie, Tex. Corporal Watson resigned a position as night editor for the Associated Press at Dallas to enlist in the army.

With the Travelers.

Harry Barr, of the People's theater, Beaumont, visited Dallas exchanges recently, reporting the South Texas city in good shape and everything pretty.

H. M. Owen, manager Dallas branch of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, took a ten-days' automobile trip during the third week in May.

Oklahoma Trade Letter

By H. W. Smith, Liberty Theater Bldg., Oklahoma City.

Business Keeps Excellent.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—Film exchanges here report the best business the past two weeks of any fortnight since the first of the year. Money seems to be plentiful throughout the state, and retail trade, with the exception of farm machinery and hardware, is flourishing. If any conclusion can be deduced from present trade conditions in Oklahoma it is that the demand is particularly for big pictures. Exchanges and independent agencies here have tested this demand more or less. For instance, the prices asked for some of the big features, notably "My Four Years in Germany," "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "Over the Top," and "Lest We Forget," intimidate the small exhibitor. Numerous cases are reported here where the exchange then books the picture on percentage basis, and invariably has profited thereby. The demand for the big subjects was exemplified in Oklahoma City last week when "Over the Top" broke the three-day record of the Empress theater.

There is one other phase of the picture demand in this territory that is too plain to pass by, and that is the call for Western stuff.

It is expected that the Red Cross drive from now on will not have the same depressing effect upon business that the Third Liberty Loan campaign had.

Notes from Universal Exchange.

Universal exchange in Oklahoma City reports a lively trade in all brands of its output. Sam Benjamin, general manager, has been out over the territory lately opening new accounts and realigning old. The roster of the local Universal office now includes besides Mr. Benjamin, J. C. Dewalt, office manager; E. G. Heiner and Cliff White, bookers; Maude Renshaw, secretary, and Joe Moreland, bookkeeper. On the road for Universal are G. E. ("Buddy") Benjamin, Fred Framconia, and J. Redliffe. "Buddy" Benjamin has been with Universal for two years in the same district, and is one of the most popular salesmen in the state. Redliffe comes from St. Louis, where he has been with Universal.

Morris Lowenstein Called by Draft.

Morris Lowenstein, manager of the Majestic theater, Oklahoma City, leaves this week for New Orleans, where he has been called to the colors under military draft. Exchange managers have presented him with a military kit and other items of accoutrement. Lowenstein originally was a newspaper man. For several years he was publicity director for John Sinopoulo in his various Southwest amusement enterprises. He and his father bought the Majestic property about two years ago—then a considerably run-down nickel house. Today it is one of the most popular ten-cent daily change picture houses in the state built up by the younger Lowenstein's thoughtful programming. The property was not remodeled; it was merely rebrained.

J. H. Brainard Goes to First National.

Jack H. Brainard, for four years manager of the Mutual branch, Oklahoma City, has become local branch manager for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Brainard is a big fellow physically and mentally, and in the esteem of Oklahoma exhibitors. Managers have long since learned to take him at his word. Local exhibitors express satisfaction with the change, accepting Jack's word for it that it is an advance for him. Mutual management has been taken over by Brainard's former assistant, Sam Brunk.

Trade and Personal Notes.

"My Four Years in Germany" will open the new Liberty theater in Blackwell, Okla., June 30-31. This is a splendid structure, with stage opening of 26 feet and depth of 48, and seating capacity of 1,400.

T. E. Larson has sold the Texas and Arkansas rights to "Berlin Via America" to W. G. Underwood, of the Specialty Film Company, of Dallas.

Chaplin's "A Dog's Life" is reported to be shattering house records all over the state, and to have been rebooked by ninety per cent. of the larger houses.

Pathe here is having a tremendous booking run on the twelve one-reel series of official war pictures entitled "Britain's Bulwarks."

H. E. Jameyson, of the United Picture Theaters Corp., has decided to make Oklahoma City his permanent headquarters.

Emerald Film Opens Office.

The Emerald Film Company, a branch of an independent booking company of the same name in Kansas City, has opened offices in Oklahoma City in charge of J. M. Brownlee.

J. A. Muchmore Heads Local Metro.

M. B. Tritch, whose tenure here as manager of the Metro exchange was cut short by the draft, has been succeeded by John A. Muchmore, formerly of the Kansas City Metro offices.

S. S. Baker Becomes Kansas City Censor

Former Manager of Foursquare Exchange Appointed by New Mayor to View Films—Has Been Critical but Is Making Good.

By B. S. Brown, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—On May 13 something happened in Kansas City that brought greater joy to the Kansas City exchange men than anything that has ever happened or perhaps ever will happen. Fred S. McClure, city censor, served his last day as official custodian of that office. The following day Sidney S. Baker, formerly Foursquare manager here, took the office, and has been in it alone and unassisted ever since.

Undoubtedly Mr. McClure had the interests of the city at heart throughout his regime as censor. He gained the enmity of the Kansas City exchange men by consistently cutting or rejecting each and every picture that savored even slightly of the unrefined or immoral.

The Kansas State Board has a reputation for being one of the strictest in the country, and that board passed numerous pictures with words of commendation that Mr. McClure rejected and pronounced indecent and unworthy of being shown in Kansas City. In his behalf it can be said that he is a wealthy man, and his handling the position as head of the recreational department of the Board of Public Welfare has been what he has considered a fair and public spirited work.

However, the new man is not without his troubles. It has been the custom for the Parent-Teachers' Association to view the pictures by a representative and make suggestions as to the cuts for those pictures to be recommended to exhibitors to use on Friday nights for school children. It seems as if one or several of these representatives continued to exercise this priviledge during the administration of Mr. Baker, and in several instances made suggestions that the new censor failed to recognize, which seeming negligence incurred the wrath of the organization. The resentment has been freely voiced in the news and editorial columns of the Kansas City Star and Times, and the Kansas City Journal. The Kansas City Post is upholding the actions of Mr. Baker in managing the office as he. Sidney Baker, sees fit. He is the type of man that criticism will not worry, for up to the present time he has received considerable publicity in regard to the Parent-Teachers' Association affair. He is ever on the job, and it is a sane bet that no picture will go through that office without his official stamp or rejection with reasons therefor. He has the support of the city administration, and it is certain that it will only be a question of time until he has become as popular with the citizens of Kansas City as he was with his former exchange associates and exhibitors.

Visitors from the Head Offices.

Harold Bolster, an official of the Goldwyn Company in New York, was in Kansas City, Monday, May 13.

Richard Robertson, Goldwyn manager, spent Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16, in Omaha visiting A. H. Blank, manager of the new Rialto theater there. Its seating capacity is 2,500, and it is one of the finest theaters in the state.

H. B. Brennon, auditor from the New York office of the General Film Company, came to Kansas City from Philadelphia. He will remain for two weeks.

L. S. Levin, of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Kansas City, Wednesday, May 15, on a Western tour. J. A. Groves, of the publicity department of the Fox company, was here also Tuesday, May 14.

Hodupp-Towne Photoplay Opens Office.

The Hodupp-Towne Photoplay Company, distributing Gaumont News Features, Christie comedies, and "super-features," has opened an office here at 921 Gloyd building. It will distribute films through Missouri and Kansas. S. Taubman is manager.

C. M. Kelley Will Handle Pathe Paper.

Charles H. Watson, in the poster department of the Kansas City Pathe office, has resigned to work at the City Hall. He will be succeeded by Carl M. Kelley, formerly in the poster department of the Vitagraph exchange, Kansas City.

Southwestern Theater Changes.

Woodward, Okla.—Convention Hall is to be equipped with a motion picture machine.

Antlers, Okla.—The new Dixie theater has been taken over by O. Gill, of Hugo. Mr. Melton was the former manager.

Waco, Tex.—Work is being pushed on the Majestic airdome theater, which will front on Washington and on Sixth streets. It is expected that the opening will occur within the next week or ten days. Messrs. Mitchell and Simon, managers.

Beaumont, Tex.—A new $50,000 motion picture theater is soon to be erected in Beaumont, Sol E. Gordon, Jos. C. Clemmons, and J. I. Pittman will be the principals of the stock company, and will constitute the management of the new theater. The seating capacity of the theater will be 900.

Jefferson, Tex.—M. L. Moore is tearing down the airdome and preparing to move it on the lot next to W. P. Kirklin's store where he originally had an airdome.

Caruthersville, Mo.—W. H. Gamble has retired from the management of the Dixie theater. John J. Lang will now have charge pending the return of Mrs. White, the new owner.

Syracuse, Kan.—Fire did a small amount of damage at the Imp theater recently.

Hope, Ark.—Contracts have been let for the building of a modern theater here. The building will have a seating capacity of 1,000. It will be erected and owned by the J. H. Betts estate, and will be operated under lease by John A. Collins, who now owns two picture theaters in Hope.

Omaha, Neb.—The new Liberty theater has been opened for business.

Des Moines, Iowa.—Articles of incorporation have been filed for the Majestic Theater Company. Capital stock, $50,000; incorporators, Abe Frankle, president; W. J. O'Hare, Ira B. Thomas, and W. L. Stewart.

Ruben & Finkelstein Get Two More Theaters

Minneapolis Strand and St. Paul Hippodrome Taken Over by Circuit—Move Will Greatly Lessen Competition.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—It is announced that Messrs. Ruben & Finkelstein have bought the Minneapolis Strand and the St. Paul Hippodrome. The Strand, owned by the Saxe Brothers of Minneapolis and Milwaukee, was considered the only "competing theater" in Minneapolis' "loop" for some time, and a merry war has been waged between this theater and the R. and F. interests. The sale of the Strand to the R. and F. interests leaves Minneapolis practically without competition in the photoplay presentation end of things for the New Garden, the only exclusive picture play house in the "loop" is to be annexed to the R. and F. string October 1, we are informed.

It must be stated that the film exchanges, and also the newspapers, are not exactly pleased with the sale of the Strand, but R. and F. have promised to maintain their well-known policy of fairness to all, and there is apparently no reason to doubt the continuance of such a policy.

Charles G. Branham will continue to act as manager of the Minneapolis Strand the Moving Picture World representative is informed. It is not known whether the theater will continue its open booking policy or not. Messrs. Ruben & Finkelstein have a good number of big features booked and have been holding some of them back, it seems, for presentation at the Strand.

In purchasing the Hippodrome, an 1,800 seat vaudeville theater in St. Paul, they have decided to close the house for the summer season and re-open it in the fall with a policy of pictures and vaudeville at popular prices.

The acquisition of the Strand brings the R. and F. circuit up to fourteen Twin City theaters, namely: New Garrick, Minneapolis, 2,400 seats, photoplays exclusively; New Palace, Minneapolis, 2,200 seats, vaudeville and short-reel pictures; New Lyric, Minneapolis, 1,600 seats, photoplays exclusively; Strand, Minneapolis, 1,300 seats, photoplays exclusively; New Grand, Minneapolis, 1,200 seats, vaudeville and short-reel subjects; New Aster, Minneapolis, 1,000 seats, photoplays exclusively; New Unique, Minneapolis, 800 seats, photoplays exclusively; Calhoun (neighborhood), Minneapolis, 1,000 seats, photoplays exclusively; New Palace, St. Paul, 3,000 seats, vaudeville and short-reel subjects; New Garrick, St. Paul, 1,800 seats, photoplays exclusively; Hippodrome, St. Paul, 1,800 seats, vaudeville and short-reel subjects; New Princess, St. Paul, 1,200 seats, photoplays exclusively; New Majestic, St. Paul, 1,000 seats, photoplays exclusively; O. K., St. Paul, 600 seats, photoplays exclusively.

In St. Paul "opposition" theaters are the Alhambra, Gem, Blue Mouse, and Starland, in the "loop" district.

Jay Gove Visits Minneapolis.

Jay Gove, of the New York Fox publicity department, spent a few days with Manager E. S. Flynn of the Minneapolis Fox exchange recently. Mr. Gove was accompanied by Stuart Atchison, who has been handling publicity at the Pacific Coast studios for some time.

Dan Donnelan Leads in Popularity.

Dan Donnelan, manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange, as the result of some spirited electioneering by "Govie" Malone has gone into first place in "Amusements" poplar exchange manager's contest. A recent meeting with M. Donnelan in his executive chambers proved to us one mighty good reason for his attaining popularity in this territory. To begin with M. Donnellan has a regular handshake to offer everybody, a regular smile and a bit of personality. As you sit by his desk and start talking to him he has a natural course of entertainment to provide and carries it out splendidly.

What Exchange Men Are Doing.

The Associated Theaters, Inc., Minneapolis, has given up its distribution of over a score of film features and short-reel comedies and dramas and, according to Manager T. J. Hamlin, is concentrating its efforts in boosting the distribution of the Gaumont weeklies.

W. H. Lawrence, formerly of the Minneapolis Fox exchange, has joined the salesforce of the local Select exchange.

Mr. Sutton, who for several months has been "out ahead" of Fox's "Cleopatra" road show, has joined the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange, Minneapolis, and will leave shortly for an advance booking tour of Wisconsin and Minnesota in the interests of "My Four Years in Germany."

F. C. Byram, of the Lyric theater, Osage, Iowa, visited Minneapolis exchange men last week. While in the city Mr. Byram completed arrangements with the Twin City Scenic Co. for a complete stage setting for his theater.

Manager Robert Scott, of the Minneapolis Metropolitan theater, a legitimate house, has booked the Goldwyn-Rex Beach feature, "Heart of the Sunset" for a four-day showing, to begin Sunday, May 26.

Portland Trade Letter

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

Portland's Tivoli Theater Sold.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Tivoli at Williams avenue and Russel street was recently sold by H. C. Phillips to E. H. Marston. Mr. Phillips is not going out of the show business, however, and is looking for another location.

Mr. Marston is from Great Falls, Mont., and, while not a show man himself, has three sons who are experienced in the business, and the combination should make the Tivoli a big success. The theater was erected for the People's Amusement Company in the boom days, and was sold to Mr. Phillips several years ago. It has been a money-maker all the time.

Carl Laemmle Visits Portland.

Carl Laemmle honored the Rose City with a visit May 18, and was entertained as guest of G. A. Metzger, general manager of the Film Supply Company, handling the Universal product. He called on a number of Portland theaters, and was given a real reception by exhibitors who called at the Universal exchange to see him. Lunch with Mayor George L. Baker was another distinction accorded Mr. Laemmle. Harry Cohen, president of Motion Picture Song Hits, is accompanying Mr. Laemmle on his tour.

The party left Saturday night for Seattle, and from there will go direct East.

With the Oregon Road Men.

C. F. Hill, manager for Goldwyn in Seattle, recently made a trip to Portland and through the territory by automobile, and found it an excellent way to call on his customers. Rain and muddy roads hampered part of his trip, however. While in Portland, Mr. Hill held a trade showing on two Mae Marsh and Mabel Normand features, which was very well attended.

Vern Schubach, traveling for Universal, recently returned from the eastern part of the territory where he has been booking ""The Kaiser." After a few days spent calling on Portland exhibitors he left on a long tour to place his picture on a percentage basis in the towns not already booked.

Frisco Hall Owners Hit Out at Music Tax

Association Denounces Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers and Urges Theaters to Play Music Not Copyrighted.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—At a meeting of the San Francisco Hall Owners' Association held a few days ago at the Palace hotel strong resolutions were passed denouncing the tactics of the American Society of Authors, Composers & Publishers, and a committee was appointed to urge the managers of moving picture theaters, hotels, cafes, and rented halls to play other music than the copyrighted popular music published by members of this organization. The local Musicians' Union has also been requested to adopt a resolution urging the national body at its meeting in Chicago next month to take action against the use of the copyrighted music. But few moving picture houses here are paying the royalties demanded, and no serious efforts seem to be made to compel any to do so.

Becomes Marine Corps Publicity Man.

Eugene W. Castle, for the past four years with the Gaumont Company in San Francisco, and most of this time in charge of the Bulletin edition of the Gaumont news service, has enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, and has left for Kansas City, Mo., where he will be assigned to publicity work under Lieut. Hans Hornbostel, also formerly of this city. Castle enjoys an enviable reputation as a news cameraman, having covered many important events in the Pacific Coast field, including the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915.

He has been succeeded at the local post by Blaine Walker, who has covered the Los Angeles field for Gaumont during the past two years, and who in turn has been succeeded by J. B. Walker, formerly a studio cameraman.

Carle Laemmle Pays a Visit.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, spent several days here recently looking over the local exchange and investigating film conditions in general. He was very enthusiastic over business conditions here, and declared that the outlook was satisfactory. He predicted that with the end of the war, whenever that might be, there would come an immense demand for American-made films throughout the world, with productions in lighter vein especially wanted. He stated that fourteen companies are now working at Universal City instead of half that number earlier in the year. "Big feature pictures are what people want," he said, "and they will not stand for fake stuff any more. War pictures have to be genuine. You can't stage a battle at the Somme in a Los Angeles studio, or on a Glendale ranch. A Somme battle has to be staged on the Somme, that's all there is to it. Realism and romance are the two big things that the women as well as the men always want, and, strange to say, the women like realism and the men romance."

Rialto Has New House Manager.

O. E. Lucas has succeeded Nat Holt as house manager of the Rialto theater, and is also attending to the publicity. This is the first time that he has ever handled work of this kind for a moving picture theater, but he had had much experience in promoting outdoor events and served on the publicity departments of both the San Francisco and San Diego Expositions. The new Rialto theater of Sheehan & Lurie at Eureka, Cal., will be opened early in June, all of the fixtures now being on hand.

Turner & Dahnken Make Changes.

A. M. Miller, formerly in charge of the San Jose T. & D. theater, has been made assistant manager of the entire circuit, and will relieve E. B. Johnson of some of his duties. Tom South, manager of the Stockton house, has resigned owing to ill health, and a successor will be named as soon as one can be found. E. Kerskin is in charge of the San Jose house, and will probably be made the permanent manager to succeed Mr. Miller. Vaudeville is to be introduced into the T. & D. theater at Berkeley, but will be offered for only one day a week.

Orpheum Books War Films.

The management of the Orpheum has booked one Government war film a week for a period of twenty weeks from the film division of the State Council of Defense. Many bookings are coming in from the country districts on the strength of the great showing made by the city houses, and splendid distribution is being secured through the joint activity of all film salesmen.

Edgar Lewis Returns from Honolulu.

Edgar Lewis, director and producer, has returned with Mrs. Lewis from a trip to Honolulu, and after a stay of a few days in this city left for Los Angeles. He plans to commence work at an early date on some big productions, and will shortly go to New York to complete arrangements for these.

Aldrich Makes a Find.

W. F. Aldrich, who directed "Hidden Pearls," and who recently went to Honolulu with Edgar Lewis, has commenced the making of moving pictures there, having discovered a native built like "Fatty" Arbuckle. The first picture he has completed is entitled "Poi or Bust." He has also opened a large airdome in Honolulu.

Belgian Veterans Entertained.

Three hundred Belgian heroes driven from the Russian front by an ignoble peace, augmented by a handful of French and Italian soldiers, reached San Francisco recently from Vladivostock, and have been the guests of the municipality since their arrival. Many fetes have been held in their honor, but the men declare that they have found the greatest enjoyment in the moving picture theaters. One evening was spent at the Strand, where Charlie Chaplin was the attraction, and on another occasion the men viewed a special performance of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." During their stay here the Tivoli theater was featuring "My Four Years in Germany," and this was also viewed and enjoyed.

San Francisco Brevities.

The Lyric theater, of Stockton, recently broke attendance records of long standing with "Carmen of the Klondyke." The production was well advertised, and attracted many new patrons to the house.

Through the efforts of Miss Fay King, a specialty writer for one of the large San Francisco dailies, a late model Power's Camerograph has been purchased for the base hospital at Camp Fremont. The machine was purchased from the Movie Emporium of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

D. J. Grauman, formerly of the Strand theater of San Francisco, but now of Los Angeles, was here recently for a short stay.

Joe Jacoby, formerly of the Empress theater on Twenty-sixth street, San Francisco, has taken over the management of the Park theater on Devisadero street.

Louis Levin has taken over the Elite theater on Sacramento street, San Francisco.

Harry Cohn, of the New York office of the Universal, was in San Francisco recently, and left for the Northwest with President Carl Laemmle.

William D. Imwalle, of Gonzales, Cal., was in San Francisco recently to attend a I. O. O. F. convention, and while here purchased a Motiograph projection machine from Walter Preddey.

Northern California Notes.

Burlingame, Cal.—George W. Gates and Estelle Gates have awarded a contract for the erection of a reinforced concrete moving picture house to cover a lot 104 by 173 feet in size.

Sausalito, Cal.—The management of the Princess theater has given up the use of the gasoline power plant that has been used for some time, and is now using a Preddey no-carbon lamp outfit.

Anderson, Cal.—W. R. Claman has sold his local theater to C. D. Hainline.

Oakland, Cal.—The Avenue theater, which has been enlarged and renovated, was reopened about the middle of May. A Wurlitzer instrument has been installed.

Spokane Trade Letter

By S. Clark Patchin, E-1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Request Clemmer Not to Show "Birth."

SPOKANE, WASH.—After two previous showing in the city, four weeks in all, in each case after stiff opposition had been launched and successfully met, "The Birth of a Nation," booked for a return engagement at the Clemmer theater, June 15, is confronted once again with an effort to block its public exhibition on the screen. The County Council of Defense is taking a hand in the matter this time.

Former Gov. M. E. Hay has been named a committee of one by the County Council of Defense to take the matter up with the Clemmer management with a suggestion that the booking be canceled without any controversy. Governor Hay was in communication with Dr. H. C Lambach, one of the Clemmer owners but the conference was delayed until the return of Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who is in Seattle.

The agitation to suppress the Griffith masterpiece this time is not attributed to colored opposition, as on the former occasion, but to the action of army authorities in asking its suppression.

Major General Greene, commandant at Camp Lewis, it is said, refused to allow the picture to be shown at the picture theater on the reservation, on the ground that colored men were in training there and would be subjected to embarrassment if the picture were shown with its alleged appeal to race prejudice. General Greene also requested that the picture be not shown in Tacoma, and his wishes were respected in the matter.

In Portland, however, vigorous opposition developed, but the theater management won out in the courts, according to reports, and the picture was shown to the biggest crowds that ever saw it in the Rose City.

"If we are to be charged with unpatriotic conduct in showing the picture, we may be obliged to change our bookings," said Dr. Lambach. "However, the picture has been shown here twice before and I do not believe any conditions exist today that did not exist at that time. If a military ban is placed on the picture, that settles it. We will meet the committee on the return of Dr. Clemmer and find out its attitude."

Tyrone Power Moves to Spokane.

Tyrone Power, who is a star in a series of pictures to be made at Minnehaha Park by the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, has arrived in Spokane and has taken apartments at the Davenport Hotel for the season. He begins work here at once on his first picture production, under the direction of Larry Trimble.

"New York is waiting to see what the Northwest can do in the production of moving pictures," said Mr. Power. "All eyes in the screen world are on the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, for we are expected to show what can be done with the scenery out here."

Members of the payroll committee of the Spokane Ad Club are preparing all details in connection with the opening of the Washington Motion Picture plant with the exception of the portion of the program to be furnished by the company.

Titan Film Getting Into Shape.

Spokane's second motion picture company will be producing by early in July, it was announced by J. Don Alexander, president of the Titan Film Company.

Several officers of the company will go to Los Angeles next month to inspect studio methods and meet stars whom the company is considering hiring. There are a half dozen popular players who have expressed their willingness to discuss terms and we shall doubtless sign some of them on this trip.

As for the Red Cross Drive, If you count it Charity You'd Better Add Up Again

SEATTLE NOTES.

Miss Donnelly Becomes Queen Bee.

Miss J. P. Donnelly has been engaged as manager of the Bee Hive exchange by Mark Goldman. Miss Donnelly is the only woman on the Pacific Coast who is manager of an exchange. She has been in the motion picture business for five years, during most of which time she conducted her own exchange. With A. T. Lambson she opened the first Fox office in Seattle. After a short time she bought the rights to some feature photoplays, and she and Miss J. P. Donnelly.

Mr. Lambson incorporated under the name of the Lambson Film Exchange. Early last year Mr. Lambson died and Miss Donnelly had the entire responsibility of the business. She traveled with several of her own attractions, which were booked as road shows, and so met exhibitors in every part of the Northwest territory. By the reputation for straight business sense and frank good-fellowship which she has established for herself among these exhibitors she has proved that a woman can make good as an exchange manager.

She has already placed the first run for Billy West Comedies in the Rex theater in Seattle and has a lot more business lined up.

B. F. Rosenberg, Western publicity man, left Seattle headquarters this week for Los Angeles.

Pictures the Big Thing, Says Eugene Levy

Seattle Vaudeville Man Becomes an Exhibitor—Turns Orpheum, a 2,100-Seat House, Into a Motion Picture Theater.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH. The probability suggested in this column last week that the Orpheum theater might go to motion pictures exclusively has become a fact. Eugene Levy, who took over the house last fall and has been operating it as a vaudeville house, declared that after the great success of the showing of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," at the Orpheum two weeks ago, he had a long consultation with his friend, Sid Grauman of Los Angeles, who has just been converted from the vaudeville business to pictures and is making a big success with his fine new house in Los Angeles.

"After talking it over with Mr. Grauman," said Mr. Levy, "I was more than ever convinced that motion pictures are the important branch of the amusement business of today, and while the Orpheum as a vaudeville house was a success, still I know that vaudeville is getting a setback through the draft. Furthermore, the fact that another first-class motion picture theater is needed in Seattle is shown by the crowds that are always waiting in the lobbies of the big downtown houses every evening and on Sunday and holiday matinees. The many new residents which the big shipyards and other manufacturing concerns are attracting to Seattle makes the opening of another motion picture theater a good business proposition, where a year and a half ago it would have been folly."

The Orpheum is one of the handsomest theaters on the Pacific Coast, with a seating capacity of 2,100.

The Orpheum opened as a motion picture theater on Sunday, April 19, with a 15-piece orchestra to interpret the pictures. Mr. Levy has lined up some of the best box-office attractions on the market. Owing to peculiar conditions of the motion picture situation in Seattle some of the best pictures released within the last two years had never been shown here, and film men have welcomed the entrance of the Orpheum to the market for big features as an outlet for many of their finest productions. Those already contracted for are all the forthcoming star series of the Select pictures, the Paralta plays, the Pathe specials, the Pathe weekly, the Pathe scenic, and the Lonesome Luke comedies, Fox Standard pictures and Sunshine comedies, the forthcoming Arbuckle and Mack Sennett comedies, and such state rights features as "Over the Top," "The Crisis" and "The Warrior." Every picture is to have a special stage setting.

Mr. Levy has been in the show business in Seattle since 1907, and during most of that time has been running motion pictures along with his vaudeville show, which makes him Seattle's veteran exhibitor. He has at the same time operated theaters in several other cities of the northwest. With such length and breadth of experience, during which he has proved himself a real showman, and with such a fine house as a background for the best productions, Mr. Levy will undoubtedly cause the eyes of the entire industry to again turn toward Seattle as the most progressive city in the country in the presentation of photoplays.

Business Notes of Interest.

The new war pictures, entitled "Britain's Bulwarks," have been received at the Seattle Pathe office, and W. W. Kofeldt, Pathe manager, announces that he has already placed them with J. J. Parker of the Majestic theater, Portland.

Carl Pierce is touring the Northwest territory with the "Blue Bird."

H. R. Hagram, of the Artcraft-Paramount shipping force, has gone to take a place in the shipping room of the Seattle Goldwyn exchange.

C. E. Keith, shipping clerk, is now in the Select shipping department.

Jack Lannon, president of the Greater Features Company, had a narrow escape when his motor car turned two somersaults and was completely wrecked.

The Greater Features Company has purchased the Northwest rights to "The Modern Lorelei."

The Jester Comedies have been added to the Schlaifer Attractions.

Melvin G. Winstock, partner of L. J. Schlaifer, has returned from a trip through southern Oregon, and declares that conditions are not so bad as they are painted in that part of the territory.

L. A. Todd, formerly manager of General's Seattle office, is helping John Danz to manage his two Seattle theaters, the Colonial and the High Class, and is helping to plan a new theater which Mr. Danz expectes to open this summer. The name of the new theater will be the "Star." It will be situated on Occidental avenue, near Yesler Way.

Mr. Huhn and M. L. Brown have bought the Yesler theater and are enlarging and redecorating it. One hundred more seats have been added, making a total now of 425, and a ladies' rest room is a new feature of this neighborhood theater. A Fotoplayer will be installed to furnish music. Mr. Brown has been in the film business in the Northwest for the last ten years and is thoroughly familiar with the exhibiting end. He is known by everybody on film row, and he received the good wishes of all of them when embarking on his new enterprise.

Many Out-of-Town Exhibitors Visit.

An unusual number of out-of-town exhibitors visited Seattle's film row this week. Among them were: A. H. Hilton, Paramount Family theaters, Lewiston, Idaho; W. W. Kriegel, Rex, Anacortes; George Reizner, Liberty theaters of Raymond and North Bend; J. J. Parker, Majestic, Portland; John A. Jennings, Sunset, Portland; H. C. Lambach, assistant manager Clemmer, Spokane; Henry Newman, Arcade, Hoquiam; Joe Lucas, Grand, Centralia; Fred Mercy, North Yakima; Carl McKee, Orpheum, Everett; W. G. Ripley, Western Amusement Co., Aberdeen; H. T. Moore, Colonial, Tacoma; A. C. Anderson, Apollo, Tacoma.

F. C. Weskill of North Powder spent the winter in Seattle. He returned home this week.

Critical Reviews and Comments

"ALL WOMAN"

Mae Marsh in Goldwyn Picture Shows Mother Instinct that Makes Her Tackle Rough Job.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is a pull at the heartstrings in Mae Marsh's characterization of Susan Sweeney in "All Woman," a Goldwyn five-reel picture by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Hardly anything could be fresher than the situation that is used as the starting point of this little shopgirl's adventures after she gets by legacy a half interest in a saloon-hotel, the "hell hole" of a country village. There was poetry in her nature, and in the crowded city she was glad to dream of green fields and mountain brooks, and when she gets the legacy she visualizes one of those Adirondack hotels in clean and sweet surroundings.

Dan Mason as village cab driver carries the heroine and two friends of the factory whom she wants to have a part in her inheritance up to the hotel, and soon all its disreputable slatternliness is presented to them. They are for going back to New York at once, when Susan sees two uncared for children, motherless, and being ruined by the atmosphere of the place. Their father, Kibby, played by Jack Dillon, is the other half owner, and keeps the saloon. Her two friends go, but, for the sake of the children, Sue decides to stay and be of use.

From this point the love story begins. The young and worthy lawyer of the village, played by Jere Austin, watches the change she is accomplishing. He helps her elbow out the saloonkeeper. The dramatic obstacle to love's fulfillment in the story is not quite so fresh as the situation from which it starts, and several of the lesser characters are not so humanly convincing as are Sue, the lawyer, the cabman, the saloonkeeper, and the village drunkard. There are one or two awkward spots where the action does not quite reach the naturalness of most of the picture.

On the whole the humanness of the story, especially in its first part, and the character that Mae Marsh pictures for us in Sue, make the offering valuable. It has a specially pleasing pull at the sympathetic emotions of the spectator.

"BAREE, SON OF KAZAN"

Remarkable Vitagraph Picture of the Far North—Will Surely Make a Sensation.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE center of interest at the opening and the ending of this picture, "Baree, Son of Kazan," a five-reel Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, is a dog, so far as an animal can be the center of interest in a story where human fates are deeply tragic and at the same time are presented with vigorous realism. The picture is, for the courage of its realism, for the artistic use of suggestion mostly to keep the story vividly in its proper background, where alone it could be true, and for the touch with which the players put over their parts, a remarkable production. It seems like a living thing with the earth of the North still on its roots and the sap still flowing.

The villain of the story is a factor of a Hudson Bay trading post. He didn't need to do much heavy work with his mouth and eyebrows; his actions, eloquent enough of an evil nature, didn't ask for and he didn't give them any Mephistofelian bolstering. Al Garcia plays the role with splendid naturalness. The heroine, a courageous half-breed (Nell Shipman), lives in a trapper's cabin with her father (Joe Rickson), and in the course of the story has become the desire of the factor, who already has an Indian wife whom he sadly abuses. Miss Shipman's work fits into the picture's atmosphere well, and Joe Rickson carries all the mannerisms and the peculiar heartiness usually associated with a character of the type.

Baree, the dog, is the hero of many of the picture's scenes, when the human story, in the first place, has not really begun, and, in the second, when it seems ended by tragic catastrophy. I have seen good animal pictures, but never in a story have I seen animal psychology used so intelligently and sympathetically as here. There are scenes, one of them a chase of a moose by wolves, that to me seem marvels of picturemaking. But the art with which the film was made in every department of it fills me with admiration.

What effect the picture will have on an audience is a new question. The realism with which the director has pictured his wild-country action, especial an eye-gouging, ear-biting-off, throat-tearing, leg-breaking fight between the brawny factor and the agile trapper when he finds the villain trying to force his daughter in the lonely cabin, will attract the mass by its courageness. Where this will go, and other pictures have proved that it will go, the other splendid qualities of "Baree, Son of Kazan," its wild background in summer and winter, and populated by both men and animals; its excellent snow scenes, its calmly able acting, its trueness to type in even the least actor, its exciting story, and its animal pictures will probably make it a tremenduous hit. It smells of pine boughs, of human beings, of dogs and sweat and red blood. It is a real picture of the wild.

"OLD WIVES FOR NEW"

Cecil B. De Mille Gives Phillips Novel an Artistic Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A WIDE difference of opinion is bound to exist concerning the ethical status of the Artcraft picture made by Cecil De Mille from "Old Wives for New," a novel written by the late David Graham Phillips. The story has one fundamental weakness that even the skill of the director could not hide—hardly any of the characters command the spectator's respect. Charles Murdock, the man whose family affairs make him the most prominent person in the story, has but little moral stamina, and is surrounded, principally, by well dressed men and women of no morals at all.

The author has uncovered some of the ugliest sores on American social life and has treated his theme with absolute frankness. He does not attempt to excuse his characters or bring retribution on them, except in the case of one man. He merely exposes the acts of certain human beings in the way the surgeon's knife lays bare the human body, and the great American bank roll seems to have the power to heal all the mental suffering of the sinning crew.

To those who know life the sincerity of the author is apparent. Managers of moving picture theaters who are not opposed to showing their patrons views of sordid passion and giving them a clear insight into the ways of immoral women and faithless husbands will have the satisfaction of knowing that the acting and general production of the picture could hardly be bettered. The cabaret scene is too insistent in establishing the moral laxity of its female guests, and other scenes of the same nature would stand cutting without the slightest danger of the spectator not comprehending their meaning.

Barely outlined, "Old Wives for New," tells how a man finds himself unhappily married and falls in love with another woman before he obtains a divorce from his wife. Before he finally succeeds in giving the second Mrs. Murdock the protection of his name he gets entangled with a third woman, and is only saved from infidelity by a telephone call asking him to hurry to the side of his business associate, who has just been shot by his mistress. At the finish Murdock's wife also marries again, his son and daughter are discovered arranging their own matrimonial plans and the entire family start out on separate roads to happiness.

A cast containing the names of Elliott Dexter, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, Helen Jerome Eddy, Sylvia Aston, Gustav Seyffertitz and Julia Faye and directed by Cecil De Mille is bound to give a good account of itself. The scenario is by Jeanie Macpherson.

"Old Wives for New" will instruct amuse or shock. In some cases it will do all three.

"THE YELLOW TICKET"

Pathe Play Featuring Fannie Ward in Well-Known Drama Proves Strong Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN intense and highly dramatic photoplay has been made from this former stage success. William Parke directed the picture for the Astra Film Corporation, the scenario being by Tom Cushing.

Fannie Ward is cast in the role of Anna Mirrel, a pretty Jewess. The scenes of the story are all laid in Russia before the war, and have to do with the persecution of the Jews under the regime of Czar Nicholas. The "yellow ticket," it will be remembered by those who saw the original play, was given by the police to certain outcasts from society, who were compelled to report to the police at regular intervals. It was regarded as a badge of dishonor, and those carrying it were subject to all manner of insult.

The plot structure is one that lends itself to intensity of feeling, and at times it carries the observer away in complete forgetfulness of the fact that it is a picture. This is a prime test of a strong subject.

The plight of Anna Mirrel is one that arouses sympathy from the first. Her mother dies under dramatic circumstances during a raid by the Moujiks on the Jews. The daughter, desiring to get to St. Petersburg, where her father is ill, accepts a "yellow ticket" as the only available passport. She thus brings upon her head a train of misery and persecution from which she is finally rescued through the heroism of an American correspondent in Russia. While in St. Petersburg she is forced to pass herself off as Marya Varenka in order to obtain decent employment. But the police locate her, and she is hounded by Baron Andrey, head of the secret police, who desires her for himself.

She kills the latter by stabbing him. The American correspondent then saves her at the risk of his own life.

The acting in this subject is excellent throughout. Fannie Ward carries off her role with her usual skill; Milton Sills is strong as the correspondent, and Warner Oland equally good as the baron. Other roles are played by J. H. Gilmour, Anna Lehr, and Helen Chadwick.

"THE INTERLOPER"

Kitty Gordon Appears in World-Picture, Supported by Irving Cummings.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MANY a woman will undoubtedly sympathize with Jane Cameron, the heroine of this entertaining subject, particularly those who are second wives of men who are forever chanting the praises of their first wives. Paul Whitney, the hero of this story, had this bad habit, and was assisted in his mistaken course by his proud parents. Jane Cameron, Paul's second wife, is nearly driven to desperation by hearing so much of Blanche, the departed wife. Jane's love begins to cool, and is aided in the process by Paul's designing friend, Edmond Knapp. But she catches herself in time, and the story ends happily.

Kitty Gordon does some very effective acting in this number. She carries the chief interest of the production in her own pulchritudinous person, giving the observer a view of many sumptuous gowns and even a glimpse or two of the famous Kitty Gordon back. She appears during the first scenes in a riding habit, which shows off her statuesque figure to advantage.

The story itself is comparatively simple in plot. Jane Cameron owns a Southern plantation across which a railroad desires to gain right-of-way. The hero, representing the railroad, visits the plantation, meets Jane, and falls in love with her. They are married, and live in New York. Here Jane hears much of the first wife, and almost falls a victim to the advances of Paul's supposed friend. The sex interest is delicately and admirably handled in this number. There are some slight lapses in continuity.

Irving Cummings appears as Paul and Frank Mayo as the friend.

"HIGH STAKES"

J. Barney Sherry in Triangle Crook Photoplay of Considerable Ingenuity.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ANDREW SOUTAR, the author of "High Stakes," a five-part Triangle crook play, has made his principal character a combination of Raffles and Jimmy Valentine. Endowed with the polish and skill of the one and the noble nature of the other, Ralph Stanning, the hero of "High Stakes," throws an air of romance about his crimes and his reformation that will win him the regard and admiration of those who have a liking for his more famous prototypes. J. Barney Sherry plays the master cracksman who foils the entire detective force of Scotland Yard and gives a capital performance. Arthur Hoyt, the director of the production, understands how to build this brand of screen merchandise, which has an important and well pleased following.

Stanning, the celebrated thief of the story, always plays for high stakes. The last trick he turned was to steal the famous "Southern Cross" diamonds from Kensington Museum, London, and then laugh at the efforts of Scotland Yard to fasten the crime upon him. The vault of the museum was opened by the thief merely by the sense of touch, and the detectives are anxious to learn if Stanning can perform the feat. They rob his house and when he comes to claim his property, after learning that it has been recovered by Scotland Yard, a trap is set for him. He is told that the office boy is locked in the vaults and is in danger of being suffocated. Stanning's first impulse is to risk everything and save the boy. His keen intellect comes to his rescue just in time and he sees through the trick.

Later on Stanning helps to rescue a young girl from the river. Finding she is without friends he takes her home and is rewarded by having the real nobility of his nature come to the surface. He reforms for her sake, marries her, settles down on a fine estate in the country, is received in society, becomes the father of a boy and is at peace with the world until Scotland Yard again gets on his trail. Inspector Culvert, who leads the plot to entrap him for the "Southern Cross" job, hatches up a neat little scheme for his undoing, but Stanning outwits him and remains honest for the sake of his wife and boy.

"High Stakes" belongs to the sort of fiction that bears no relation to life, but serves to entertain many worthy persons with a liking for sentimental rogues. Harvey Clark, as Inspector Culvert, and Jane Miller as Stanning's wife, are prominent members of the support. Cameraman, Elgin Leslie.

"BLUE EYED MARY."

Good Story and Kept Interesting—June Caprice Has Typical Role.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT IS the story that primarily will attract in the new Fox picture, "Blue Eyed Mary," a five-reel production written by Frances Crowley, the same author who wrote the Fox picture of a few weeks ago, "The Heart of Romance," in which June Caprice also starred. The background of both pictures is Washington Square, New York, and both have the same fresh interest in life and the same feeling for character. Besides the interesting and dramatic story there is a fine old she-dragon of a woman that Helen Tracy puts over with knowledge and restraint. In the story she is the grandmother of that awkward slip of humanity played by June. Then there is an Irish cook, by Florence Ashbrooke, a sympathetic, fightin' Irish woman, who also will win favor. It will be liked by those who liked "Heart of Romance."

The real story deals with the winning by June of the crabbed old grandmother who had cast off her son because he had married "beneath" his family. June Caprice plays the granddaughter whom she has consented to educate. The old woman has a nephew, wastrel and worse, to whom she may leave her fortune. This man is a thief and has as his accomplice (not a convincing situation) one of his aunt's housemaids. When he suspects that his outside burglaries have been discovered he and the maid plan a getaway. All this time the girl has been trying to placate the she-dragon and has been having a hard time. That night June's sweetheart from the country, whom the grandmother had scared away, comes to call on her when the old woman is asleep. Bridget lets him in. The two see the nephew breaking into the strongbox and there is a fight. The grandmother, waking, finds the nephew and the country boy tumbling together on the floor and June holding the box of securities. The scapegrace says that she was attempting to steal and he came to the rescue, and the woman believes him till the police arrive and everything is cleared up. That country lover is no actor as yet.

The story is interesting and dramatic and shows good construction; but is not a well-written story. Most of it is human, but some of it isn't worth calling good work. There is always some sort of Nemesis in poor writing by an author who can do good work.

"DE LUXE ANNIE"

Norma Talmadge Star of Absorbing Select Picture Presented by Schenck.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

TAKEN from a stage play written by Edward Clark, the Select picture, "De Luxe Annie" is the sort of story that will entertain any healthy-minded spectator just as long as he refrains from asking embarrassing questions about the probability of the plot. It is a crook drama, and Norma Talmadge and her excellent support carry it along with speed and judgment. Roland West, who directed the production, has brought out the melodramatic possibilities of the theme without descending to cheap sensationalism, and there is never a moment when the development of the story is retarded. Skill and good taste are found in the settings and the other details of production.

"De Luxe Annie" is the name given an attractive and industrious young woman who poses as a book agent and manages to blackmail many incautious gentlemen, with the help of a male confederate, who turns up at the right time and acts the part of an injured husband. Walter Kendal and his friend, Dr. Fernand Niblo, attempt to capture the pair. They fail, and Kendal's wife is injured mentally while the blackmailers are making their escape. Mrs. Kendal wanders away, her mind a blank concerning her past life. By one of the twists of fate that a clever playwright knows how to invent, the male crook gets her to take the place of the real "De Luxe Annie" and work the "badger game" with him, while Mrs. Kendal's husband and little daughter are nearly heartbroken over her disappearance. The manner in which the family is finally reunited and the innocent criminal restored to reason will be followed with tense interest.

Norma Talmadge looks, acts and dresses the character of Julie Kendal with equal success. Frank Mills as Walter Kendal, Edwards Davis as Dr. Fernand Niblo, Edna Hunter as "De Luxe Annie," Eugene O'Brien as Jimmy Fitzpatrick and P. Stanton as Cronin are the members of the high grade support. Paul West is responsible for the scenario.

"RESTITUTION."

Mena Film Company Presents Ten-Reeler Dealing with Biblical and Modern Times.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS subject is one of tremendous scope and many excellences, but its entertainment value is questionable in its present form. It dates back to the creation of man, the first scenes showing the molding of Adam from the dust and then the creation of Eve from Adam's rib. With the eating of the forbidden fruit sin first finds its way into the life of humanity, and from this moment the picture takes up the operation of evil forces on the lives of men. Satan himself is pictured from time to time, watching in his hourglass the struggles of man to make or find restitution for sin.

All of the early part of the offering has been admirably done. The scenes showing the creation of man are beautifully effective; likewise the wanderings of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The same is true of later biblical scenes, up to a certain point. The killing of Abel by Cain, the pilgrimage of Abraham and Sarah into Egypt, the birth and crucifixion of Christ are all handled with rare delicacy and a freedom from the usual crudities that accompany the average attempt at this sort of offering. But with the massacre of the innocents by Herod and the torture of the Christians by Caesar there comes an overdose of the unpleasant. If these features were properly toned down and the whole conception brought to a close with Columbia defying autocratic military power, which seemed to be the logical end to the offering, it would have a great deal to commend it with the public at large.

The last reel or two, dealing with the special experience of John Boyd and his wife, seemed like an additional story. In this there is a great deal of mysticism and element of religious propaganda. The feature showing the salvation of the world being brought about by the reincarnation of Abraham, who restores the dead to life as proof of his divine authority, might appeal to certain observers, but we think would not entertain the public at large.

There are some fine impersonations in the fore part of this feature and the photography, by Delbert Davis, is unusual. The production as a whole, which was supervised by G. C. Driscoll, shows infinite attention to artistic detail. But we think it should be cut down by at least two or three reels in order to meet success with the general public.

Among those appearing in the cast are Eugene Corry as Adam, Lois Gardner as Eve, Alfred Garcia as Satan, Frank Whitson as Abraham, Amy Jerome as Sarah, Harold Quintin Driscoll as Jesus the boy and Howard Gaye as Jesus the man. The supporting cast is large.

"A SOUL FOR SALE"

Six-Reel Jewel Production Features Dorothy Phillips in Drama of Society Life.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

STRONG plot material has been used in the making of this number, which was adapted for screen purposes by Elliott J. Clawson from a magazine story by Evelyn Campbell. It is classed as a society drama, but really contains a good deal of melodramatic treatment. Dorothy Phillips is pleasing in the part of Neila Pendleton, and acts with skill, but the part is not one of the pleasant type with which she is frequently associated. The events are quite sordid at times.

Neila Pendleton's lot is one that few girls are called upon to endure in fiction or out of it. Her own mother has a passion for jewels so great that she conceives a wealthy marriage for Neila in order to gratify it. The girl is deliberately thrown at the head of an old millionaire roue, whose advances fill her with dread. William Burgess appears as the repellant millionaire, Hale Faxon, and he spares no effort to make the character obnoxious. The situations have a sort of crude strength where he appears, but it rather strains the credulity to think the mother would give up her daughter to him.

Later the mother again yields to her desire for money to buy gems, and steals a large sum from Steele Minturn, the one decent young man who has come into Neila's life. The girl, learning of her mother's theft, attempts to return the money to Minturn's room one night. She is discovered, and becomes compromised, but later events lead to her salvation of soul and happy union with Minturn. The fire scenes are realistic and well staged.

"THE STREET OF SEVEN STARS"

Doris Kenyon in De Luxe Pictures Production of Mary Roberts Rinehart Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A STORY written by Mary Roberts Rinehart is bound to contain an interesting collection of human beings. "The Street of Seven Stars," produced by the De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and starring Doris Kenyon, is full of quiet pathos and keen insight into life, but the maker of the scenario has done little to give it photodramatic form. It ambles along from one incident to another, and only speeds up a bit when the hero has a rough and tumble fight with an interpolated character, a French Apache. As originally written the scene of the story was Vienna; in the picture it is transferred to Paris.

The most picturesque portion of the plot is laid in the Swiss mountains. John B. O'Brien, who directed the production, has evidently taken great pains to make these scenes as effective as possible. The snow and ice and the winter sports add greatly to the value of the picture. Persons who care for a pretty story and do not insist upon dramatic action and thrill in the acting will be entertained by "The Street of Seven Stars."

Doris Kenyon plays Harmony Wells, a young American girl, who is studying the violin in Paris. She has but little money, and is living with two roommates. When the girls go back to the United States, Harmony moves to a house where two friends of hers are staying, Dr. Peter Byrne and Dr. Anna Gates. The three take an apartment together, Dr. Gates being an elderly woman and a proper chaperon for the household. Byrne is in love with Harmony, but the girl is too intent on her career to listen to his love-making. An invalid boy whose mother has deserted him for the stage becomes an inmate of the apartment, and his death is the strongest pathetic note in the story. After being assured of her success as a musician, Harmony gives up her long-dreamed-of career and marries Dr. Byrne. There are many minor incidents and characters in the picture.

Doris Kenyon is very beautiful when she smiles, and acts the lighter moods of Harmony charmingly. The inner nature of the character is quite beyond her. Hugh Thompson as Dr. Byrne and Carey Hastings as Dr. Anna Gates are the leading members of a competent support. Stephen Carr wins great sympathy as the invalid boy. The cameraman was William S. Crolly.

"PRUNELLA"

Marguerite Clark Delightful in Paramount Version of Quaint Stage Fantasy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IF the array of names connected with "Prunella" be any criterion this Paramount picture should have a large following. Written by Granville Barker and Laurence Housman, adapted to the screen by Charles Maigne, directed by Maurice Tourneur, photographed by John Vander-Broeck, and the cast headed by Marguerite Clark, there is but little doubt that the artistic side of the production is as flawless as it is possible to make it.

"Prunella" is a new telling of the old story of a Pierrot who elopes with a trusting little maiden and soon tires of her when she prevails upon him to make her his wife. After he deserts her his heart reproaches him and he goes back to the garden where they first met. Prunella also returns to her old home, and the couple are reunited in front of the fountain where the magic statue carved by the girl's father came to life.

The tale is placed in a setting that resembles the drawings in a child's picture book. "Love in a Dutch garden," the authors called it, and it is a fantasy, pure and simple. "Prunella" has been brought up by three maiden aunts and they have taken every precaution to keep from her all knowledge of the world. Pierrot belongs to a troupe of traveling players and when they drive past the garden the aunts are dreadfully afraid that the little girl will see them. This she manages to do and at once thinks Pierrot the most wonderful being she has ever beheld. That night she runs away with him.

Such a story will be best appreciated by persons of culture and taste. Admirers of Marguerite Clark will find her as delightful as ever, in a new embodiment of youth and innocence. One of the surprises of the picture is the grace and skill of her Pierette dance. Jules Raucourt as Pierrot is a handsome and fascinating rascal. Harry Leoni as Scaramel; Isabel Berwin, Marcia Harris and Nora Cecil as the three aunts; William J. Gross, A. Voorhes Wood and Charles Hartley as the gardeners, and Arthur Kennedy as the gardener's boy hold closely to the spirit of the play.

"RECLAIMED"

Seven-Part Melodrama Cleverly Produced by Harry McRae Webster.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MABEL JULIENNE SCOTT and Niles Welch are the stars of the Harry McRae Webster production of Richard F. Carroll's seven-part melodrama "Reclaimed." The picture is intended for state rights distribution and contains a story of sufficient diversity of theme and vigor of action to warrant its being put out as a feature. It is treated throughout in a consistent manner and the struggle of the hero and heroine against unusually adverse circumstances will be followed with close attention. Like all melodramas, it is meant solely to entertain and the rise of the little orphan girl from poverty and ignorance until she becomes a beautiful and accomplished woman will command the sympathetic interest of most spectators. The plot contains very little original material, but both author and director have handled it skillfully, and the excellent acting of the entire cast puts all the scenes in the best light possible. "Reclaimed" has nothing in common with the highbrow drama, but is a good, honest job at picturemaking for the average screen patron.

Opening with a prologue, the story shows Lola, a half-breed Mexican woman who is coveted by Mark Sinister, an American whose chief stock-in-trade is villainy. Lola is a wife and mother, and in trying to put her husband out of the way Sinister kills her. He then murders the man and leaves Amorita, the little orphan girl, who has witnessed the double crime, to her fate. At the age of sixteen Amorita finds her way to the United States and crosses the path of Mark Sinister. He is struck by her beauty and tries to secure her for a mistress, but she escapes him.

Frank Truman, the son of a man that Sinister has robbed and cheated, is also persecuted by him. The young fellow is made to appear a thief and serves a term in prison. Before this he has met Amorita and both are attracted by the other. When Frank is released he discovers that Amorita has been befriended by some worthy people, who are also in Sinister's power, and that the girl has consented to become the villain's wife in order to save them. The means by which she finds out that Sinister is the murderer of her parents and fate avenges the crime brings the story to an exciting finish.

Mabel Julienne Scott plays both Lola and Amorita. She has an attractive personality and is thoroughly in earnest in everything she dies. The development of character in the orphan girl as she comes in contact with refinement and friendship is cleverly portrayed. Niles Welch makes Truman a manly young chap in whom the spectators believes absolutely. Anders Randolf does Sinister, the melodramatic villain, with so much finish and seeming capacity for evil that his actions never appear overdrawn. Fred W. Peters as Jasper Creature plays a tool of Sinister's with the skill of a well-schooled actor, and Warren Cook is equally satisfactory as Colonel John Truman. Mabel Wright endows the part of Creature's invalid sister with the gentleness and beauty of character it calls for. Sidney Bracy is a lifelike Cadet.

The lighting and camera work are of excellent quality.

"CECILIA OF THE PINK ROSES."

Marion Davies Company Releases Subject, with Miss Davies in Title Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

ARTISTIC beauty and fine sentiment of a religious character are the strong features of "Cecilia of the Pink Rose," a six-reel number produced by the Marion Davies Film Company. The story was adapted by S. M. Weller, from a novel by Katherine Haviland Taylor and directed by Julius Steger. The picture is to be released by the Graphic Film Corporation.

Marion Davies plays the part of Cecilia, daughter of an Irish bricklayer and his wife. The mother is suffering from an incurable disease and there is no hope for her, particularly after a famous surgeon refuses to see her when the father appeals to him.

The opening scenes are entirely of a domestic character, picturing in a slow, leisurely manner the daughter's labors as housekeeper, and the slowly weakening condition of the mother. There is a certain convincing tenderness in all this, but as the story has a thin plot at best it would no doubt be better to do some vigorous cutting in the fore part of the offering.

The scenes following the mother's death have to do with the experiences of Cecilia and her brother Johnny at school. The latter is expelled for misconduct. Cecilia falls in love with a young lawyer, who aids her afterward in saving Johnny from the clutches of a blackmailer and his wife. The closing reel is strong in action.

Marion Davies is as sweetly attractive as usual in this number, but the plot makes no particular demands upon her. Edward O'Connor has the good character part as the father, and one which he plays with fine effect. Harry Benham is cast as the girl's lover.

The photographic effects are beautiful throughout and there is also a very pleasing effect wrought by the tinted title decorations.

A GROUP OF CHRISTIES.

Unequal Merits Characterize Collection of Comedies of Which Cleanliness Forms Best Attribute.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Here Comes the Groom."

ONE of a group of Christie comedies recently shown to the press is called "Here Comes the Groom." This particular comedy, had it been developed along strictly farcical lines, might have been entitled to considerable praise. As it stands it is neither one thing nor the other and presents situations that are not convincing enough to be funny. Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Dane are the featured members of the cast and carry out attractively the work allotted them. The story tells of the discomfiture of a young bride and bridegroom caused by practical jokes played on them by their friends. The result of the last and worst finds the bridegroom a mile or so from home in a convict's suit in which he is pursued by a prison guard who finally discovers the young man's predicament and loans him his clothes to get home in. He arrives at the home of the bride with his mischievous friends at pistol's point.

"A Regular Patsy."

Elinor Field and Billy Mason are the featured members in the cast of "A Regular Patsy." The comedy in this number is not strong, and the story concerns the habit of the youngest and prettiest of a family of always getting in sister's way when the beaus come around.

"Their Breezy Affair."

Billy Mason and Dorothy Dane play the leads in "Their Breezy Affair," which borders on farce comedy. The comedy elements in this picture are ordinary. The hero of the play, desirous of making a thousand dollars quick in order to comply with the wishes of his sweetheart's father, marries in secret a stranger for a week, at the end of which time he is released when the object the obtaining of which requires her appearing as a married woman has been attained. Complications occur which are rather amusing when he meets his sweetheart at the seashore.

"Love and a Gold Brick."

Bobby Vernon and Ethel Lynne are the stars of this comedy which will please the ordinary audience. A sporty young man impersonating a rube brings about some amusing situations in which the city cousins and friends get sadly left, and he walks away with the prettiest girl.

"Somebody's Baby."

The best of the group is decidedly "Somebody's Baby," in which an old theme is well handled. Billy Mason and Betty Compson are the stars. The hero, starting out to take his sweetheart for a spin, finds a baby in the seat of the car. The search of the mother for the child and the effort of the young man to take care of it until its mother is found proves very funny.

"A DOLL'S HOUSE"

Artcraft Presents Elsie Ferguson in a Version of the Ibsen Drama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AMONG all versions of the Ibsen drama which have appeared on the screen none seem to approach more nearly the Ibsen idea than that of the Artcraft, with Miss Ferguson admirably interpreting the role of "Nora," the girlish and irresponsible wife who is entirely at sea as to what is right and wrong under man-made laws. Ibsen was living in an age of transition so far as woman was concerned and became a pioneer in her emancipation. He was alive to vital questions of his time and blazed the way for dramatists to find release from nearly all traditions of the stage, but it is doubtful whether he would have treated his theme as he did had he lived in another environment, for instance, that of our own to-day. The same theme would be handled according to conditions, and present ones are very different from those of the society he knew.

The woman question with Ibsen meant primarily her position in marriage, which at the time he wrote "The Doll's House" was ignominious in comparison with that accorded the American woman of to-day, hence his development loses force wherever it does not apply to modern conditions. We could not regard a man as "honorable" nowadays who would sacrifice a loving wife, one who had given the world three beautiful children, for the sake of his business position, so when Nora's husband prates of his "honor," HIS honor, and is horrified, instead of loving his wife more deeply when he finds she has taken a great risk for his sake, we can only understand he judges feminine conduct from a standpoint purely masculine in his time and place.

The drama becomes purely historical wherever it depicts a social condition which no longer exists, and its theme, which would be powerful if advanced to present-day ideals, loses vigor to exactly that extent. Nora leaves home at the conclusion of the play, putting behind her forever a well-meaning husband of narrow moral code, but loyal, devoted and generally kind. She leaves the home he built for her, with all its tender associations. She leaves her three loving children, not because she has ceased to care for them, not because she has been lured away. It cannot be for a principle, because no wife and mother of principle would do such a thing to-day. She leaves in bitterness, in resentment and revolt against the humiliating position of the Scandinavian wife at that time. What might have seemed justified then and been justified, is a line of conduct completely out of modern sympathy.

Thus, because of its close adherence to the Ibsen idea the play is not likely to find favor as a screen product except to the limited extent that it depicts two kinds of conscience, one for each sex, still a live theme. The story affords Miss Ferguson a chance to act as the catastrophe approaches, the inevitable discovery that she signed her father's name in order to save her husband from illness and death, and the talented actress vividly portrays the unhappy wife's state of mind. That fine use of opportunity, the admirable settings and the play's historical accuracy constitute its chief values.

"THE ENCHANTED PROFILE"

An Entertaining O. Henry Story Built on a Clever Idea.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

A CLEVER idea forms the basis of "The Enchanted Profile," a two-reel Broadway Star Feature released by General Film Company, adapted from an O. Henry story, and the director, Martin Justice, has succeeded in making an entertaining production, which holds the interest well.

A wealthy woman, inclined to be miserly, takes a sudden fancy to a hotel stenographer and adopts her, and for a short while spends money lavishly. However, when the bills keep coming in she reverts to her former method of living, and the two move into a squalid and ill-furnished flat. An artist friend of the girl, wondering at the sudden fascination of the old woman, solves the riddle and finally persuades the girl to marry him and leave her new-found friend, after explaining it is her profile that is the cause of the fascination, as it is a dead ringer for the female on the silver dollar. The picture closes with the woman gazing at a design showing the girl's profile in a setting resembling the one of a silver dollar, and apparently perfectly contented.

Agnes Ayres gives an excellent portrayal of the girl and Evart Overton is satisfactory as the artist. Mrs. Spaulding puts much realism into her portrayal of the miserly woman and Adele De Garde is cast as a friend of the girl.

"THE MILLION-DOLLAR MYSTERY"

Former Serial Now Released as a Six-Reeler Full of Action and Thrills.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

RELEASED originally as a serial, in twenty-three episodes of two reels each, "The Million Dollar Mystery" has now been cut down to six reels and is being offered on a state right basis by the Arrow Film Corporation.

In its present form it is full of action and thrills and the continuity of the story has been well maintained, appropriate subtitles aiding materially. The thrills include rescues by aeroplane, balloon and motor boat, an automobile running through an open drawbridge, and others.

John Hargreaves, in his youth, joined the Black Hundred, a Russian secret society, agreeing to devote his life and resources to that organization. Later he came to America and amassed great wealth. In order to shield his daughter he had her placed in a girl's school when still a baby, and raised in ignorance of her father. When she was seventeen Hargreaves sent for her to come to him. In the meantime the Black Hundred learns his whereabouts and he prepares to flee, drawing a million dollars from various banks just before his departure. The band tracks him, and in order to elude them his butler, who resembles him, escapes in a balloon, while Hargreaves, disguised as the butler, remains behind to look after his daughter. The attempts of the band to find the million dollars provides a series of adventures in which the daughter figures, and from which she is rescued by a young reporter.

The story was written by Harold McGrath and directed by the late Howell Hansel. There is an excellent cast, including James Cruze as Jim Norton, the reporter; Sidney Bracey as Hargreaves, also as the butler; Marguerite Snow as a Russian adventuress, the Countess Olga; Frank Farrington as Braine, leader of the gang, together with the late Florence La Badie as Florence, Hargreave's daughter, and Irving Cummings as a special representative of the Black Hundred.

Particularly pleasing is the work of Florence La Badie, and an effective scene is the one in which she jumps from an oceangoing steamship.

"MISSING"

Paramount Presents Blackton's Effective and Highly Artistic Version of Mrs. Ward's Novel.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FROM the opening the title throughout the scenes and screen imprints of "Missing" there is shown the Blackton trend to pure artistry. An artist himself, a keen lover of beauty of form, capable of intensifying interest in a story by picture inspiration, Mr. Blackton is constantly devising new effects, and his inventive resources seem to be as exhaustless as they are intuitive. Through symbols, through suggestion, through nicely balanced picture composition, he keeps the eye pleased, and not without full recognition that his story must reach beyond the eye to the soul.

The theme of the story, that of true courage, is beautifully embodied in the idea that we must hide aching hearts at this trying moment and show our bravery by almost meeting death with a smile. The development is intended to show the grit of Englishwomen in this hour of struggle and sacrifice, but the story, for all of its affecting moments, runs away from its our purposes at times.

A young officer, admirably impersonated by Robert Gordon, marries the younger of two sisters, much to the annoyance of the older one, who hoped for an alliance with wealth. The young couple pass through a short honeymoon and the groom goes away to the war. He is later reported missing, "wounded and missing," and a year passes by with no word from him. The inconceivable older sister gets word that a man resembling the missing officer has been brought in from "No Man's Land" and recognizes her brother-in-law, but does not disclose the fact to her suffering sister, because the latter might marry another man advantageously from a financial standpoint, though the alliance is bound to be proved bigamous. The characterization and conduct of this sister and the growing tendency of the younger to marry before being assured that her husband is dead can hardly be regarded as complimentary to Englishwomen.

There are other women, however, some noble ones barely glimpsed in a powerful bit of psychology, where a number of officers and men are singing "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" behind the trenches. It is this song which restores the memory of the young officer, suffering from shell shock, and eventually leads to a happy reunion with his wife. This recovery of memory is the crisis of the story, and it is so faultily placed, remote from the end, that the concluding scenes come very close to operating as an anti-climax of the worst kind. They are saved by some true pathos. Mr. Blackton's power to awaken sympathetic interest is manifested at all stages, and it counts most heavily where least expected, in little side issues branching away from the main line of action.

In that the story is timely, fairly well-typed, a genuine piece of artistry so far as the picturing is concerned and generally convincing in spite of its faults, lies the sum of values. That it is vital and beautifully done will carry it over.

THE ENCHANTED PROFILE (Broadway Star Feature).—Agnes Ayres and Evart Overton appear in the leading roles in this interesting two-reel O. Henry adaptation, which is based on a story of a wealthy but miserly old lady who suddenly becomes fascinated with a young girl and adopts her. An artist friend solves the mystery by discovering that the girl's profile closely resembles the lady on a silver dollar. There are a number of clever touches and the story is well directed. Reviewed at length in this issue.

THE BULLY (Ebony).—This number, enacted by a cast composed entirely of colored players, including Sam Robinson, Evon Junior and Rudolph Tatum, is exaggerated slapstick, the story dealing with a bully who works in a bakery and who is finally overcome by a new cook who subdues him by means of a loaf of bread in which he has placed a horseshoe. It is about on an average with the previous issues of this brand and contains some laughs.

SNAKEVILLE'S NEW WAITRESS.—This is an amusing Essanay reissue, dealing with the arrival of a new waitress in a mining camp. The scenes showing how the proprietors, Mustang Pete (Harry Todd) and Slippery Slim (Victor Potel) attempt to win her by taking her out riding, one on horseback and the other in a buggy; and the troubles they encounter and the schemes they adopt to outdo each other are cleverly handled and get a number of laughs. Margaret Joslin appears as Sophie, the new waitness.

Arrow Film Corporation.

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY.—This six-reel story being released on state right basis was made by cutting down the forty-six-reel serial issued some time ago. The result is filled with action, it contains many thrills and the continuity and suspense of the story is well maintained. A longer review appears on another page of this issue.

Christie Film Corporation.

HERE COMES THE GROOM (Christie), April 22.—This comedy might be considered very funny if it had been developed along strictly farcical lines. As it is the happenings in which the groom is the central figure are at times not convincing. A full review will be found elsewhere.

SOMEBODY'S BABY (Christie), April 29.—One of the best of the recent Christie comedies. The picture tells the story of how a baby lost in an automobile mix-up almost gets a young man in bad in the bargain. Reviewed elsewhere.

A REGULAR PATSY (Christie).—A poo sample of comedy in which a young gi is continually getting in sister's an mother's way when there are men aroun A full review will be found elsewhere.

LOVE AND A GOLD BRICK (Christie).—Rather an amusing though not a ne situation is presented in this comedy i which a young man who has been ser by his father to the oil fields to learn th business thoroughly plays the rube whe he comes to visit a cousin who believe him to be like a rube picture of him whic he has sent her. Reviewed elsewhere.

THEIR BREEZY AFFAIR (Christie).—An ordinary type of comedy in which th hero consents to marry a strange woma for the period of a week for the sum o $1,000, so that he may later have enoug money to marry his own sweetheart. Re viewed elsewhere.

De Luxe Pictures, Inc.

THE STREET OF SEVEN STARS (D Luxe Pictures).—Doris Kenyon is the sta in this six-part screen version of the Mar Roberts Rinhart story. The scene ha changed from Vienna to Paris and th history of the young American girl wh gives up her musical career for the ma she loves is told pleasantly but with littl dramatic action. A longer review is print ed on another page of this issue.

Educational Films Corporation.

FISHERMAN'S LUCK (Educational).—Katzenjammer number in which the elde Katzenjammer goes fishing. He watche his neighbor having the most wonderfu luck while he not only catches nothing but loses his bait. Needless to say th youngsters are on the job, using a duck t steal the bait. An imitation fish contain ing the Katzenjammer cat and dog whic Pa finally succeeds in landing with diffi culty proves to be the last straw and earn the youngsters the usual spanking.

UP IN THE AIR (Educational).—One o the Katzenjammer comic cartoons in whic the youngsters take advantage of P Katzenjammer having the toothache t play a practical joke. They together im personate the dentist camouflaged by linen duster, and give him gas which in flates him to such an extent that he serve the youngsters as a balloon to which the attach themselves for a ride through th air. Taken for a hostile aeroplane th outfit is bombarded and finally landed Very funny.

Famous Players-Lasky.

OLD WIVES FOR NEW (Artcraft), Ma 20.—David Graham Phillips handled a cer tain phase of social life with uncompro mising realism in his novel, and the scree version, directed by Cecil DeMille, follow the author's lead. The cast and produc tion are of the best. A longer review i printed on another page of this issue.

PRUNELLA (May 27).—Maurice Tour neur and the cast led by Marguerite Clark made a delightful fantasy of this stag success in which the star was also see in the name part. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

HIS OWN HOME TOWN (Ince), May 27—A story showing the power of the press in destroying organized graft, with Charles Ray cast for the leading role. Reviewed in last week's issue.

LOVE LOOPS THE LOOP (Paramount-Mack Sennet), June 3.—A mildly amusing farce comedy, repeating many old tricks and introducing one new one.

Fox Film Corporation.

OCCULTISM (Mutt and Jeff Cartoon), May 12.—Jeff learns how to send his astral body out. Mutt finds the body and has the undertakers come. Jeff's astral body floats around the weeping Mutt and has fun with him, then scares him to death by coming to. It's a good picture.

SUPERINTENDENTS (Mutt and Jeff Cartoon), May 19.—Mutt is in charge of an apartment house and goes upstairs to talk with the woman who will play music and wants the other tenants to chase themselves. He has an awful time and comes down all battered. Jeff goes up and comes down outside to the sidewalk. To be chucked out peeves him and he takes off his coat. When he comes down this time it is by the stairs, and he carries the piano with the woman tied to it. Plenty of action; good stuff.

BLUE-EYED MARY (Fox Special Feature), June 2.—A five-reel picture with June Caprice in central role. There is much freshness about the story, though trite means are used to bring climax. Some interesting characters well acted add to its value. Some of the players can not act, but the best part of the plot is in able hands. For longer notice see review on another page of this issue.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

ALL WOMAN (Goldwyn), June 2.—A five-reel picture in which Mae Marsh plays a character of particularly pleasing humanity. On this account especially, and also on account of the freshly imagined situation from which the story starts, the production will probably come in for wide favor. A longer account of the picture may be found on another page of this issue.

Graphic Film Corporation.

CECILIA OF THE PINK ROSES (Marion Davies Film Co.)—A six-reel story, adapted from a novel by Katherine Haviland Taylor and directed by Julius Steger. The story is thin in plot but beautiful in execution. It contains a great deal of home sentiment and has strong religious moments. Marion Davies plays the leading role, the daughter of an Irish bricklayer, and is very appealing, though no great acting demands are made upon her. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN (Vitagraph Blue Ribbon), May 27.—A production out of the ordinary in many ways and one that can safely be depended on to make a sensation in the community among picture lovers that will entirely favor the picture. It tells a tragic story of the North Woods in a realistic way and smells of pine boughs, of sweat and red blood. Its animal scenes are most praiseworthy. We have reviewed it at length on another page of this issue.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

A SOUL FOR SALE (Jewel).—A six-reel offering, featuring Dorothy Phillips in a story based on a tale by Evelyn Campbell in "Snappy Stories." The production is a society drama with melodramatic moments, and is one in which the girl's depraved mother tries to wed her to a millionaire roue and later steals money from her real lover. The girl compromises herself in trying to return the money, but the story ends happily. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Mena Film Corporation.

RESTITUTION (Mena Film Company).—A ten-reel offering, showing the life of man from the creation of the world up to modern times, and the struggle of humanity to find restitution for sin. The offering is wonderful in a pictorial way, but contains many unpleasant features. If edited carefully and cut down several reels it would no doubt find favor with a large part of the public. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 24 (Mutual), May 22.—Interesting items of this issue are the inaugurating of the aviation mail route at Washington, D. C.; the mobilizing of 15,000 war animals, including Texas horses and mules; scenes in France showing the devastation wrought in the recent German drive; ship building activities at Hog Island; troops on a hike through Wisconsin, and the use of liquid fire in killing crop-destroying insects, such as grasshoppers, in California.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 25 (Mutual), May 26.—Interesting items of the 25th issue of the Screen Telegram include a meeting of border governors from both sides of the line on the Mexico-Texas border to insure peace in that region; plants by the million being distributed among the population of Bogalusa, La., for decoration purposes; scenes in France showing Pershing's men going to the front; women farming; a recuperation camp being erected at Denver, Col., and Red Cross campaign activities in different cities.

MY LADY NICOTINE (Strand), May 21.—Not as pleasing as some others of the Strand comedies in which Billie Rhodes and Cullen Landis have appeared. The story pictures an attempt by a young wife to cure her husband of smoking. She puts a patent medicine which claims to have the desired effect, in his coffee, and on discovering her plan he makes believe that he is becoming addicted to the drug habit.

WHAT THE WIND DID (Strand). Quite an amusing arrangement of an old theme. Billie Rhodes and Cullen Landis are, of course, featured in the picture which tells of how a young man in trying to be near a young women he loves, but has never met, offers to mind a baby which she is obliged to leave in a carriage outside a department store door while she goes inside. In the development of the picture he takes the child to the nursery and is given a check which belongs to a colored child, a gust of wind having caused the two checks lying side by side on the counter to change places. Incidents following are amusing, and he finally discovers that the girl is not married, and that the baby belongs to her sister.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE YELLOW TICKET (Pathe Play), June 2.—Strong five-reel offering, adapted from the well-known stage success of the same name. Fannie Ward is seen at her best in this powerful number, which is very dramatic throughout. She is supported by a strong case. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, No. 4 (Pathe), June 2.—Another instructive instalment of this series, which will have great historical value. It gives close views of a German prison camp in England, showing the care taken of the men, their good physical condition and opportunities for work and play. The second part of the reel pictures King Albert and Prince Alexander of Teck on a visit to the British front. The subject is full of interest.

YOSEMITE IN WINTER (Pathe), June 9.—An interesting scenic, giving some fine views of the well-known park under new conditions. The mountains and valleys are shown after heavy snowfalls, which renders climbing difficult. The experiences of two travelers are shown in the pictures.

UNDERWORLD ALLIES (Pathe), June 9.—Episode No. 14 of "The House of Hate." Further exciting adventures with the Hooded Terror occur throughout this number. Pearl is no sooner rescued from the cotton conveyor than both she and Gresham are plunged into fresh peril. Gresham procures a map of the gang's headquarters from "Cokey" George. The latter is killed by the gang and the principals are about to follow a similar fate when the police raid the place.

SIC 'EM TOWSER (Pathe-Rolin), June 9.—A comedy number in which Harold Lloyd dresses as a hobo to attend a masquerade ball. He is arrested as a tramp and has some amusing adventures. Meanwhile a real hobo is entertained at the ball and is only exposed when Harold appears later. Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels are also in the cast.

Select Pictures Corporation.

DE LUXE ANNIE (Select).—Norma Talmade and her support put over this five-part screen version of Edward Clark's crook play with a bang. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HIGH STAKES (Triangle), May 26.—An English detective story of the regulation sort, this five-part picture is very well played by J. Barney Sherry and his support. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

ARE WIVES REASONABLE? (Keystone Comedy), May 16.—Two-part Triangle Keystone comedy, the theme of this picture is amusing, but develops too slowly. The cast is headed by Ed J. Brady and Claire Anderson. A colored maid and her beau supply the love-making scenes.

Universal Film Company.

CURRENT EVENTS, No. 54 (Universal), May 18.—Women of the British land army, President Wilson greeting the French "Blue Devils," scenes from the ship yards, beginning of first American aerial mail service, scenes from the Picardy front and other features are included in this.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 25 (Universal), May 22.—This opens with the Sammies going over the top in a sham battle. Scenes from the Picardy front in the recent drive follow, and then incidents from the Red Cross drive. The number closes with Hy Mayer cartoons.

MERRY MERMAIDS (L-KO), June 5.—Dave Morris, Rube Miller and others appear in this two-reel subject of the knockabout type. A number of good-looking girls appear in gymnasium and swimming-tank scenes. But the plot is of no consequence and most of the action is meaningless and without any particular humor.

THE ESCAPE THRU THE FLAMES (Universal Serial), June 8.—Episode No. 10 of "The Lion's Claws." Another carefully constructed and thrilling instalment. This pictures Beth's rescue from the burning cottage and her subsequent adventures among the wild beasts of the jungle. These latter scenes are very effective; also the numerous clashes with Rej Hari and his guards.

THE BULL'S EYES (Universal Special), June 8.—Episode No. 18. This brings this exciting serial to a close. Cody escapes from the railroad track. He and Cora are bound to runaway engines, which are seen approaching one another at breakneck speed. They escape and later both North and Sweeney are killed. Cora gives her hand to Cody, and the successful serial closes with him preparing to go to the front.

Vanco Films Company.

JIM'S FOLKS (Vanco Films Company).—One-reel comedy-drama based on a Bill Stinger poem and directed by Bert Van Tuyle. This picture has a patriotic appeal, but the acting and direction are not up to the mark.

Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc.

RECLAIMED (Harry McRae Webster Productions).—Written by Richard Carroll and featuring Mabel Julienne Scott and Niles Walch, this seven-part pictures is a fast-moving melodrama and has been well produced. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

World Pictures Corporation.

THE INTERLOPER (World Picture), June 3.—A five-reel subject, featuring Kitty Gordon, supported by Irving Cummings. This is the story of a second wife who tires hearing the praises of her husband's wife number one. She almost rebels and accepts the love of another man, but conquers herself and all ends well. Kitty Gordon does some admirable acting in this. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

"THE INTERLOPER"

World-Pictures Presents Kitty Gordon, Supported by Irving Cummings in a Memorable Story of the Love Triumphant of a Brave Woman.

Cast.

Jane Cameron.....Kitty Gordon
Paul Whitney.....Irving Cummings
Whitney Pere.....Warren Cook
Mrs. Whitney.....Isabelle Berwin
Aunt Patricia.....June Blackman
Edmond Knapp.....Frank Mayo
Courtney Carvel.....Geo. MacQuarrie
Eph.....Anthony Byrd
Kamoto.....I. Quong
The Whitney Butler.....Tom Cameron

Directed by Oscar Apfel.

The Story: Jane Cameron refuses to grant permission to Anthony Whitney to build a railroad through her plantation, so he decides to send his son, Paul, who has lost his wife, and who is in need of a change in environment, to negotiate the deal. Paul finds Jane just as steadfast in her determination not to accede. A friendship develops between them, however, and when the elder Whitney brings the matter to court, Jane's property is condemned. This incenses the negro laborers, and they attack Paul, injuring him, though not seriously. With the return of Paul's health the young people's love for each other increase, and they are soon married. At the father's home, where the couple is living, Jane, during Paul's absence, is told by Edmund Knapp, who has become much attached to her, that Blanche, Paul's first wife, was not the devoted woman pictured to her, but that she yielded to the fervid protestations of his love. Hatred and jealousy take possession of Jane; but her attitude of resentment against him is dissipated when she realizes the devotion of her husband and his grief over the perfidy of his first wife.

Feature Kitty Gordon as Jane Cameron and Irving Cummings as Paul Whitney.

Senorita Selina Rossi....Alice Knowland
Senorita Agatha Rossi.....Ann Sraefer

Directed by George D. Baker.

The Story: Jim Lassells, in search of legal proof that his cousin, Harold Brooks, is dead obtains it in Africa. At a slave market he buys a young girl, named Perdita, to prevent her from falling into the hands of a Moslem. Years later, while Jim is out driving with the impecunious Duchess of Westgate and her daughter, Lady Lilah Grey, Perdita, who has left the school where she had been sent by her benefactor, throws herself in front of his machine, exclaiming "It is my lord and master." Jim takes the girl along with him, much to the chagrin of Lady Grey, who is in love with him. Information comes to Jim which reveals that Perdita is the daughter of Harold Brooks, and that she is, therefore, the legatee. Count Theodore de Seramo, at the instigation of Perdita, abducts the Duchess and her daughter, and when Jim, who has heard that Perdita has eloped with Prince Lorenzo di Rivoli, encounters the Prince and removes the veil from the woman standing beside him he (Jim) is astonished to meet Aissa, Perdita's nurse. Jim, searching for Perdita, finds her at the cave where Count Theodore has taken the Duchess and her daughter, and learns that Lady Grey and the Count are engaged. Jim tells Perdita of her inheritance and they plan to get married.

Feature Edith Storey as Perdita and Lewis Cody as Jim Lascelles.

Major Duval.....Roy Laidlaw

Directed by Reginald Barker.

The Story: Walter Cosgrove becomes fascinated with Lola Dexter, a destitute young girl, and establishes her in luxurious quarters. When Cosgrove all but dissipates his fortune, he succeeds in acquiring another by marrying the wealthy Edith Danfield. Cosgrove gives Lola a big check and she leaves for Palm Beach, where she accidentally meets Thomas Danfield, the invalid father of Edith. She becomes his companion. Upon their return to the city they meet Edith, who is disillusioned regarding Cosgrove. Edith hears of the valor of Jimmie Ashley, her former sweetheart, on the battlefield, and then realizes that she never did care for Cosgrove. Some time later Jimmie and a famous French surgeon return from the front, and an operation performed by the doctor results in Danfield regaining the use of his limbs. When Cosgrove shows that he wants Lola again she tells Edith and Danfield, who has fallen in love with her, of her past. As she finishes her story she prepares to leave, and Cosgrove, who tries to prevent her, falls down the stairs and is killed. Edith is now free to marry Jimmie, and as Lola departs she tells Danfield to come for her at the end of a year if he still loves her.

Feature Louise Glaum as Lola Dexter and Jack Gilbert as Jimmie Ashley.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Fate Plays Fast and Loose with Human Pawns in an Unending Struggle for Happiness.

The Shackles of Convention Make Helpless Prisoners of Love's Victims.

Fickle Hearts Fail Under Test of Sincerity.

Unusual Outcome in a Contest for Happiness Under Strange Handicap.

Stern Conventions Provide Barriers that Bar the Way to Happiness.

Great Drama of Sociological Purpose Provides Tense Entertainment.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work use handcuffs, with the explanation that Harry Houdini could get out of the cuffs in ten seconds, but that not even a Houdini can escape the matrimonial shackles so easy, adding that Lola Dexter breaks the shackles for Edith Danfield at the possible cost of her own happiness. For a lobby display use a hank of yarn, badly tangled, with "You may think this is tangled, but it is not so badly snarled as the love affairs of Lola Dexter and Edith Danfield in Shackled (playing date). With Louise Glaum."

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three-sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnail and one to three-column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

Released May 20.

"MISSING"

J. Stuart Blackton Presents a Screen Version of the Much-Discussed Novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward.

Cast.

Sir William Farrell.....Thomas Meighan
Lieut. George Surratt.....Robert Gordon
Dr. Howson.....Winter Hall
Nell.....Sylvia Breamer
Hester.....Ola Humphrey
Mrs. Greyson.....Mollie McConnell
Cicely.....Kathlyn O'Connor

Directed by James Young.

The Story: Nell and Hester are sisters. Hester, the elder, craves wealth and social position. Nell is beautiful and unworldly, and she falls in love with a poor young Englishman who is about to receive a lieutenant's commission and leave for the front. She marries him, and when he is reported missing, the elder sister attempts to instill in Nell's mind the belief that he is dead and thus marry a rich man. But in the end Nell's soldier husband returns to her.

Feature Robert Gordon as Lieutenant George Surratt and Sylvia Breamer as Nell.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Brave Soldier Numbered Among the Missing Comes Home to His Loved Ones Under Unusual Circumstances.

Mrs. Humphrey Ward's Famous Novel Interpreted by Master Craftsmen Who Brought to the Screen "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Charming Photoplay of War, Romance and Human Sacrifice.

Memory Restored Through Old Love Song Furnishes Basis of Photo-plot.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton Introduces His Greatest Screen Production.

Stunt Suggestions: Emphasize the fact that this is a love story with a war background rather than a war story with a thread of romance. Clip the casualty lists from the local paper on the nearest city issue and mark the "missing" sections, lettering the announcement of the play above with reference to the lists. The newspapers can be worked for special mention through the use of Mrs. Ward's name.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released June 2.

"LOVE'S CONQUEST"

Adolph Zukor Presents Lina Cavalieri, the Distinguished Operatic Star, in a Screen Version of the Opera of Gismonda.

Cast.

Gismonda .....Lina Cavalieri
Almerio .....Courtenay Foote
Prince Zaccaria.....Fred Radcliffe
Gregoras .....Frank Lee
Francesco .....Fredi Verdi
Bishop .....J. H. Gilmore
Nurse .....Isabelle Berwind

Directed by Edward Jose.

The Story: Gismonda is a beautiful Athenian duchess for whose hand and riches the neighboring nobles are vieing. She spurns all offers of marriage and devotes herself wholly to affairs of state and to the care of her four-year-old son. When, through the trickery of Prince Zaccaria, one of her suitors, this child supposedly falls into a well where a lion is confined, the grief-stricken mother, vowing under the shadow of the Cross to marry the man who saves her child, she renounces her vow when a simple huntsman of plebian birth rescues and returns the boy to his mother, trouble ensues. How this huntsman finally wins her love and she comes to the full realization of her love for him and publicly espouses him, is told in a series of highly dramatic situations filled with thrills.

Feature Lina Cavalieri as Gismonda and Courtenay Foote as Almerio.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dramatic Story of "Gismonda" Translated to the Screen for Famous Operatic Star.

Victorien Sardou's Gripping Tragedy Reflected in Impelling Photoplay.

Famous Operatic Star Seen in Screen Version of Sardou's "Gismonda."

Internationally Famous Operatic Beauty in Vivid Drama of Love and Thrills.

Sardou's Famous Play, Reflecting the Love of a Duchess Who Married a Pauper.

"Gismonda," Famous Sardou Drama, Brought to the Screen Under New Title.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up the fame and beauty of the star. Borrow her phonograph records and have a Cavalieri concert while slides announce her coming. This has been done with success with Mary Garden. The papers should be easy to work for this combination of an operatic star in a well known opera by Sardou. Also emphasize the fact that the star has always been more of an actress than a singer.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Cuts from one to three columns on star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book.

Released June 2.

"DE LUXE ANNIE"

Joseph M. Schenck Presents Norma Talmadge in a Crook Play That is Different from the Rest. From the Play by Edward Clark.

Cast.

Julie Kendal (De Luxe Annie), Norma Talmadge
Jimmy Fitzpatrick.....Eugene O'Brien
Walter Kendal.....Frank Mills
Dr. Fernand Niblo.....Edwards Davis
Detective Cronin.....Fred R. Stanton
Cyrus Monroe.....Joseph Burke
Mrs. Archer.....Edna Hunter
Janet Kendal.....Harriet Jenkins
Joe, grocery clerk.....David Burns

Directed by Roland West.

The Story: Julie Kendal, wife of Walter Kendal, becomes an aphasia victim as the result of a blow on the head. While in this condition she becomes the confederate of Jimmy Fitzpatrick in the operation of the De Luxe-book variation of the old badger game. Ignorant of his real purpose she evades the detective whom her husband has retained to trace her, and subconsciously flees to the little town in which the summer home of the Kendals is situated. There a surprising, but altogether logical, chain of events brings her to the house where her husband and his friend, Dr. Niblo, meet her and her confederate. An operation restores her memory and with it the happy life which had blessed the home of the Kendals before the catastrophe.

Feature Norma Talmadge as Julie Kendal (De Luxe Annie) and Frank Mills as Walter Kendal.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Female Book Drummer Combines "Badger Game" with Merchandizing.

An Unusual "Crook" Play, Combining a Moral with its Interesting Lesson.

Norma Talmadge Finds an Ideal Role in Her Latest Screen Success.

Saturday Evening Post Story, First Staged, Now Screened, by Most Popular of Stars.

Odd Outcome of an Accident that Changes a Woman's Disposition.

Crime Play of Gripping Appeal that Baffles the "Plot Sherlocks."

Stunt Suggestions: There is little material in the play for special stunts, but plenty of opportunity for good newspaper work on this story of a submerged personality, with Miss Talmadge playing the part of a loving wife who turns crook when a blow destroys her memory of her past life. Work to the newspaper end and trust to window cards and posters for the rest.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. Cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cut of star and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star.

Released in May.

"THE SCARLET ROAD"

William Fox Presents Gladys Brockwell in the Story of a Girl With a Conscience Who Lived in Bohemia.

Cast.

Mabel Halloway.....Gladys Brockwell
Tiny .....Betty Shade
John Rand.....L. C. Shumway
Raymond LaFarge.....Charles Clary
Dick Halloway.....William Scott

Directed by Edward Le Saint.

The Story: John Rand, an editor, married, but not living with his wife, falls in love with Mabel Halloway. She is also loved by Raymond LaFarge, a broker; but she keeps both men at a distance. Mabel's brother, Dick, steals a large sum of money from the bank where he is employed and loses it at the gambling tables. Rand comes to the assistance of Mabel by giving her his entire savings, telling her that she can remain with him or go her way. But Mabel sometime later marries LaFarge in order that she may repay Rand. When she learns that LaFarge has another wife she upbraids him and a struggle ensues. LaFarge falls to his death from a window in his office, and shortly after this incident Rand, who has learned that his wife has died, marries Mabel.

Feature Gladys Brockwell as Mabel Halloway and L. C. Shumway as John Rand.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mercenary Marriage in New York's Bohemia Terminates in Tragedy that Clears the Road to Happiness.
How a Puritan Girl Struggled to Happiness Through New York's Bohemia.
Puritan Blood Battles to Victory Against Forces of Evil in Great City.
Purged and Purified by the Fires of Evil in New York's Bohemia.
Perils of Life in Great City Combated by Purity of Girl's Purpose.
Vistas of Bohemia and its Unconventional Men and Women.

Stunt Suggestions: For window work get cheap lithographed landscapes showing a long road. Paint the roads a bright scarlet and use a card, "Go to the end of The Scarlet Road with Gladys Brockwell at (house and date). She lived in Bohemia, but she didn't belong." For the lobby make a "road" with a red carpet and a few trees in tubs and use the same idea for the announcement. A simpler lobby display can be made by adapting the spider-web idea in the press sheet, making the web of twine and using the catchline as shown.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City. Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

Released June 23.

"THE YELLOW TICKET"

Pathe Presents Fannie Ward in an Astra Production of A. H. Wood's Great Broadway Success, by Michael Morton.

Cast.

Anna Mirrell.....Fannie Ward
Julian Rolfe.....Milton Sills
Baron Andrey.....Warner Oland
Count Rostov.....Armand Kalisz
U. S. Consul Seaton.....J. H. Gilmour
Miss Seaton.....Helen Chadwick
Petrov Paviak.....Leon Bary
Marya Varenka.....Anna Lehr
Isaac Mirrel.....Dan Mason

Directed by William Parke.

The Story: The secret police of Russia attempt to make Anna Mirrel, a beautiful Jewish girl living in Tasepevka, an outcast because of her race. As a result of an agitation against the Jewish population of the little town the Moujiks are inflamed against the Jews, and many of them are massacred. Anna's mother is slain, and she sends her sick father to St. Petersburg. Word comes to Anna later that her father is dying, and to gain permission to leave the settlement Anna is compelled to accept the badge of dishonor—the Yellow Ticket. She locates her parent in the home of Marya Varenka, who is caring for him devotedly. After her father's death, Anna, under the name of Marya, becomes tutor to the daughter of Mr. Seaton, an American diplomat. She meets Julian Rolfe, an American journalist, who writes from the information given by Anna a series of articles exposing Russia. Learning the source of the material an agent of the secret police threatens Anna and secures her discharge. Anna encounters Baron Andrey, head of the secret police, and is forced to murder him to save her honor. She then gives herself up to the police. A number of intensely dramatic and thrilling episodes bring about a most unexpected climax.

Feature Fannie Ward as Anna Mirrel and Milton Sills as Julian Rolfe.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Intensely Tragic Story of Russia Under the Czars.
Fate of Social Unfortunates Irrevocably Sealed by Royal Edict.
The Wide Gulf of Cast Against Class An Unfathomable Abyss.
Wrongs of the Unfortunates Forever Unavenged.
Social Outcasts Wandering Hopelessly With Only Death as Solace.
Great Stage Sensation Turned Into Smashing Screen Success.

Stunt Suggestions: While the story is clean, the Yellow Ticket should not be worked up in stunts. It would be better to center the press work on the tyrannical oppression of the people by the secret police in the reign of the Romanoffs. Offer the story as one reason for the revolution, and do not dwell too much upon the Yellow Ticket itself, save in the use of the color for window cards and lobby display. It would be better to avoid all special stunts on this and trust to press work and pictorial paper. Dwell upon the impression the play made on American audiences.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

Released June 2.

"THE ORDEAL OF ROSETTA"

Select Pictures Presents Alice Brady in a Unique Story of a Stenographer Who Was Made to Suffer Through the Use of Her Face on a Showbill.

Cast.

Rosetta Gelardi } .....Alice Brady
Lola Gelardi }
Aubrey Hapgood.....Crauford Kent
Ruth Hapgood.....Ormi Hawley
Professor Gelardi.....Henri Leone
Mrs. Hapgood.....Maud Turner Gordon
Dick .....Ed. Burns
Mildred Sanders.....Hazel Washburn
Theatrical Agent.....George Henry

Directed by Emile Chautard.

The Story: The home of Rosetta and Lola Gelardi, twins, living in Sicily with their father, an aged professor, is destroyed by an earthquake. Lola is buried in the ruins, and Rosetta and her father come to New York City, where Rosetta becomes secretary to Aubrey Hapgood, an author. At his Long Island home Rosetta wins all hearts; but Mildred Sanders, who is planning to win Hapgood, shows a poster for which Rosetta had posed, in total ignorance that her face would be used to surmount a risque figure drawn by the artist. The world becomes black to Rosetta and she dreams that Lola survived the earthquake and has come to New York, where a series of thrilling incidents occur. In the final scenes the tangled threads are all unraveled, and Rosetta awakens from her terrifying dream. Hapgood declares his love for her and it is not long before they are made man and wife.

Feature Alice Brady, who portrays the dual roles of Rosetta and Lola Gelardi, and Crauford Kent as Aubrey Hapgood.

Program and Advertising Phrases: A Tale of Twin Sisters Utterly Unlike in Any Human Attribute or Natural Trait.
Marvelous Dramatic Creation by Alice Brady of Two Different Roles.
Alike and Unalike, Twin Sisters Develop Marvelous Photoplot.
Alice Brady Surpasses Her Previous Triumphs in Newest Photoplay.
Photographic Trickery and Super-Talent Creates Dual Characterizations.

"THE LESSON"

Lewis J. Selznick Presents Constance Talmadge in the Faithful Story of a Country Girl Who Met and Married a "City Chap" and Was Sorry For It.

Cast.

Helen Drayton.....Constance Talmadge
"Chet" Vernon.....Tom Moore
John Galvin.....Herbert Heyes
"Tub" Martin.....Walter Hiers
Henry Hammond.....Joseph Smiley
Mrs. Hammond.....Lillian Rambeau
Ada Thompson.....Dorothy Green
Harriet Reeves.....Christy Walker

Directed by Charles Giblyn.

The Story: Helen Drayton tires of life in the little village in which she is living. Because "Chet" Vernon, one of the young men of the town, has been her companion at all of the dances and other social affairs, everyone takes it for granted that they will eventually be married. This impression provokes Helen to such an extent that when John Galvin, a young architect from New York arrives, she falls deeply in love with him, and before many weeks pass the two elope and are married. In New York, where they are living, Helen soon finds that she has married a very selfish man, and the couple begin to drift apart. From this step the story speeds forward to a highly dramatic conclusion.

Feature Constance Talmadge as Helen Drayton and Tom Moore as "Chet" Vernon.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Country Girl Makes Life's Mistake in Confusing Flash of City Manners with Sincerity of Purpose.
Country Girl, Dazzled by City Chap, Learns Lesson by Bitter Experience.
Pretty Girl Leaves Boredom of Country Town for False Glamor of City Life.
Intensely Dramatic Conclusion of a Country Girl's Venture in Life.
Married to Unspeakably Selfish Man Country Girl Learns Lesson Too Late.
Dramatic Story of Everyday Life with Unusual Curves to Gripping Plot.

Stunt Suggestions: In the dry goods stores arrange the display of a calico or gingham gown with a silk dress and use a portrait with a card reading, "She changed from prints to silks, but her husband wouldn't and didn't pay for them. See how she did it in The Lesson at (house and date). It's the better way." For other windows use, "She had to marry twice to get one good husband, but she had her lesson. Profit by it at (house and date) and marry but once." Play up the fact that the story is by Virginia Terhune Van der Water, whose syndicate stuff has made her name well known.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window cards, 14x21. Heralds. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides. "A DOLL'S HOUSE"

Adolph Zukor Presents Elsie Ferguson as Nora in Hendrick Ibsen's Most Notable Play of a Shattered Love and a Woman Undeceived.

Cast.

Nora.....Elsie Ferguson
Helmar.....H. E. Herbert
Krogstadt.....Alex. K. Shannon
Mrs. Linden.....Ethel Grey Terry
Dr. Rank.....Warren Cook
Ellen (Maid).....Zelda Crosby
Anna (Nurse).....Mrs. R. S. Anderson

Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

The Story: Helmar, a poor lawyer, falls ill, and his wife, Nora, in order to provide money to secure medical aid, commits forgery. For eight years she lives under the dread of exposure as a doll wife, and when disgrace comes her husband is about to discard her despite her self-sacrificing course in his behalf, when a letter reaches him containing the incriminating evidence against his wife. With the fear of disgrace gone, the huband's manner changes, and he seeks to reinstate his doll wife to her lost place in his household. Her troubles have transformed her sentiments and ideas, and she leaves her husband convinced that they are both mismated, and that happiness for both lies in their separation.

Feature Elsie Ferguson as Nora and H. E. Herbert as Helmar.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Henrik Ibsen's Greatest Story and Stage Success Translated Into Impelling Photoplay.

"ALL WOMAN"

Goldwyn Presents Mae Marsh, the Star Inimitable, in the Story of a Working Girl Who Inherited a Country Dive.

Cast.

Susan Sweeney.....Mae Marsh
Austin Strong.....Jere Austin
Dick Wellman.....Arthur Housman
Tupper.....John Sainpolis
Kibby.....Jack Dillon
Hodges.....Joe Henaway
Miriam Strong.....Hazel Alden
Millie.....Madelyn Klare
Agnes.....Elsie Sothern
Amy.....Lois Alexander

Directed by Hobart Henley.

The Story: Susan Sweeney, a New York factory girl, inherits a rather dilapidated hotel in the Adirondacks, which she decides to rehabilitate. Austin Strong, a young lawyer and politician of the town, tries to dissuade her from her purpose, but Susan is obdurate. Miriam, Strong's sister, and her fiance, Dick Wellman, elope, and seek quarters at Susan's hotel, intending to be married the next day. They register as man and wife, but Susan persuades them not to adopt that method of getting married, and they return home. They forget to erase their registration, and a political enemy of Strong's uses this against him. In an argument with Dick he is killed, and Susan aids Dick to escape. Susan is suspected of the murder, and as the net of the law is tightening about her, Dick and Miriam confess. Strong is elected, and he and Susan are married.

Feature Mae Marsh as Susan Sweeney and Jere Austin as Austin Strong.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Story of a Good Girl Who Redeemed a Bad Town.
Girl's Righteous Wrath Triumphs Over Corruption.
Romantic Girl Fights for Love and Wins Great Victory.
Broom Used by Modern Carrie Nation to Smash Her Own Groggery.

Stunt Suggestions: Feature the star, and in this connection dwell on the unusual character of the play in which she appears, a decent working girl who suddenly finds herself part owner of a country dive. Get artificial forget-me-nots for decorations for the window cards. Get some extra 22x28 enlargements, and use these in window displays instead of printed cards. Miss Marsh's name and face will pull harder than printed announcements.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six and one 24-sheet. Rotogravure one-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Coming and current slides. Advertising and scene cuts. Photographic line-cut copy for ads. Press book.

"A RED-HAIRED CUPID"

Triangle Presents Roy Saunders and Peggy Pearce in the Story of a Red-Headed Foreman Who Is Some Match-Maker in Spite of His Own Catastrophe.

Cast.

William Saunders.....Roy Saunders
Kyle Lambert.....Charles Dorian
Loys Andres.....Peggy Pearce
Albert Jones.....Ray Griffith
"Squint-Eye" Lucas.....Aaron Edwards
"Wind-River" Smith.....Walter Perry

Directed by Cliff Smith.

The Story: "Red" Saunders is the foreman of the Chanta Seechee cattle ranch in Oklahoma. His direction is most efficient, but the eastern directors of the company are dissatisfied and send Albert Jones to inject "eastern business methods" into the running of the ranch. At "Red's" request the cowboys do not resign, but they aggravate the new boss by doing everything wrong. Loys Andres, niece of Jones, pays him a visit, and when Kyle Lambert, one of the cowboys, falls in love with her, Jones, believing that if they marry they could never be happy, due to the wide difference in their social standing, decides to end the match by sending Loys home. But, thanks to the aid of "Red," who has been told of Jones' intention, the lovers elope. They are intercepted, however, by "Squint-Eye" Lucas, who fires upon Kyle, but the former is slain by "Red," and the lovers are soon made man and wife.

Feature Charles Dorian as Kyle Lambert and Peggy Pearce as Loys Andres.

"THE MAN WHO WOKE UP"

Triangle Presents a Charming Story of the South and the Man Who Would Not Believe That the War Was Over, From the Pen of William G. Mong, Who Plays the Leading Character.

Cast.

G. Waldo Campbell.....Harry Depp
Judge Campbell.....George Pearce
Thomas Foster.....George Hernandez
Dorothy Foster.....Jean Calhoun
Edith Oglesby.....Pauline Starke
William Oglesby.....William V. Mong
"On Hand".....J. Blackwell
Sylvia Oglesby.....Estelle Evans
Foster's Son.....Darrell Foss
Oglesby's Wife.....Alberta Lee

Directed by J. W. McLaughlin.

The Story: William Oglesby is still unreconstructed, and, as proprietor and editor of the Oglesburg Clarion, strives to keep alive the spirit of the Old South. But the town is growing away from him, and they welcome the offer of Thomas Foster, a New York millionaire and philanthropic worker, to establish industrial schools and otherwise promote the prosperity of the district. Oglesby goes to the meeting as a reporter, but his violent denunciation of the speaker creates a sensation. Vainly he fights against the growing public sentiment. His old friend, Judge Campbell, prevents the issuance of a special edition of the Clarion, denouncing the scheme, and his daughter falls in love with Foster's son. The climax comes when even his wife turns from him and, broken in spirit, yet born anew, he come to the new order.

Feature Estelle Evans as Sylvia Oglesby and Darrell Foss as Foster's son.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Story of a Quaint Old Town Told in Intimate Scenes and Heart-Appealing Incidents.
Dramatic Progress of Advance Ideas in an Old-Fashioned Community.
The Last Disciple of "The Old South" Surrenders to Northern Ideas.
How a "Double-Action" Small Town "Live Wire" Reformed His Home Town.
Dan Cupid Finds a Way to Settling Domestic Battles and Community Strife.

Stunt Suggestions: Your local newspaper may help you to make an artistic "pi" in a store window. The jumble will attract attention and can be used as the basis of a display alluding to the breaking-up of the Clarion forms. You can get fifteen or twenty linotype slugs, jumble them up and print them at the head of an advertisement or throwaway that tells that "This is what the columns of the Clarion might have looked like after they were pied by the editor's best friend to keep him from business suicide. See the incident in The Man Who Woke Up at (house and date)." Mr. Mong has made many friends in his screen career. Make full use of his popularity in announcing him as author and chief character.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

Released June 2.

"THE MONSTER OF FATE"

The General Film Company Presents Henry Galeen and Lydia Samonova in a Quaint Folk-story of the "Golen."

Cast.

Aaron .....Henry Galeen
Eleanor .....Lydia Samonova

The Story: The narrative is based on an old legend of a mythical monster known as the Golen. A statue of clay unearthed by workmen digging a well is bought by Aaron, an old antique dealer, and from a book which he has purchased from an aged professor discovers that the figure will come to life if a capsule containing the requisite magic words is inserted in its breast. Aaron secures the necessary life producer which, when placed in the figure, imbues it with life. By removing the capsule the monster is restored to its inanimate state. Aaron learns that his daughter is having a clandestine love affair with a count, and when she dresses for the count's party he employs the aid of the monster to prevent her going. Eleanor, struggling with the figure, accidentally knocks out the capsule and it becomes lifeless. Soon after Eleanor has left the old professor comes to Aaron's shop, places the capsule in its breast, and with its life renewed the monster goes in pursuit of Eleanor. It enters the count's home while the party is at its height and throws the assemblage into confusion. Attempts to slay it are futile, and order is restored only when the capsule is knocked out. The monster falls to the ground below and is dashed to pieces.

Feature Lydia Samonova as Eleanor.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Fantastic Story Combining Superstition with Gripping Legendary Romance.
Something Unusual in Screen-Story and Rare Photography.
Mythical Legend Turned to Entertaining Purpose on the Screen.
Strange and Unusual Theme Makes Photoplay of Unusual Merit.
Mystic Procedure Under Spell of Ancient Legend.
Fantastic Plot Developed in Unusual Photoplay Entertainment.

Stunt Suggestions: Get large-sized medicinal capsules and insert in each one a tightly roller paper inscribed on one side with mysterious characters. On the other print: "The reverse gives the magic formula for bringing the Golen to life. If you want to see how it works, see The Monster of Fate at the (house and date). It's a thriller." For a street stunt in a town advertise that the Golen will be on display on the streets on a certain day. Send out a man with an overall suit painted clay color and his face made up to match. On the back of the figure letter the announcement that this is the Golen, and for further details the play should be seen. With a clever man as the Golen much advertising can be obtained.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet. Two three-sheets, two six-sheets, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Three styles each of one and two-column cuts. Slides. Press sheets.

"THE MODEL'S CONFESSION"

Universal Presents a Special Production with Mary MacLaren in a Sensational Story by Ida May Park.

Cast.

Iva Seldon.....Mary MacLaren
Billy Ravensworth.....Kenneth Harlan
Rita Challoner.....Edna Earle
Bertrand Seldon.....Herbert Prior Clay Stewart.....Louis Willoughby
Mrs. Stanley.....Gretchen Lederer

Directed by Ida May Park.

The Story: Iva Seldon is a model in a fashionable gown shop to which all kinds of people come—the rich, the near-rich, the fashionable, the would-be smart, and those who pay for the gowns of the women who amuse the rakes of society. In one of the latter, Iva recognizes her father, the man who wronged her mother, and who would not acknowledge or see his daughter. Iva plans to meet her father on his own plane and to make him tell the world that she is of his own flesh and blood. A way presents itself in the financially stranded social lion, Billy Ravensworth. She succeeded in making him present her to society as his fiancee, and her father, who does not recognize her, forces his attentions upon her. She agrees to go for an auto ride with him, and a struggle ensues in the car. A locket containing her mother's picture falls to the floor. The chauffeur, turning to see what is the matter, drives the machine over a cliff, and the father is killed. Iva, who is only slightly wounded, regains her health quickly, and marries Billy.

Feature Mary MacLaren as Iva Seldon and Kenneth Harlan as Billy Ravensworth.

Frames, Easels, Rails, Grilles, Signs, Choppers, Kick Plates, Door Bars

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mary MacLaren, Beautiful Heroine of "Shoes," Returns to Screen in Another Sociological Experiment.
Demure and Lovely Model Becomes Storm Center in High Society.
Daring Model Wrecks Conventions and Defies Social Ethics.
Great Purpose Achieved by Humble Shop-Girl in Her Quest for Vengeance.
Real Thrills Develop Rapidly in Gripping Expose of Social Decadance.
Fashionable Shop Model Exposes Shallowness of High Society.

Stunt Suggestions: You might plan with some drygoods store to stage a small fashion show, advertising the fact that Iva Seldon is a mannequin. Use the models at your theater the week preceding the showing of the picture. In exploiting the title be careful not to give too much of a suggestion that the story deals with unclad artist's models else the better element will stay away, and those who come will be disappointed.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays. Slide. Heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns wide. Press book.

What to Do
How to Do It

Every day, every hour, every minute finds some moving picture man, somewhere, in a quandary.

In the moving picture business—a comparatively new one—there have always been many problems. There are no weighty tomes of opinions and decisions, as in the law, to provide precedents. Practically each new case is an original problem in itself.

What the other chap is doing and how he is doing it at the time the same problem is confronting you, and the success with which his efforts are being rewarded, is the most helpful information you can secure.

And such information is helpful in dollars and cents if you use it intelligently.

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD, recognizing these conditions, aims each week to tell its readers "What to Do" and "How to Do It."

It is a publication of specific and detailed service.

Its every issue is carefully planned to be genuinely helpful to the moving picture industry at large.

It is the clearing house of facts, established by current performances, that can be applied with undoubted success to individuals and individual businesses everywhere.

We think it a conservative statement to say that there never has been an issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD printed that could not have returned twice the annual subscription price of the paper to any reader commercially interested in moving pictures who took the trouble to use it.

The per copy price everywhere is fifteen cents. The annual subscription rate is: Domestic, $3.00; Canada, $3.50; Foreign, $4.00. To subscribe at once and save Four Dollars or more per year is your smart business move.

Simplex

Don't Fool Yourself

Good Pictures alone won't keep the crowds coming.

Take Care

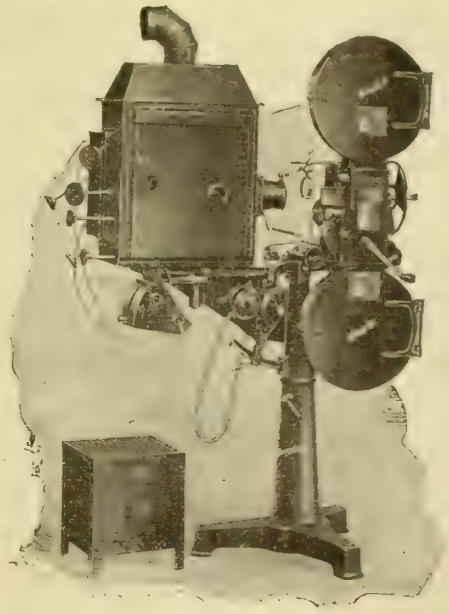
Projection that offends the eye discounts the goodness of the best Picture.

Men Who Know

The immortals among Exhibitors, the conspicuous successes, realize what a sensitive thing the human eye is.

They don't consider any Picture good unless the Projection is good. So they use

The Simplex Motion Picture Projector



It's the Cheapest

The Simplex is so well built that, figuring price of Machine and upkeep, its better projection actually costs less.

Good Men Sell It

Men who have your interest at heart, who want your good-will more than your money, sell the Simplex exclusively.

In Your Territory

There is such a Simplex Distributor. May we send you his name? Anyway, ask us to mail you Catalog "A."

Good Pictures and Simplex Projection make a mighty Profitable Combination

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment. : : : :
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

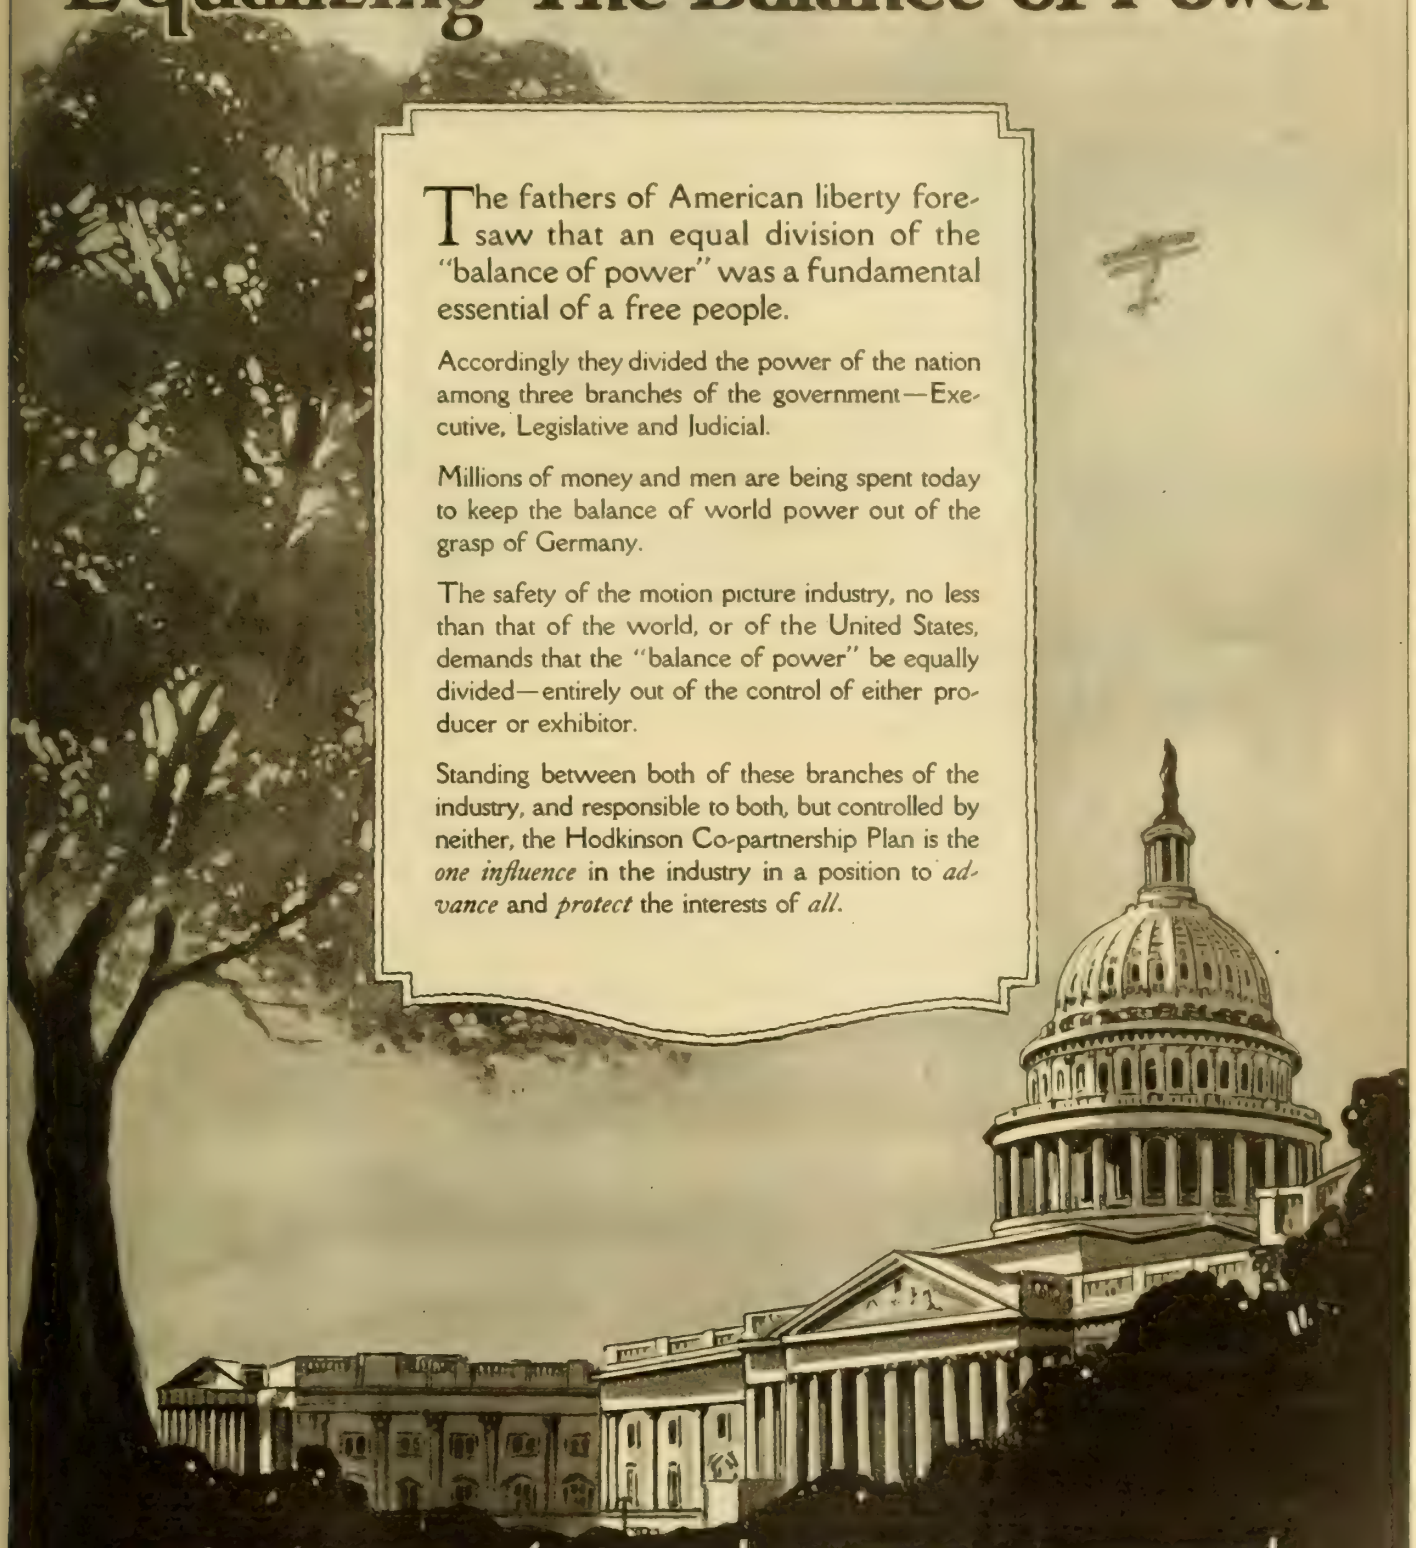
Equalizing "The Balance of Power"



The fathers of American liberty foresaw that an equal division of the "balance of power" was a fundamental essential of a free people.

Accordingly they divided the power of the nation among three branches of the government—Executive, Legislative and Judicial.

Millions of money and men are being spent today to keep the balance of world power out of the grasp of Germany.

The safety of the motion picture industry, no less than that of the world, or of the United States, demands that the "balance of power" be equally divided—entirely out of the control of either producer or exhibitor.

Standing between both of these branches of the industry, and responsible to both, but controlled by neither, the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan is the one influence in the industry in a position to advance and protect the interests of all.

Paramount and Artcraft Motion Pictures
Three Ways to Know
"FOREMOST STARS, SUPERBLY DIRECTED, IN CLEAN MOTION PICTURES" FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION
Saturday Evening Post

—will he think of YOUR theatre?

CONSIDER the psychology of advertising. You read the national magazines, such as The Saturday Evening Post, don't you?

When you see a motion picture advertisement in a magazine, you instinctively think of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures, for they are the nationally advertised pictures.

Thousands of persons in your community read these advertisements. Their thought is "Where can I see these Paramount and Artcraft Pictures?"

The advertisements tell them what and why. You must tell them where.

The folks in your community, the Mayor, the school children, the fathers and the mothers, the girl who lives across the street from you, the farmer at the edge of town—they all want to see Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

This advertising is yours if you make it so. Use the trademarks in your announcements. Display copies of the "ads" in your lobby. Announce "I show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures!"

Make them think of your theatre when they read the national advertising.

Thousands of theatres have increased their business by "tying up." How about yours?

An ARTCRAFT Picture

WHEN YOU BOOK THIS PRODUCTION, ADVERTISE—

CECIL B. DE MILLE, who produced "Carmen," "Joan the Woman," "The Whispering Chorus," "The Cheat," "The Woman God Forgot."

David Graham Phillips, whose novels are known to all readers of the Saturday Evening Post, Hearst's Magazine, etc.

The unique story, which "puts married life in a show window."

The cast, which includes Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts, Tully Marshall, Florence Vidor, Wanda Hawley, Helen Jerome Eddy, Marcia Manon and Gustav Seyffertitz.

The monster production, the gorgeous costuming, the scenes of magnificence, the big human appeal to all men and women.

The fact that it's an Artcraft picture.

And tie up with the magazine advertising on "Old Wives for New," in the Saturday Evening Post, Hearst's Magazine, The Red Book and Every Week!

You'll do big business when you show this one!

Another Splendid Mae Marsh Picture.

MAE MARSH in ALL WOMAN
by E. Lloyd Sheldon
Directed by Hobart Henley

The authoritative critics of the important trade newspapers are more enthusiastic about Mae Marsh in "All Woman" than they have ever been about any Goldwyn Picture, including "Polly of the Circus," "The Cinderella Man," and "Thais." Exhibitors everywhere will recognize the ear-marks of a sure screen winner in these whole hearted criticisms:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Hanford C. Judson: There is a pull at the heart strings in Mae Marsh's characterization in "All Woman." The humanness of this story and the character that Mae Marsh pictures for us makes the offering valuable. It has a specially pleasing pull at the sympathetic emotions of spectators.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW: George T. Pardy: Mae Marsh from the beginning to end carries insistent and sympathetic appeal . . "All Woman" is a valuable picture.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: P. S. Harrison: This is about the best feature Mae Marsh has ever been in. It will please everybody. The story is full of human touches that appeal to the emotions.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: Helen Pollock: "All Woman" is the type of story that has a general appeal . . it is true to life and thoroughly human.

VARIETY: Ibee: Goldwyn has turned out an excellent production with Mae Marsh in "All Woman." It is as interesting as if presented in printed form which appears to be a capital test of its worth. Hobart Henley, as the director, has had considerable to do with the good result obtained.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Joseph L. Kelley: This Goldwyn offering is a smashing good picture a little ahead of anything Mae Marsh has done for Goldwyn.

INSTANT nation-wide popularity with exhibitors and the public has launched "Smiling Bill" Parsons as a tremendously successful screen entertainer.

Just A Few Reports

Here are straight, unbiased, uninfluenced reports from exhibitors in all parts of the country who are showing Triangle pictures.

In every case the exhibitor obtained his pictures at an attractive rental price. Triangle rentals are based, of course, on the cost of production. And production costs on Triangle pictures are much lower than those of other producers who have not yet arrived at the high state of efficiency and economy which Triangle management has set.

Hand in hand with efficiency goes a very high artistic standard. Every Triangle exhibitor finds this standard one that obtains not only present business but assures sustained and increased patronage.

Triangle has no bargains to offer—but in place an excellent business proposition to every exhibitor who believes that he is showing pictures to make a creditable profit commensurate with his investment and showmanship.

It is a delight to deal with Triangle exchanges. The prompt, courteous, efficient service, the gentlemanly conduct of ambitious employes, the fair treatment, excellent cooperation and splendid pictures please and delight every motion picture exhibitor.

Many new exhibitors are visiting Triangle exchanges to arrange for summer service. The warm weather is to be anticipated by better pictures and even better service.

Call for an exchange of ideas as well as a new exchange service at any Triangle exchange.

Another open letter to exhibitors who screen re-issues under new titles.

Why Kill the Goose that Lays the Golden Eggs?

There are two or three stars whose names attract capacity business.

This is because those names have become the recognized trade-marks of high class motion picture entertainment.

People believe in them because the players they advertise may be depended upon to supply good entertainment.

For instance:—

When an exhibitor presents a new Chaplin film he knows he is going to play to capacity business; purely because people have faith in Chaplin's ability to entertain them they want to see every new picture he does.

Why destroy this goodwill by coupling the star's good name with an old subject under a new title?

The public will ever afterward distrust both exhibitor and star after having been deceived in this manner.

Why create distrust of yourself and one of your best assets—the drawing power of Chaplin's name?

Why prejudice the future of your theatre, your good name for fair dealing and the star's valuable—to you—reputation for the few dollars you may glean from the unwary by advertising popular stars in old releases under new titles?

Will it pay you?

MEN is the newest FOURSQUARE PICTURE

A Declaration of Faith

FOURSQUARE PICTURES believes that advertising space in trade publications has just one function—to give to exhibitors the strongest points of a new picture, so that they can cash on them at the box-offices. No exhibitor likes to be told that a picture is the greatest ever. What he is interested in is precisely what kind of a picture it happens to be. He wants to be informed of the vital selling points that will help him exploit the picture he has booked, for the two specific purposes of pleasing his patrons, and making as much money as is possible.

Vital Points for the Exhibitor on the Picture, MEN

The Main Theme

Two sisters form the pivotal point around which the story of "Men" revolves. The younger—who has been adopted when she was a baby—is being reared in the home of wealthy New Yorkers. She doesn't know that she has a sister, who is living in humble surroundings.

The Punch in the Picture

Now then—what would a girl do who sees the man she adores, and who has compromised her, being unwittingly taken away from her by her own sister? Would she permit this sister to marry this man, without an effort to stop the wedding ceremony? Picture the climax of such a situation!

A Cast of Distinguished Players

Charlotte Walker, one of the stars of the legitimate stage, has an effective role in "Men." The part of the elder sister is interpreted by Anna Lehr, in which she does exceptional work. Gertrude McCoy is the younger sister, and Robert Cain has the leading masculine character.

Settings Like Those in New York Homes of Wealth

In "Men" each set is a faithful reproduction of some room in the home of exclusive New Yorkers. There is a great hallway, treated exactly as that of one of the millionaires whose name is nation-wide. The same is true of the ball-room, the library, the boudoir of the daughter of the house. These settings are really a feature.

All the Critics Praise "MEN"

Incidentally, the following excerpts from critical reviews reflect the unanimous opinion that "Men" is a good picture:

(Motion Picture News)

"Men" is a clean drama for screen presentation. It represents an offering which both small-town and big-town exhibitors can book and cash a good percentage at the box-office.

(Wid's)

The pleasing personalities of the players, the direction and the fine atmosphere make "Men" hold nicely. It registers as good entertainment and will please the great "80 per cent" patronage.

(Dramatic Mirror)

"Men" is a picture of distinct merit, both in its acting and artistic production. It has a story of wide appeal splendidly presented.

(Moving Picture World)

"Men" is well constructed and finely acted, and the production is in keeping with the demands of the story. All the drama in the play is the result of honest love or dishonest passion.

(Exhibitor's Trade Review)

"Men" is a first-class feature picture. It is the sort of film that ought to go well in all classes of theaters, for it has a universal appeal. The Bacon-Backer people have set a high mark.

(Morning Telegraph)

The first release of the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation satisfies with a good story, superior players and pleasing backgrounds. "Men" is marked by fine suspense and quick action.

"BERLIN VIA AMERICA" WITH FRANCIS FORD has made a double-headed record.

1st. It sold more rapidly than any State Rights feature launched in a long time.

2d. The Buyers and exhibitors are all making money because The Francis Ford Producing Company has cut to the core in fixing the selling price and will continue to do so on all future releases for the open market.

Active State Rights Buyers who have already contracted for "Berlin via America" will automatically have the first refusal of other Francis Ford Features—six a year to follow!

A TRIBUTE TO THE MOTION PICTURE

By DAVID WARK GRIFFITH

WHEN "The Birth of a Nation" started on its astonishingly prosperous career, critics, exhibitors and the public were kind enough to say that it would never again be equaled from an artistic or money-drawing point of view. I am now gratified to announce as a tribute to the constantly growing powers of the motion picture that "Hearts of the World," in the opinion of the trade and the public, has surpassed "The Birth of a Nation" both as a production and as an attraction.

I TAKE this means of thanking everybody for so unanimously terming my current offering "a thrilling dramatic and pictorial reproduction of the great world-conflict" and

"the sweetest love story ever told"

Propositions for certain state rights of "Hearts of the World" will now be received and considered.

Please address all communications personally to me.

American Business—Attention!

The First of Every Month will be observed as

Thrift Stamp Day In The U. S. A.

The first Thrift Stamp Day went over big! It proved a tremendous boost for Uncle Sam's Thrift Stamps and War Savings Stamps campaign and for American business in general. As a result of the great success of the first Thrift Stamp Day, it has been decided to make the First Day of every month Thrift Stamp Day in the U. S. A.!

This means that every branch of American business has the unusual opportunity to make the first of every month a red letter business day throughout the Nation, and a Victory day for the U. S. Government by disposing of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of Thrift Stamps and War Savings Stamps!

So get busy at once in preparation for these red letter business days—these monthly Thrift Stamp Days! Manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, retailers, get together and plan for special Thrift Stamp Day sales, unusual values in every line of merchandise and commodity. It's up to you to help the Government and help yourselves at the same time.

Profit by your experiences of the first Thrift Stamp Day to make the succeeding Thrift Stamp Days still more of a success! Redouble your former efforts and you'll double the results! If any of you should still be unfamiliar with the working plan for Thrift Stamp Day, write for this plan today without fail. Address W. Ward Smith, National War Savings Committee, 51 Chambers St., New York City.

FILM EXPORTERS!

If any member of the motion picture industry needs a protective trade organization, it is the film exporter, comprising all branches of the business, namely, the manufacturer, accessory maker, foreign sales agent, film exporting specialist, export broker and foreign buyer himself.

Far-sighted exporters have long since endeavored to crystallize the movement for just such an organization. It is now not only high time for such a body, indeed

It is to-day, the ELEVENTH HOUR!

The reasons proposed justifying a

FILM EXPORTERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION

are briefly summed up in the following:

(and this is most important at this particular time)

The possibility that the Allied Governments and the United States might class moving pictures and all kinds of cinematographic machines and supplies as non-essential merchandise has assumed, during the past few weeks, the proportions of a menace threatening the life of the industry. Although no ruling has been passed as yet on the subject, and not even a hint has come from official quarters implying that the authorities are considering the placing of films and supplies on the "non-essential list," the consequences of such a stand would be so disastrous and far-reaching that immediate steps should be taken at once to secure proper representation in Washington. Exporters must consider that should these governments rule that non-essential shipments be prohibited to the belligerent nations and those countries they control, the only field left open would be the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking republics, which comprise South America, Central America, the West Indies, Mexico, Spain and Portugal.

Capable representation in Washington should be retained to lay the case of the exporters before the war-time law-makers and guide them in the conduct of their law-framing so as to protect the foreign rights seller and buyer, by advancing the necessary proofs that

MOVING PICTURES ARE NOT "NON-ESSENTIAL"

Piracy of films, illegal shipment of duped, stolen and second-hand copies of productions could be prevented and controlled from the headquarters in New York, by drastic action on the part of the organization, which would blacklist the offending selling firm by expulsion from the protective body, rendering him powerless to do business with any other of the members of this world-wide association; and by blacklisting the offending buyer through expulsion, which would entail the withdrawing of all purchasing privilege of said violator from any of the selling membership. An organization to do this, must be complete and 100% strong. This can be done, however, in the United States, as it has already been accomplished both by the Italian manufacturers in Italy and the French producers in France.

Surely, Americans can do quite as much to protect their own interests.

Certainly, no exporter, manufacturer, foreign buyer, or broker, now in the United States can underestimate the importance of attending the meeting that has been called at the HOTEL ASTOR, 8th Floor

THIS THURSDAY, JUNE 6

AT 12:30 P. M.

for the purpose of taking the immediate initiatory steps toward the formation of this Film Exporters' Association.

There are no politics behind this movement, no personal axes to grind; in fact, those who have proposed this meeting have no desire to even have their identities mentioned, so as to guarantee the mutuality, commonness of cause, and unity of purpose of the undertaking.

It is for ALL engaged in film exporting.

Every Branch of Film Exporter Is Invited

If you fully realize the seriousness of the situation, and want to do your bit to keep in business, be there and help give birth to the

Facts and Comments

ATTENTION was called by J. D. Williams in an article published in these columns last week to the injustice of releasing old pictures (reissues) under new titles. The practice deserves all the opprobrium heaped upon it by Mr. Williams and it is our inclination to emphasize all that he said. At the very least it is misrepresentation; a form of unfair trading upon the popularity of a name made popular by a competitor and one not followed by those who have a regard for the best form of business ethics. Not only that, for it serves to cheapen and to discredit, unnecessarily, the fame of the name upon which this unfair trading is carried on, so that in the end not only is the value of that name discredited but the pictures which are issued under counterfeit titles are discredited likewise.

We used the word "unnecessarily" in the foregoing paragraph because we believe that it is unnecessary to change the name of an old picture in order to reissue it. If a picture made some time in the past is good enough to reissue there is no occasion to change its name—the picture is its own recommendation—and a change of name is misleading and an insult to the intelligence of those who pay to see it. Briefly, the releasing agent who changes old titles to new is going out of his way to discredit his own business. An old picture that is good may be frankly put out as a reissue and will be welcomed as such as an old friend by all who have seen it before; it will be as well received by those who have never seen it because it is good and because they have heard of it in terms of praise. But if it is reissued under a new title with new sub-titles it is a deception, and its appearance will be resented by those who discover the fraud.

If the releasing agent insists in thus unnecessarily revising an old picture there is still less reason why the exhibitor should continue the fraud upon his audience. If the picture is good enough to go on his program there is no reason why it should masquerade under a false name. The exhibitor who lends himself to frauds of this sort discredits his house in the eyes of his patrons. Not that alone, but he aids in depreciating the value of the name of the player upon whom the fraud is practiced as well. No exhibitor who seeks to deal fairly with his patrons will be a party to such fraudulent practices.

There is another angle to this business of retitling reissues that may be of interest to those who follow it. The copyright law regards the title of a play or picture as an integral part of the work for the purpose of identification. It does not permit the owner of a picture to copyright it under one title and issue it under another which differs materially. By doing so the protection of the copyright is practically lost and anyone may dupe and market the film who so chooses. But if the original form of the picture in its titles is retained in the reissue the original copyright protection remains in force. It would be well for those making a practice of handling reissues to bear this fact in mind.

THE Red Cross drive conducted for the motion picture industry by "Colonel" William Fox was a whirlwind of intensity and an unequaled mine of productiveness, according to the latest reports. At the time of this writing all the nickels and dimes had not been counted, but it showed sufficient returns to entitle the industry to first place in the team competition. The amount collected by the forces under Mr. Fox's direction was something more than a million dollars, raised to that imposing figure by dint of thorough organization and hard work. Hundreds of motion picture men and women and probably every motion picture theater in greater New York were active in the drive, working with a rare determination to do their utmost for that noble institution, the Red Cross. Mr. Fox declared at the outset that he was in the drive to prove the efficiency of the motion picture and theatrical interests in the task of collecting money. He has proved all of his contentions.

THE effort of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to disparage the lack of dignity and intelligence, oftimes of even the common garden variety, adopted by certain writers to the trade on subjects pertaining to pictures seems to have struck a responsive chord in the soul of at least one of our readers. P. V. R. Key of Foursquare Pictures, himself a critic of no mean ability, is stirred to commend our effort for betterment in the following letter:

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir: The World has the faculty of putting its finger almost unerringly upon the necessary spots in the motion picture industry; occasionally with a skill so marked as to gratify those of us who realize the value of a constructive editorial and news policy that does not fear to speak the truth when so doing is for the good of the industry as a whole.

In The World of June 8 appears an article by Edward Weitzel, wherein the writer touches illuminatively upon the wisdom of appealing—through the printed word, in advertisements and otherwise in trade publications—to the intelligence of the exhibitor.

No more appropriate, or admirable, argument could be advanced than in Mr. Weitzel's summing up, in which he states: "* * * They are continually treated with the familiarity common to a bunch of roughnecks on a spree or inflicted with a brand of painfully labored humor, long since discarded by the regular stage. To judge from this kind of getting down to the reader's level the mental development of the exhibitor does not include the rudiments of a common school education nor the slightest trace of natural refinement.

"The fallacy of such a conclusion is readily understood by the men who control the screen theaters, and who have learned to solve their individual problems with the aid given them by competent and reliable trade publications that set down no more than they know."

Without wishing to criticise any publication, it is an indisputable fact that water will ascend to a level no higher than its source. On this theory it would seem wise to cultivate the intelligent side of the exhibitor's mental equipment rather than to assume that he is devoid of that quality.

Because some part of the mass of exhibitors happens to run along ordinary channels is no reason for concluding that thousands incline in that direction—which we know is not the case.

An industry which is attracting men of ability and integrity deserves, it would seem, dignified methods as well as dignified language—whether the latter be either written or spoken. For the sooner the industry is regarded as an industrial enterprise demanding consideration such as prevails in older and admittedly sound business projects, the nearer will be the day which lifts it to the plane it deserves. Yours truly,

P. V. R. KEY, Foursquare Pictures, Inc.

Whatever may be the estimate some picture trade paper editors place upon the intelligence of their readers the fact remains that the standard is higher than that of most commercial callings. The term "showman" is not synonymous with "boor" and none is so illiterate that he cannot comprehend English in its simple and best form. Why then should the language of the gutter or the barroom be served to readers of motion picture publications, or shall we assume that such is the only language in which the writer can express himself? If there is to be an uplift in the picture business should not the trade journals lead the way?

Know Your Power

By Epes W. Sargent

RECENTLY a state election was held in Oregon, and Ralph Ruffner, of Portland, points out that every candidate who used screen advertising to further his nomination won out at the primaries, and adds: "If only the motion picture organizations realized their strength!" They should, but they do not. It is true that the entire country realized what a powerful factor for good the picture screens have been in Liberty Loan and other patriotic drives, but exhibitors do not seem to realize that the screen will work just as hard for the houses themselves and for the organizations of exhibitors.

And this in spite of the fact that the anti-censorship slides prepared by the Moving Picture World have killed proposed censorships in many localities. Could the body of motion picture exhibitors working as a unit direct this screen publicity against freak legislation, Sunday closing, censorship and kindred evils, the education of the community would soon compel the abolition of the absurd laws, but there must be intelligent planning and concerted action. It is an unusual condition that the motion picture theaters do so much good for others and try to do themselves no good whatever.

The success of the various drives, the speeches of the Four-Minute Men and the showing of propaganda films has done as much good in the country as the efforts of the newspapers, and yet it is only in isolated instances that it seems to have occurred to the exhibitor to use his screen power for his own defense and protection. The screen today is almost as powerful as the press—or would be were concerted use made of it. Why not take advantage of this power? It will be found worth while?

The Funniest Thing on Earth

By Louis Reeves Harrison

BORN in the working class, all the early part of his life spent in subterranean environment, the grim foundation stones of society encompassing him on every side, one of the keenest observers of our time has this to say of the people he met before he climbed out of the darkness of poverty: "Among the strong and alert-brained, withal horny-handed members of the working class, I found keen-flashing intellects, warm faith in the human, glowing idealism, sweetness of unselfishness, and all the splendid stinging things of the spirit.

"Here life was clean, noble and alive."

From our martyred President Lincoln, quite as well as from Jack London; from many others qualified to speak of men and women who do not live on the parlor floor, we have heard that among those who live by hard labor are to be found nobleness of purpose and heroism of effort, sweet charities and beautiful ideals. That many of those who pay 5 or 10 cents to visit the picture shows are in a state of long-suffering poverty does not mean that their eyes are not drawn to the light, more sternly fixed on the Holy Grail of Common Enlightenment than is commonly understood and appreciated.

Faith in high ideals is strongest among common people.

Maeterlinck knows this, as he has announced in "The Measure of the Hours." The great poet, dramatist and philosopher advocates telling the "highest possible truth" through the drama, and so all playwrights, from Shakespeare down to the most material of our modern ineffectuals, gradually emerge from self-interest to where they begin to see conscience and spirit working, seething and fuming in lower orders of humanity, that common people are not fundamentally brutal and stupid, that the worst thing about poverty is the limitation of opportunity, that there is spirit and soul among the people, confused aspiration at times, yet always an aiming at freedom and greater knowledge. We on the parlor floor are just beginning to learn that our aims are beyond the struggle for a living.

The European War is begetting an American Social Revolution.

The dramatist of vision notes this change and may guide his course according to the brightest lights of our times in order to be in the swim of audience receptivity, but he will run up against some noisy vacuum-pans in the motion picture business, those whose small souls are so warped by unexpected good fortune, often carelessly scattered, that they give out a lot of sound with a very limited amount of sense. It is Vacuum Pan who advises the exhibitor to boost the high-salaried performer, thus increasing the cost of the product, and pay no attention to quality, the very essence of successful showmanship.

Rothapel blazed the way to success by boosting his own theaters.

Vaccum Pan is simply echoing the old Barnum idea, now only a calliope memory of the days of Tom Sawyer. "Fooling the people" is a piece of holdover vanity which even circus managers have discarded. The inanities of the cabaret show lure only the suddenly rich. The blatant fathead who announces that any great message sent broadcast through moving pictures is "over the people's heads" may not be a moral pervert or a mental slacker, but he links noisy wealth with intelligence and the quiet of modest labor with dense ignorance.

He is the funniest thing on earth.

The great common sense of American people, quite as well as the nobleness of heart now being manifested, is based on an intelligence which has been fostered through compulsory and ever-widening education. The tremendous movement now in progress, bringing all classes of young men into line, shoulder to shoulder, means better recognition of the fact that good work honorably done, no matter how humble, goes beyond maintenance of self and family, is nobly fraternal in character and of national benefit. Just as the common soul is behind the whole idea of liberty, so those common people, so faultily judged, are to be given the right to live, to love, to enjoy the God-given fruits of the earth.

Commercial Kaiserism

By Edward Weitzel.

PRESIDENT WILSON led the Red Cross parade down Fifth avenue the other day. As he passed the windows of the Moving Picture World all were struck by the glow of health in his face and the air of confidence that animated his step. Behind him came the long ranks of marching women, their garb proclaiming the seriousness of their mission, but the President's ready smile and evident faith in the triumph of the Allies was reflected in the bearing of everyone in line.

A small Red Cross flag carried by the President streamed out bravely—even jauntily. And the cheering masses of men and women packed along the line of march showed the same splendid courage, the same buoyant faith.

Here is the spirit that wins battles:

The leader of a great nation at war marches in the ranks with the forces of mercy and self-sacrifice and avows by his demeanor that the soul of a free people is not to be daunted, no matter how great the task before it. Our men go into battle with a smile on their faces, a jest on their lips—and a prayer in their hearts. The President of the United States follows the example of our soldiers, as he busies himself with the duty of the hour, whether it be to address the nation by speech or pen or to inspire us by tramping on foot in honor of the glorious Red Cross.

The reason for his smiling assurance is easily understood. It is to be found in his own words.

President Wilson opened the Red Cross drive in New York at the Metropolitan Opera House. When he was introduced by Cleveland H. Dodge as "the spokesman of all the great spirtual forces of the world" his smile was still with him. Among the things he said was the following:

> Have you formed a picture in your imagination of what this war is doing for us and for the world? In my own mind I am convinced that not a hundred years of peace could have knitted this nation together as this single year of war has knitted it together; and better than that, if possible, it is knitting the world together.
> Look at the picture! In the center of the scene four nations engaged against the world, and at every point of vantage, showing that they are seeking self-aggrandizement; and against them twenty-three representing the great part of the population of the world drawn together into a new sense of community of interest, a new sense of community of purpose, a new sense of unity of life.

Here is the explanation of President Wilson's steady outlook on the future. "A new sense of community of interest, a new sense of unity of life." That is why he is unafraid, why he can still find it in his heart to smile.

The lesson taught mankind by this terrible war will be worth all it costs in human suffering and worldly wealth. Hereafter, no nation will dare attempt the subjugation of another nation; the conscience of an awakened world will not permit it.

World Domination and Kaiserism will have been given their beathblow.

And Commercial Kaiserism will come under the same influence.

Trusts of every description will be affected by this same newly awakened conscience. The financier, the professional man, the skilled and the unskilled laborer have already found a new community of interest and a new respect for one another.

Public opinion will demand that commercial success be built on a foundation of absolute merit; not protected by combines and trusts. Every phase of the industrial world will come under the influence of this new unity of life:

Even moving picture trade journals.

No proprietor of a trade paper will then be brash enough to pen an editorial suggesting that all makers of films confine their advertising to one publication—and pointing to himself, claim coyly, "Tag, I'm it!"

Our South American Neighbors

By Robert C. McElravy.

THE New York Evening Sun of May 20 carried a lengthy news dispatch, dated from Rio de Janeiro, which will bring joy to all good Americans and more especially to those associated with the moving picture industry.

The dispatch is so significant that we wish we could quote it in full, but lack of space forbids. Suffice it to say that the hard and consistent labor of American film producers in the South American field has brought splendid results. Where our South American neighbors were once in almost complete ignorance of conditions in the United States, there is now an understanding that is bound to prove most beneficial to all concerned. And, to quote from the dispatch, "The change was brought about by an entirely unexpected agent—the American motion picture film."

It goes on to elaborate. Where Pan-American conventions, at which representatives of more than twenty western continent republics banqueted and made speeches, failed to unite business relations, the "man who is putting it over is the impresario of the celluloid stage." In other words, American films have brought before the people of Brazil actual scenes from American life and character and done what diplomacy alone did not do. It has stimulated such an interest in our affairs that the newspapers of Brazil are beginning to carry columns of news about what is going on here. This rarely happened in the old days.

American films are said to be immensely popular in Brazil, which before the war consumed almost entirely the European supply. Our films were not at first seriously considered, but they have made good in every sense of the word. The Brazilian likes the swift action of the American product, and it is said that "William S. Hart, Dustin Farnum, George Walsh, Charlie Chaplin and all the other stars in the American constellation are twinkling to popular approval down under the Southern Cross."

This closer union of the two Americas is one of the gratifying things that are coming out of the great war cloud whose silver lining has been so long hidden. It is to be hoped that the western hemisphere will never be subjected to the hatreds and misunderstandings that have wrought such destruction in the eastern. Men of vision in all the countries concerned should work toward harmony both now and in the future. The diversity of products should make trade relations most pleasant and mutually profitable, and the twin Americas should guard with jealous friendship their own and each other's rights.

As the dispatch alluded to above asserts, the Brazilian "formerly had to combat the notion that the American's soul was stamped with his dollar sign, and that his instincts were imperialistic." It is easy to see how such an idea might have become fixed in the minds of other peoples, but we think the dollar-chasing instinct of our business men was after all an acquired instinct and one that he was not entirely proud of. Certainly, now that duty calls, he is abandoning dollar-chasing with amazing speed. Men of wealth are giving up their time and many of them are throwing fortunes into the scales in the effort to bring victory to the cause of justice. This tremendous war is proving how genuine at bottom our democracy is. Dollar-chasing is a sporting proposition in times when few calls were made upon the better side of men's natures; it seemed no doubt to many that the building up of a great fortune was one of the few big things worth doing. But when Belgium lay bleeding and France was stricken, and the small peoples of the world were set upon by the despot, then the American business man began showing his true colors. He is proving himself a friend worth having!

It is pleasing to know that moving pictures are aiding in the establishment of better understandings between the two Americas. And if our films are appreciated in Brazil and the other Southern American countries the peoples there should understand that the medium of the screen is at the same time giving us a better comprehension of life below the equator. We have seen and appreciated the wonders of the great South American cities, with their splendid architecture and magnificent surroundings. We know a great deal more of the mineral and agricultural wealth of these lands.

May the growing respect of the two continents, which moving pictures have done so much to strengthen, never grow less!

No Amalgamation, Says Rembusch

Secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association Declares That Mr. Ochs Cannot Be Trusted.

FRANK REMBUSCH, secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, in replying to a letter from Secretary Elliott of the N. A. M. P. I. regarding a proposition to effect an amalgamation of the two exhibitors' associations, makes it plain that so long as Mr. Ochs and the men who favor his methods shall continue at the head of the National League and are in control of that organization amalgamation is impossible. Mr. Rembusch gives in detail the reasons why the American Exhibitors' Association was formed, and says that this action was compelled as a matter of principle. His letter to Secretary Elliott follows:

May 15, 1918.

National Association of Motion Picture Industry, Times Bldg., New York City.

Mr. Elliott, Secretary.

Re-National Convention and Amalgamation.

Dear Mr. Elliott:

Your letter of April 27th received. Same was referred to the Directors of the American Exhibitors' Association, who have instructed me to answer as follows:

The A. E. A. is anxious to co-operate with any and all activities for winning the war and for the best good of the industry. This has been better evidenced by our work within the last year than any words on the subject.

There was some talk of holding both conventions of the two national exhibitors' organizations at Boston, but the A. E. A. has never received a communication or proposition of any character unless your letter is such, and this was very indefinite and unofficial, therefore we have arranged to hold our convention at Chicago in August, as we first planned.

We agree with you on both of your statements that expositions are expensive on one hand, but at the same time provide the financial wherewith to carry on the work of organizations, so we feel sure that you also concede us the right to hold meetings that help carry on our work, and if we han joined in the Boston affair would expect to realize a just proportion of the profits. HOWEVER, THERE ARE SOME THINGS THAT WE WOULD BE ASSURED OF BEFORE WE COULD TAKE OUR CONVENTION TO BOSTON.

The idea of organization of exhibitors is to protect ourselves, not only from evils without, BUT FROM EVILS WITHIN THE INDUSTRY. The men who left the league and formed the American at Chicago last summer were compelled to do so on principle. We were opposed to Mr. Ochs because he used the National Organization to further his personal affairs. Instead of building up the League he used it to start a trade journal. (No doubt to force producers to take his space.)

To continue this office last July, Mr. Ochs used the lowest kind of methods. Let us refer to a few: He discarded all the precedents and traditions of the League. He allowed no one to enter the Convention hall at the Coliseum without a badge and it has always been the rule to welcome all exhibitors to our national convention, whether they were members or not. He required all delegates to receive their credentials at the Hotel Morrison and provided badges for his pledged delegates and those that were doubtful, and refused badges to many who were opposed to him, but collected the per capita tax from all, which is not taxation with representation, an American principle worthy of defense at all times. He stationed police at the Coliseum door to enforce his methods. He refused the floor to many of our best workers. He took the appointmet of committees out of the delegates' hands. He finally electrified his hearers after we had left the convention (proving the justification of our action) by his famous speech of acceptance and threat, "I'll get them babies," etc., etc. These are all facts well known and, WE WOULD BE TAKING QUITE A CHANCE IF WE PLACED OURSELVES AGAIN IN A POSITION OF TRUST WITH MR. OCHS.

Now with reference to amalgamation, let me say this: The committee who were interested in this have done nothing for obvious reasons. We cannot amalgamate as long as the organization is in the hands of Mr. Ochs. Our organization is only a few months old, but is growing very rapidly. We have in our membership those who first work to protect our industry. We are without any entangling alliances, and desire to remain so. We have been to a great expense in organizing. Our work against the evils from without the industry on the censorship question and on constructive measures such as Sunday opening speak for themselves. WE HAVE NOTHING TO GAIN BY JOINING MR. OCHS AND TAKE A CHANCE OF LOSING MUCH.

We are opposed to those who use office for their own purposes, and while on the subject, let me say, our general manager, Mr. Pettyjohn, has again presented the A. E. A. his resignation, insisting that it be accepted because he has taken a position in another institution of the industry. In accepting same we do insist that he remain with us as a general counsel, because of his splendid work. So we at least try to be true to our principles.

We believe that it is better that there be two national exhibitors' organizations. Exhibitors comprise by far the largest portion of the industry, and it is not possible, not practical, and experience has shown that it is not good policy to have one man in control of exhibitors' activities.

In deference to your date at Boston in July, and showing our good will, we have postponed our meeting until the week of August 20th, one month later.

There is no dissension among exhibitors. Many members of the League and the Association are working in perfect harmony on matters more closely associated than the national organizations have ever presented to exhibitors. Many in both organizations welcome the time when all exhibitors' organizations will be free from side issues. It must go through the melting pot.

Under the circumstances, the American Exhibitors' Association will continue their efforts towards the highest possible good for exhibitors and the entire industry, and will also give our efforts to keep it worthy of the respect of all.

We invite the entire industry to participate in our gathering and can assure all that come a hearty welcome, a most interesting, profitable and enjoyable week, and hope to see everybody in Chicago August 20th.

Yours truly,

AMERICAN EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION,
Frank Rembusch, National Secretary.

Amusements Proved to be War Essential

Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team is Actually First, but Gets Credited Third in Great Red Cross Drive

WILLIAM FOX took command of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team No. 7 in the Division of Greater New York for the expressed purpose of proving to the authorities at Washington that the industries represented in his section were essential in these times of war. Although the actual figures have not been given out down to the decimal, here is the final showing:

Mrs. Georger Baker, Jr., headed the team list for Greater New York. The Rockefeller team was second, as a matter of record, and Team No. 7 was third. These three teams were all over a million and under a million and a half. To her own team Mrs. Baker contributed her personal check for a round million. There was a Rockefeller check for $800,000 in the second team's total—and $5,000 was the largest single subscription to the William Fox total of $1,030,000.

It is said that Mr. Fox insisted, personally, that the Rockefeller name be retained in the more prominent place for the general good that would result during subsequent war drives. Gallantry must have been considered in giving Mrs. Baker first position—but as a matter of fact Team No. 7 was far and away FIRST among the teams that combed Greater New York from sidewalk to the dome of its loftiest skyscraper.

Therefore, when William Fox, at the grand wind-up, reported third, "he said something." In form it was an affectedly modest report of more than a million raised for the Red Cross fund through the united efforts of the allied theatrical and motion picture people, but the hustling chairman could not repress the pride he felt in this achievement, which places the once-scorned "show people" in line with the leading financial interests of the nation.

Not only William Fox, but the whole theatrical profession, especially the motion picture people, have a right to throw out their chests and wear that pleased and satisfied smile that won't come off. For they have proved that as money-getters and money-givers they have no superiors when they have a cause that appeals to their humane sympathies like the Red Cross. This is the first time that they have all been united in one grand drive, and they proved the efficiency of "team work" in a manner that should be a lesson and an inspiration to all in the future. "United we drive—divided we are driven" might well be a showman's motto.

Almost impromptu in its inception the lucky Team No. 7 was especially fortunate in having as its captain a man of vast and varied affairs, constructive mentality, executive ability and enthusiasm unlimited. Nobody who knows the record of William Fox in the theatrical and motion picture business had any doubt of the outcome of this particular sector of the drive when he was appointed chairman.

But how many obstacles he had to overcome, how many conflicting interests to reconcile for the time being at least, and how many novel expedients he had to invent on the spur of the moment nobody but Mr. Fox knows—and he will not fight the battle over. Suffice that it was won—by a totally surprising and unexpected surplus, not only over the minimum, but over the most optimistic hopes.

The lesson to "show people" in general is that showmanship, backed by "team work," will always win; and the problem is how to apply this force steadily and systematically to the best interest of trade and business. All who appeal to the patronage of the amusement-loving public, whether for dimes or for dollars, are practically in the same boat, and must pull together in order to attain permanent prosperity and success.

Industrial Committee Heads All Team Scores

Chairman Elliott Reports Nearly $64,000, and the Returns Are Far from Completed.

THE biggest surprise in the drive for Red Cross funds conducted under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team was the big sum turned in by the industrial committee, of which Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was chairman.

The industrial committee was the last one to receive consideration by William Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan, who on the second day the headquarters were opened called Mr. Elliott into conference with a notice that he had been appointed to organize the industrial campaign with a view to securing subscriptions from the employes of the theatrical profession, motion picture industry, vaudeville artists, the music publishers, employes of the motion picture theaters, film exchanges, wigmakers and costumers and the various motion picture circuits in Greater New York.

The task of securing pledges of employes of theatrical, motion picture and allied interests was admitted by everyone to be a big one. Mr. Fox was frank in his expressions in regard to the selection of the committee with Mr. Elliott at the head to organize the employes in a quick and effective manner so that the industrial committee could roll up a big total for the Red Cross Second War Fund.

Within a period of four days Chairman Elliott had the various committees and divisions organized and the results are shown by the fact that $80,023.69 was raised by this committee, coming only from employes of the professions, trade, and industries listed by the industrial committee.

The motion picture employes lead the list with a total of $63,938.69. The next largest amount of pledges was received from the National Vaudeville Artists, which was closely followed by the film exchanges of Greater New York. Next in line came the pledges of the music publishers and the manufacturers of musical instruments and the employes of the Marcus Loew's theaters followed by the wigmakers and costumers, and the employes of the theaters controlled by Sam S. & Lee Shubert, Inc. The employes of the Metropolitan Opera House made a splendid showing, as did the employes of the William Fox Circuit of vaudeville and motion picture theaters and Cinema Camera Club.

The industrial committee of the Theatrical and Motion Picture Team established a wonderful record in comparison to the results obtained by the committees of other trades and industries, including the electrical, steel, automobile, silk, linen, cloak and suit, and practically every important trade of business in the city. The total amount secured by the industrial committee of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team was treble the highest amount reported by any other industrial committee, notwithstanding the fact that in other trades and industries the number of employes are many times greater than the number in the theatrical, motion picture and allied trades.

The report of the industrial committee reflects credit upon the employes who so promptly and generously contributed to this worthy cause and each and every one should be proud of the fact that the committee with which they filed their pledges or contributions raised one-tenth of the total amount reported by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team to the American Red Cross.

The employes of the following film exchanges, under the leadership of Emanuel Goldstein of the Universal, contributed 100 per cent. to the Red Cross Drive:

Fox Film, General Home Office, Universal Film, Famous Players, Pathe, General Film, Mutual Film, World Film, George Kleine System, Metro, Select, Vitagraph, Goldwyn, Pioneer, Ivan & Merit, Foursquare, Liberty, W. H. Productions, First National, Modern Feature Photoplays, Hoy Reporting Agency and Exclusive Features.

Chairman Elliott acknowledges the response which was given to his request for cooperation in the organization of the various divisions and appreciates the response given by the thousands of employes to the appeal for aid for the great Red Cross Organization.

Associated with Chairman Elliott were the following: Sydney S. Cohen, vice chairman, President Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State; Henry Chesterfield, director of division, National Vaudeville Artists; George H. Atkinson, director of division, Klaw & Erlanger; J. W. Jacobs, director of division, Sam S. & Lee Shubert, Inc.; Nicholas M. Schenck, director of division, Marcus Loew's theaters; Charles S. Levin, director of division, William Fox Circuit; E. F. Albee and A. Paul Keith, director of division, B. F. Keith's Circuit; J. Witmark, director of division, musical publishers and musical instrument manufacturers; Edward Ziegler, administration secretary, director of division, Metropolitan Opera House; A. C. Plucker, director of division, wigmakers and costumers; Emanuel Goldstein, director of division, film exchanges.

The following individuals, companies and corporations contributed to the success of the industrial campaign:

Fox Film Corporation, Famous Players, Universal, Greater Vitagraph, Inter-Ocean Film and Paul Cromelin interests, Goldwyn, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Metro, Precision Machine Company, International Film Service Company, Inc., and Campbell Studios, reporting through Hearst papers; Eclipse Film Laboratories, Inc.; Pathe Exchange, Epoch Producing Company, United Theater Equipment Corporation, Moving Picture World, General Enterprises, Inc., Motion Picture News, Wyanoak Publishing Company, Lincoln & Parker Film Company, Exhibitors' Trade Review, H. C. Miner Lithograph, Art Laboratory, Piedmont Pictures, Cinema Camera Club, Western Printing Company, Crystal Film, Alpha Lithographing, Exhibitors' Herald, Novelty Slide, Hodkinson Corporation, Dramatic Mirror, Kalem Company, J. Frank Brockliss, Harry Rapf, Robert Warwick Film Company, Nicholas Power Company, National Binding Machinery Company, Evans Film Company, Max Glucksman, Palisade Film Laboratory, Fox Circuit Motion Picture Theaters, World Film, National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, office staff; M. Witmark & Sons, Leo Feist Publishing Company, Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Waterson, Berlin & Snyder, Robert Teiler's Sons & Dorner, J. W. Stern & Co., McCarty Fisher Music Company, Broadway Music Corporation, Emerson Phonograph Company, Pathe Freres Phonograph Company, Ernie Ball.

Universal Registers Hundred Per Cent.

As an aftermath of the Red Cross drive a checkup shows that every employe of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, at the main office, 1600 Broadway, at the Fort Lee Studio and at Universal City contributed to the fund. The contributions considered as making the hundred per cent. subscriptions consisted of pledges which will be deducted from salaries beginning with June 1. Besides these pledges nearly every employe contributed continually to the street collectors. Returns have not been received as yet from the branches.

Big Score for Eighty-first Street Theater.

The Eighty-first street theater, New York, collected $17,905 for the Second Red Cross War Fund. This is said to be one of the largest amounts collected in a vaudeville or picture house. All hands worked very hard and were glad to give up a great deal of time to the drive.

Brandt Gives Fox Full Credit.

As general in charge of Brooklyn during the recent Red Cross drive, under the appointment of William Fox, may I not through your columns express my admiration for the leadership of that gentleman and to add my opinion that the credit for the success of the drive is entirely due to him.

Mr. Fox was the inspiration of every man on the team. By his example of "twenty-four hours a day" working, his aggressiveness, determination and ability, he was a veritable human dynamo, radiating energy into every person with whom he came in contact.

What Mr. Fox has accomplished in elevating the motion picture industry in the minds of many who previously were more or less unacquainted with the men in it, time alone will show. For this, entirely apart from the wonderful good he has done for our boys overseas, he is entitled to the hearty, unanimous thanks of the industry.

WILLIAM BRANDT.

Good Work for Bronx Record.

The Bronx section of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, with John J. Wittman, president of the Cinema Exhibitors of Bronx County, as general, did wonderful work in the Red Cross drive, and the thousands of dollars collected by the theaters of Bronx County attest to the hard and consistent work of General Wittman and his colonels and captains, and again shows what wonderful and essential work can be accomplished for the Government through the medium of the motion picture theaters.

The work of General Wittman and his staff show how results can be accomplished by organization and sincerity of purpose.

HENRY COLE.

Elsie Ferguson's Patriotism.

Elsie Ferguson, the Artcraft star, on May 25 posed as a Red Cross nurse on the Public Library steps, Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, for James Montgomery Flagg, the famous artist. Mr. Flagg sketched a likeness of the famous actress as the crowd watched, and when the portrait was finished Miss Ferguson auctioned it off. A final bid of $3,000 took the sketch, whereupon the money was turned over to the Red Cross.

At the Metropolitan on Monday evening, May 17, Miss Ferguson sold programs for the Red Cross performance, and the following evening she did the same at the Century theater. Every invitation for patriotic work received by the Artcraft star is promptly acepted, and her activities in behalf of the Liberty Loan, Thrift Stamp and Red Cross drives have brought substantial results.

General Film Produces Liberally.

General Film's part in the American Red Cross Second War Fund drive resulted in contributions totaling $1,500 from the New York headquarters office and New York exchange. Its donations were placed to the credit of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team through the F. I. L. M. Club, Branch Manager J. A. Hammell, in charge of General's collections, reporting to that branch of the team.

Camera Clubmen Guarantee $2,466.

The Cinema Camera Club, co-operating with the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, reports a total subscription of $2,466 to the Second American Red Cross Fund.

Twenty-three Film Clubbers Register.

E. H. Goldstein, chairman of the F. I. L. M. Club Collection Committee for the Red Cross, reports that every exchange employe has contributed his mite toward this work and that he can report 100 per cent.

Goldwyn Kicks in 100 Per Cent.

With total contributions running high into thousands of dollars, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is in the van of motion picture companies 100 per cent. subscribed to the Second War Fund of the American Red Cross. Everyone in the organization, from Samuel Goldfish, the president, to Tommy Brennan, the kewpie office boy who sits at the outer gate of the home office, has pledged himself or herself to contribute a stated sum each month to this greatest of war charities.

Mr. Goldfish's large personal subscription, for which a check already has been sent to William Fox, chairman of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, heads the list, and Tommy's fifty cents a month brings up a rear by no means to be despised. The average pledge is $2 a month, or approximately $25 for the year in which the total payment must be made.

Cohen Advances Fox as "Favorite Son"

President New York State League Presents Charity Drive Leader as Candidate at Boston Convention.

To the Editor of the Moving Picture World:

The wonderful results obtained by the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, directed by William Fox in the American Red Cross Drive Second War Fund is the reason for my writing to you.

In a period of about ten days Mr. Fox gathered about himself a staff of a few men and women whom he quickly enthused and a most remarkable organization was developed through his dynamic power and ability. My own personal services were infinitesimal and virtually nil.

A great amount of good work was done by Samuel Berman, secretary of the Exhibitors' League of the State of New York; John Manheimer, who was the general of the Manhattan Division; William Brandt, general of the Brooklyn Division; John J. Wittman, general of the Bronx Division; Samuel Sheer, general of the Queens County Division, and Charles Moses and Samuel Peyser, colonels of the Richmond County Division.

These generals in turn had the help and assistance of a great number of exhibitors, who were made colonels of zones in different parts of the greater city, these men enlisting the services of exhibitors operating theaters in their particular zones, who were made captains.

My particular reason for writing this letter is to emphasize as strongly as I can that the tremendous organizing ability of William Fox, in conjunction with his efficient and aggressive way of doing things, ought to be made known to the entire motion picture industry of the United States.

I am firmly of the opinion that if the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were to have William Fox as its president the same results he obtained in Greater New York would be duplicated throughout the entire country, and the motion picture industry would be given the full credit for what it is doing.

Having the welfare of our industry at heart I hereby present for the consideration of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry the name of William Fox as the man whom we need in these very trying moments to co-ordinate, organize and harmonize all branches of the industry and to extend the good work that has thus far been done by William A. Brady, the president of the National Association at this time.

SYDNEY S. COHEN,
President New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

MYRON SELZNICK IS PROMOTED.

Myron Selznick is now general manager of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation. The young man, who is the son of President Lewis J. Selznick of Select, has been acting as manager of the Norma Talmadge studio in East Forty-eighth street for the past two months.

Industry in West to Back the Government

At Big Meeting in Los Angeles Motion Picture War Relief Association Is Formed and $35,000 Subscribed

ON Sunday afternoon, May 26, a mass meeting of the entire motion picture industry of Los Angeles was held at Clune's Auditorium. It was one of the most enthusiastic and patriotic rallies ever held in Southern California and it is estimated that over two thousand persons, all connected with the film industry, were present. The object of the meeting was to organize a Motion Picture Relief Association, to concentrate the efforts of the industry in one central organization. The movement had been launched by the Motion Picture Directors' Association and the following criculars were sent out to members of the film industry, outlining the object of the association:

"In spite of the fact that the motion picture people have made greater individual efforts and secured greater results in war relief work than any other body of people in the country, we have dissipated our strength through channels not identified with our profession and thus lost our identity.

"No individual should seek credit in this critical time, but being so powerful a body, the industry must be represented in war relief work or be open to the suspicion that its members may be shirking their duty.

"We have all been buying Liberty Bonds and giving our money, old magazines and newspapers and books and clothes and kid gloves and tinfoil to different organizations, which was the right thing to do, but it was not proving to the world that our profession was an active war relief unit.

"If we had bought all our Liberty Bonds as a motion picture industry, we would have made a showing to startle the world. If we had pooled all our other resources of entertainment, personal appearances before the public and donations of anything and everything, distributing all articles and contributions from a motion picture headquarters, we would have quashed forever any attempt to prove us undesirable citizens.

"Let us give still more, but let us correct our method. Let us give the motion picture industry the good name it deserves and have it respected."

Body to Be Clearing House for War Activities.

The organization, which is to be the clearing house for all war activity by the motion picture industry, will have its national headquarters in Los Angeles and its principal aim will be to strengthen the arm of the Government at Washington and to back up and look after its brothers who are on the firing line.

The creed of the members of the organization, to which all must pledge themselves, will be loyalty to this country and to their profession. Material plans of the organization call for the construction of two hospitals at once, one in New York and one in Los Angeles, to be known as the Motion Picture Hospital. The hospitals will be more than hospitals, according to the plans of the promoters—they will be convalescent homes as well.

Each institution will cost approximately $185,000 and on completion they will be turned over to the Government for the period of the war as homes for convalescent soldiers. At the end of the war they again will be taken over by the organization and conducted as permanent institutions to help the suffering, even though they be not members of the organization or of the profession.

All Directors and Players Present.

At the grand assembly practically every motion picture star and director in Southern California was present. Music was furnished by the Submarine Base Band of the harbor, by the presentation of "Liberty Bell" by Master Howard Enstedt and selections by other singers, and as to entertainment there was sparkle and vim in every line spoken by every star on the program.

Those elected as officers of the organization were: President, D. W. Griffith; vice presidents, Cecil B. De Mille, Lois Weber, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart; treasurer, Mack Sennett; secretary, S. E. V. Taylor; associate members of the board of directors, Jesse Lasky, Marguerite Clark, Maurice Tourneur, J. Searle Dawley, S. Rothapfel, Lee Ochs, J. Gordon Edwards, Henry McRae, Frank E. Woods, G. W. Bitzer, W. F. Alder and William D. Taylor.

Charlie Chaplin called the meeting to order and gave a humorous little speech, which was received with applause. He was followed by William D. Taylor, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, who gave a brief outline of the purpose of the meeting and the formation of a war relief association to bring under one head the various relief organizations.

In accepting the national chairmanship, Mr. Griffith sounded the keynote of the meeting:

"It is a childish thing to speak of patriotism to you or to the American people; that is a thing for the heart. But our work is cut out for us. We are to stand by our brothers, to pick them up, to help them when they fall; that is what brothers are for.

"We must stand behind those men, who are facing death and eternity every minute of the day and night for our sake, as comrades and with everything we have—hands, hearts, minds, bodies and money. Also we are not to chide or criticize those on whom the huge responsibility for our war program falls, for every person—we know from our own human frailties—slips. Instead, we must work for the cause, and the cause means the Government. There are just two flags in our country today—the American flag and the service flag."

Challenging the women of other professions to a test of service, Lois Weber told of the war work which could be undertaken by the women of the screen. She urged them to work every minute of their available time and to become the "mother of a boy over there."

De Mille Tells Why Trade Should Organize.

Cecil B. De Mille gave four reasons why the motion picture trade should organize. He said:

"The motion picture is the most powerful propaganda and sends a message through its camera which can't be changed by any crafty diplomat. We have got to help bring the war to a speedy conclusion. If for nothing else but for our own protection we should stand united behind this movement and show the rest of the world what the motion picture industry can do. It is the aim of the organization to build a lasting monument, and one of its chief objects is the erection of a war hospital of one thousand beds to be kept and donated by the motion picture industry to the United States. This hospital will cost $185,000 and will be built in Los Angeles."

Mr. De Mille asked the meeting whether it wanted such a hospital, and if they would give their money and work for this worthy cause. The audience stood up like one man and shouted "yes," and Mr. De Mille said, "Well, we will build it."

Mary Pickford spoke of the wonderful work done by the Stage Women's War Relief and said it now was up to the motion picture men and women to get together and form an efficient organization.

The real fun began when Charlie Murray began to auction off the membership cards. There probably was never before such bidding for autographed cards and may never be again.

The first membership card, autographed by Miss Pickford, was sold to Dustin Farnum for $2,500.

The second card, autographed by D. W. Griffith, went to Miss Pickford for $2,500.

The third card, autographed by Charlie Chaplin, was purchased by Chaplin himself for $2,600.

The fourth, signed by Clara Kimball Young, went to Mack Sennett for $2,400.

The fifth, autographed by Mae Murray, was bought by D. W. Griffith for $2,500, following which Miss Murray agreed to donate $1,500 on general principles.

Card No. 6, autographed by Cecil B. De Mille, was sold to Sessue Hayakawa for $2,000.

Card No. 7, autographed by Lois Weber, went to Phillips Smalley for $2,000.

Card No. 8, autographed by Mack Sennett, went to Henry McRae for $1,000.

Card No. 9, autographed by William S. Hart, sold to George Melford for $2,000.

No. 10, with Margaret Clark's autograph, sold to Douglas Fairbanks for $2,500, Mr. Griffith taking advantage of "Doug's" absence to make three successive bids in his behalf.

No. 11, autographed by Frank Keenan, was sold to Fannie Ward for $2,500.

Card No. 12, signed by Miss Ward, went to Frank Keenan for $2,000.

And if anyone thinks No. 13 an unlucky number, let him reflect on the fact that Card No. 13, autographed by Dustin Farnum, was sold to Harry Sherman for the highest sum of any card sold, $2,750.

The last card, to which Douglas Fairbanks will affix his signature, was purchased by Lois Weber for $2,000.

Fourteen Cards Yield $32,750 for Fund.

Thirty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars was realized on these first fourteen membership cards alone. This sum was in addition to some $2,000 worth of memberships at a dollar each, sold to members of the audience.

As a patriotic climax of the meeting was the presentation of a beautiful dramatic tableau. In a rich setting of velvet curtains allegorical personifications of the chief allied nations engaged in the war against Prussian autocracy were staged.

As the curtains raised, revealing some of the most noted of motion picture stars in the "living picture" poses, the submarine base band of sixty pieces, from the darkened orchestra pit, below, played the national anthem of the country represented. As a foreground for the scene were the hundred members of the Lasky studio home guard, under command of Captain De Mille, standing rigidly at attention. The countries portrayed in the tableau were: Liberty, Clara Kimball Young; America, Wallie Reid; England, Robert Leonard; France, Robert Harron; Italy, Warren Kerrigan; Serbia, Constance Talmadge; Japan, Sessue Hayakawa.

Telegrams of regret at inability to be present and pledges of support were read from the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, by W. A. Brady; Stage Women's War Relief, Douglas Fairbanks, Allan Dwan, Marguerite Clark, Jesse L. Lasky and a number of exhibitors and exchangement.

Crown of Texas Visiting New York

Film Man Looking for Ideas on Big Theaters and Also Buying for Australia.

P. C. CROWN, of Fort Worth and Houston, Texas, has been in New York for the past two weeks for the purpose of looking over the situation of the film market. As a matter of fact it was a twofold reason that brought Mr. Crown to the city. Firstly, he desires to study the conduct of the large motion picture theaters in the East, for his associates are about to break ground for the biggest motion picture theater west of the Mississippi, intending to raise a temple for the silent art which shall have a seating capacity of 3,500 in Houston. At this time Mr. Crown desires to express his appreciation of the courtesies that have been extended to him by presiding geniuses of New York's foremost theaters.

The other reason, which had a more immediate bearing, is his desire to procure for his Australasian interests pictures of exceptional value. Mr. Crown is the American representative of a chain of exchanges in Australasia. He has thus far purchased "One Law for Both" from Ivan, also the Rialto-De Luxe production, "The Unchastened Woman." Negotiations for Edison's "Unbeliever" and other productions of pretentious nature have been initiated.

Mr. Crown may be found while in New York in the office of Ivan Film Productions.

Perret at Work on First Production

Veteran Director Has Taken Over Pathe New York Studios —Distribution Arrangements Not Decided On.

LEONCE PERRET, creator and producer of "Lest We Forget," "The Million Dollar Dollies," and to be exact 417 motion pictures, announces the news of the organization of his independent producing concern. The New York Pathe studios have been taken over by Mr. Perret, and there the work on the first of the productions has been started.

Although it had been previously announced that the title of the first Perret production would be "America First," Mr. Perret decided to change it to one that will more appropriately fit history, which is based on fact and which will be an intense love story flavored with mystery, intrigue and war.

To Miss Dolores Cassinelli, of Essanay fame, falls the part of the girl heroine. E. K. Lincoln, who needs no introduction to the public, will prove a popular hero in support of Miss Cassinelli. The cast also includes Emmet C. King, Ethel Winthrop and several others of proven ability.

Just how the Perret productions will be distributed has not been determined. It is said, however, that negotiations are under way with some of the larger releasing companies. Adolphe Osso, business manager for Mr. Perret, is of the opinion that the production, when completed, will undoubtedly on its merits readily find a marketing medium.

Carl Laemmle Finishes Coast Trip

Following Visit to Universal City and Exchange's Executive Declares Business Is Good.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned to New York on May 26 after one of the most extensive business trips he has made in years. Mr. Laemmle is enthusiastic over the prospect of immediate prosperous conditions not only in the film industry, but in every other business essential to the winning of the world war.

Notwithstanding huge advance in the cost of living and in the price of essentials, Mr. Laemmle declares nearly everybody appears to be well supplied with money.

"I attribute the plentiful supply of money in the hands of the public," he explained, "to the fact that the great majority have learned to economize in living expenses by eliminating the non-essentials and cutting waste to a irreducible minimum. The people seem to believe, however, that the eliminating of expenditures for entertainment is not economy, but that such action is dangerous.

"In my talks with men who have made a study of the psychological question, they take the stand that the people are following the proper procedure. In spending money for entertainment during their hours of play they are safeguarding their hours of work. They are going to their labors in a happy frame of mind in which they can accomplish the most with the least effort."

Thousands of dollars heretofore spent for liquor now is finding its way into the box offices of theaters, according to Mr. Laemmle. He says this does not apply only in the states where the prohibition forces have won their fight, but is apparent in the cities where the saloons still flourish. His explanation and the explanations of others who have made a study of the question is that the saloon keepers in some localities have raised their prices to such an extent as to be charged with openly profiteering.

"Men, who, one year ago, spent two and three dollars daily over the bar have become teetotalers. Not because they wanted to cut off their supply of liquors, but because they refuse to pay prices they consider exorbitant. The result is that this money goes largely for other forms of entertainment."

During his trip Mr. Laemmle remained at Universal City for two weeks, during which time he thoroughly went into the production end of the company.

After leaving Universal City Mr. Laemmle visited several of the Universal Branch exchanges in the Northwest, beginning at Portland and swinging around home by way of Minneapolis and Chicago. In every city he met numerous of the prominent exhibitors and in every case he was greeted with the same news—business is good.

"It is extraordinary," said Mr. Laemmle, "to have so many exhibitors acknowledge that they are satisfied with business conditions. Usually in speaking with the executive of a producing and distributing company they are inclined to belittle their box office receipts. They seem to fear that an acknowledgment that they are pleased with business conditions will be followed by an increase in rental prices. I am sorry to see this, as every producer in the business is anxious to see favorable exhibiting conditions, and will not take undue advantage of the prosperity of an exhibitor."

Mr. Laemmle said that it was apparent that the exhibitors of the country had managed to adjust themselves to war conditions and they all expressed the hope that no changes would be made by the authorities at Washington to cause another readjustment which will mean another period of uncertainty.

TWO MORE GENERAL MANAGERS SHOULDER GUNS.

Two new General Film branch managers have said farewell to the film business within the last week to shoulder guns for Uncle Sam. F. Flarity, manager of the Albany exchange, and C. D. Hill, acting branch manager at Indianapolis, both received summons to join the selective army and are now in training.

This is the second time within a month that General Film's Indianapolis branch has lost its manager to the army.

De Hoff of Baltimore Strong for Newspapers

Manager of New Theater One of the Oriole City's Keenest Buyers of Advertising Space—Editors All Back the Screen

THERE is a young man in Baltimore who has an unrivaled flair for showmanship; who has increased the appeal and dignity of screen presentations in his city and lifted up the quality of managerial showmanship in the entire state of Maryland—and his name is Louis A. De Hoff.

Behind De Hoff is a wealthy Marylander, C. E. Whitehurst, owner of the New theater, Baltimore, which De Hoff manages, and to the understanding that exists between a successful business man of varied interests and his theatrical manager can be credited the basic success of the New theater.

This institution is the finest of the downtown, mid-city houses in Baltimore; a house of distinctive atmosphere and appearance; a clean-cut, well-groomed, modern house which is invested with a better atmosphere of showmanship than any of the two-dollar theatrical houses in Maryland's big industrial and social capital.

Mr. Whitehurst, having made a fortune in his other interests, is a man of determination and fixed purpose. He is not instinctively a showman himself, but if he turned his hand and his energies to showmanship he would be the success that most positivists are in business. But despite Mr. Whitehurst's convictions he believes in maintaining a smiting arm that works independently of himself; and, theatrically speaking, Louis A. De Hoff is the figure who makes Whitehurst lead Maryland showmen.

If you seek to dissect De Hoff so that you may discover just why and where and how he is strong as a motion picture showman, one of your earliest conclusions will be that he knows not merely the value of strong exploitation and salesmanship via the newspapers, but that he knows how to attain this personally without trusting to others. Consequently there is no "leakage" between the time when De Hoff has an idea and the time when that idea is translated into action. He does not have to tell someone else to carry out his ideas and plans. He executes them himself.

In other words, De Hoff is one of the newer type of managerial personalities that are beginning to dot the motion picture map of America. Without having had newspaper training, De Hoff is by instinct of the reportorial trend of mind. He knows news values, he knows "angle"; every show he plays in Whitehurst's New theater fills him with dozens of ideas. He refuses to be hampered by the lame-duck support that so many motion picture companies provide managers who show their productions. If a company's exploitation of its own wares is bad or below grade De Hoff throws everything in the discard and manufactures his own exploitation and publicity. Of course, there will be critics quick to say that no manager should have to do this, but if there were none who did such things there would be no outstanding managerial personalities—no men like McCormick in Indianapolis, or Franklin in Buffalo or like Sheehan in San Francisco as the part owner of the successful Rialto.

De Hoff's finest capacities are shown at those moments when he has to put a derisive finger to his nose aimed in the direction of motion picture incompetents who fail to give him just the things he needs for his exploitation of pictures. From the day that Goldwyn Pictures had their first release in the United States De Hoff and his proprietor, Mr. Whitehurst, have taken a warm and close interest in the presentation of the Goldwyn productions at the New theater. They have handled these pictures as if they owned them; as if their financial welfare was linked with their manufacture. When you find men doing that, when exhibitor, manager and producer work in such alliance, you have attained the ideal that so many seek without success.

Importance of Advertising in Daily Newspapers.

Baltimore's daily newspapers are an important factor in motion picture showmanship—which is a trite statement, for newspapers everywhere are just as important to an exhibitor. The trouble is there are thousands of hopeless persons who have not discovered this—plodders in pictures who could add 25 to 40 per cent. to their annual gross revenues by knowing how to use the newspapers.

Baltimore in a motion picture advertising sense is not a "big space" city, not as compared with Toledo, Cleveland or some of the coast cities. Nor is De Hoff for the New theater a user of big spreads in advertising. Baltimore, to date, is a compact advertiser that gets values out of its copy and gets greater values than the copy itself is responsible for because of the alert editorial co-operation of the Baltimore dailies with these amusement advertisers.

For four or five years, perhaps longer, the Baltimore American has devoted two or even three pages to motion picture news and pictorial layouts and advertising on Sunday. Credit for this attitude by the oldest of the Baltimore dailies is perhaps due to J. G. Nelson, an influential editor with broad vision who has always seen the value of the screen and the circulation that could be reached by a newspaper with intelligent screen news and feautres. The evening edition of the American, the Baltimore Star, gives similar co-operation without giving up so much space.

On Frank A. Munsey's Baltimore News, Frank D. Webb, the aggressive advertising manager, has undoubtedly been one of the factors to bind that newspaper so closely to the city's followers of the screen, and here again the exhibitors receive intelligent editorial and news co-operation.

The Baltimore Sun and the Evening Sun both give a large amount of news space to pictures, thus rounding out the roster of the city's newspapers. This is one of the few cities in America where motion pictures have the unanimous and wholehearted support of every daily newspaper in the community. In other cities there are laggards—papers that have shown no appreciation of the screen. Baltimore's five dailies stand without exception as friends of the screen and the exhibitor. This is understandable, because it is not difficult for the newspapers to establish friendly points of daily contact in a city where there are at least a dozen alert advertisers who know and believe in newspaper values. And among these twelve or more men Louis De Hoff easily ranks at the top. His rivals or competitors will be first to admit this.

Toronto's Allen Starting Week on Saturdays

Dominion Theater Institutes Change in Exhibiting Plans and Raises Prices at Same Time.

CONSIDERABLE interest has been aroused in Toronto moving picture circles over the decision of the Allen theater, a large downtown house, to adopt the policy of making its weekly change in programs on Saturdays instead of Mondays. The change was made on Saturday, May 25, when the new attraction was Mary Pickford's "M'Liss." The Allen has also decided upon a new schedule of admission prices which means an increase in the evening. The general admission for matinees is 15 cents. For the evening, however, the charge for the lower portion of the house is 35 cents and for the upper seats 25 cents. The boxes and loges will be 50 cents. Only the latter are reserved.

The Allen theater has distributed thousands of tiny service booklets which emphasize the manner in which the management is catering to patrons. The word "service" is mentioned in almost every sentence in the booklet. It is mentioned that the rule of the house is that "Each patron must be pleased at any cost." Announcement is made that the management has decided to award an extra month's pay each year to all employes with a perfect service record. This has been done to encourage zeal among the attendants in looking after patrons. Attention is also brought to various facilities, including check room, rest rooms, lost and found department, seat reservations, and information bureau. The booklet is entitled "Putting the Serve in Service." The booklet is small, measuring only 2¼ inches by 3⅛ inches when folded. An entirely new service booklet is to be distributed shortly, and this will be followed by others. Each of the series contains a list of coming attractions.

The management of the Allen has discovered a method of obtaining the patronage of the city's transient population. Each day a list of the new guests at each of the leading hotels is secured and invitations to attend the theater are addressed to each in care of the hotel. This plan advertises the theater extensively, because the visitors frequently mention the Allen theater to those with whom they come in contact during their stay in the city. In other words, the hotel guests frequently suggest to local residents that they attend a performance at the theater.

Pushing Plans for National Exposition

Three Halls Will Accommodate Throngs—Studio and Laboratory Among Attractions

WHILE it is expected that the greatest galaxy of photoplay stars ever brought together will attend the National Motion Picture Exposition in Boston, July 13 to 20, their presence will not be allowed to detract from the general interests of the industry as a whole.

One of the criticisms most often heard of national expositions of the past has been the fact that widespread publicity has been given a few stars, while the industry as a whole has been a silent setting for the stars' overworked publicity departments.

Manager Samuel Grant of the Boston exposition believes he has solved the problem at the coming national convention. The entire Mechanics' Building, containing three great exposition halls, and all under the same roof, has been secured for the exposition. Each hall will be a show by itself, but one admission fee will admit to the entire building.

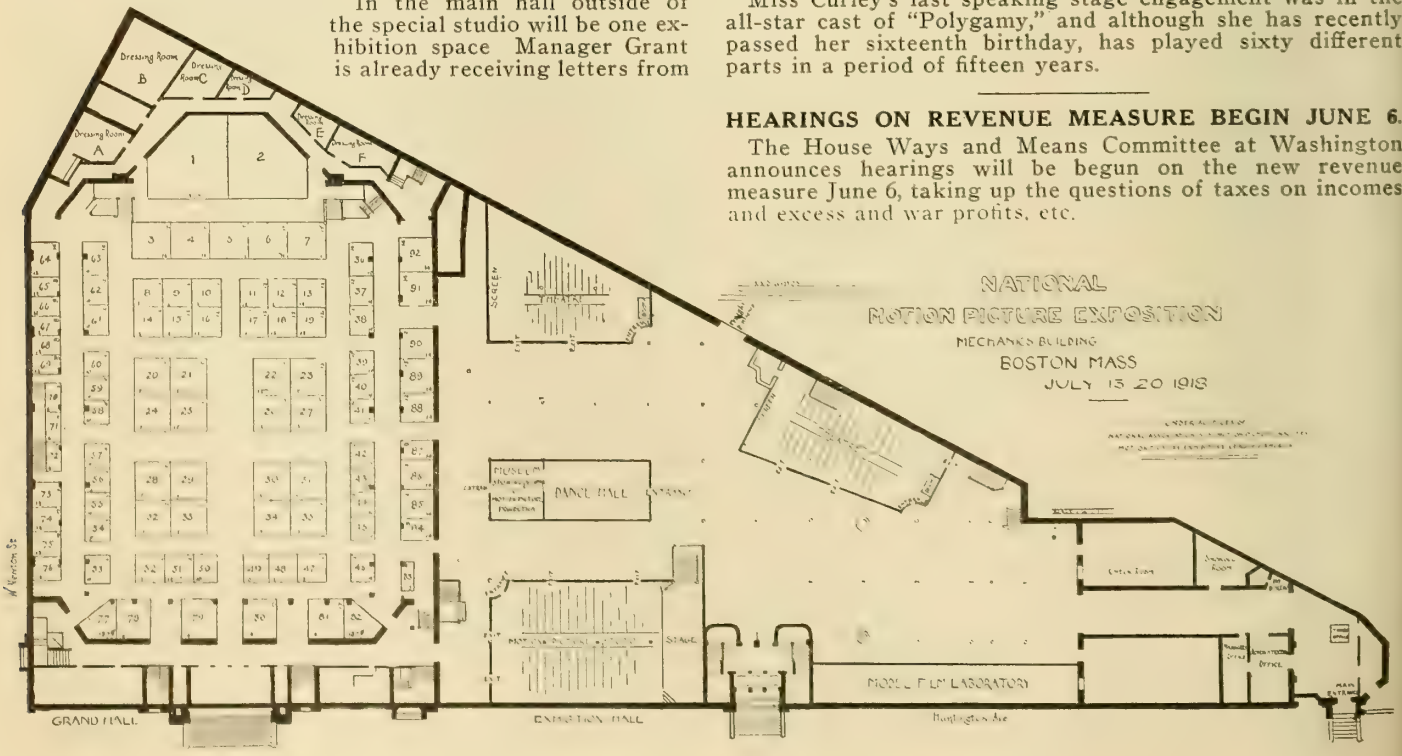
Hence Mr. Grant figures out it will be impossible for any star or group of stars under this arrangement to grab all the "spotlight" at one time. The crowds at the convention will be bound to be attracted to the various halls where interesting exhibits will be shown. If Mr. Grant's plan works out it will be to the great satisfaction of the industry as a whole and to the producers, manufacturers and exhibitors who buy hall space for their exhibits.

A novel feature of the exposition will be a complete studio set up in the main exposition hall. Producers will be invited to stage some of the interior scenes of their future releases here. There will be arrangements for groups of visitors to the exhibition to take part in scenes. These pictures will be developed in the complete laboratory, which will be a convention feature, and later will be thrown upon the screen in one of the two completely appointed theaters, which will be a part of the exposition. Thus a group of visitors from some prominent organization can stage a scene of their own, see the film developed and attend the theater a few hours later and witness the incident thrown on the screen. Manager Grant considers there are wonderful publicity opportunities in connection with this studio.

Mechanics' Building is one of the largest and most complete exposition buildings in the country. There are three big halls—the main auditorium, or Mechanics' Hall, Talbot Hall and Paul Revere Hall. Manager Grant has allotted exhibition space in all these halls.

In the main hall outside of the special studio will be one exhibition space Manager Grant is already receiving letters from all branches of the trade regarding allotment of space. A prospectus will soon be in the hands of the trade, giving full details regarding the exposition. This will be followed later by a complete and handsome convention program.

Manager Grant recently returned from Washington with assurances that President Wilson would attend the exposition if international affairs during convention week would allow his getting away for a few days.



PENNSYLVANIA LEAGUE POSTPONES CONVENTION.

The Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia was addressed at its last regular meeting by C. C. Pettyjohn on behalf of the Affiliated Distributing Corporation of New York, who succeeded in forming a unit in Philadelphia.

The league determined not to recede from its original stand upon the question of the music tax at the last meeting, and announced that it would fight it to a finish. Members were advised to play the music which does not come under the music trust's lists.

At a special meeting of the state league of Pennsylvania, held the week of May 27, Judge J. O'Donnell announced that the annual state convention would be postponed from June 3, 4, 5 until the latter part of the month, when a new date would be agreed upon.

MANY FOREIGN CONTRACTS FOR WORLD FILM.

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation reports that it has concluded a contract for the distribution of World pictures for Brazil, Argentine, Paraguay, Chile, Uraguay and the Argentine Republic. Inter-Ocean also reports the contract for the rights to World pictures in Sweden, Finland, Denmark and Norway were renewed for a term of years. Another large contract renewed on the strength of the new output of World pictures was France. On the same day the concession for the distribution of World Pictures in Switzerland was made permanent for a term of years.

Egypt also was included in the countries to be supplied with World Pictures.

PAULINE CURLEY IN FAIRBANKS' SUPPORT.

In keeping with his policy of employing new leading women for each production Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Pauline Curley to play the leading female role in his film to follow "Say Young Fellow." Miss Curley comes to the Fairbanks company with eight months of film training which started at the Eastern Triangle Studio.

Miss Curley's last speaking stage engagement was in the all-star cast of "Polygamy," and although she has recently passed her sixteenth birthday, has played sixty different parts in a period of fifteen years.

HEARINGS ON REVENUE MEASURE BEGIN JUNE 6.

The House Ways and Means Committee at Washington announces hearings will be begun on the new revenue measure June 6, taking up the questions of taxes on incomes and excess and war profits, etc.

Australian Film Distributor Optimistic

Archie Fraser Declares Business Might Be Worse, Although War Conditions Restrict Prosperity and Promotion.

DURING his trip to New York, for the purpose of renewing a contract with Universal to distribute their product in Australia, Archie Fraser called at the World office to pay his respects and tell something of the condition prevailing in the Antipodes in this fourth year of war. Mr. Fraser will remain in the East for a month or more, then going back to San Francisco to catch his boat for England's loyal colony.

"Everything is 'win the war' with us in every line of business," said Mr. Fraser. "One-tenth of our male population is now under arms and we are sending more men toFrance as fast as ships are available to carry them. It costs Australia $1,500 a man for every soldier, as we completely equip and maintain our forces on the field. It is all a question of ships with us, as much or more than with every other country on the globe—for we are living on an island approximately as large as the main territory of the United States and ships are our greatest essential.

"With 10 per cent. of our males under arms, the moving picture business has been seriously affected—particularly in the smaller towns. In the big cities the women and girls left at home have become used to shifting for themselves, and theatrical business is as good as might reasonably be expected. But in the small towns, exhibitors have a hard time continually to stay in business. Houses that formerly ran every week-day evening do well now to find business for one and two nights a week—this statement, of course, applying to the smaller communities and towns.

"There are between 900 and 1,000 places in Australia where pictures are exhibited—approximately as many as there are in the Dominion of Canada. And until the war is won there can be no more—for the authorities will allow no new building, no alterations or repairs (unless they shall directly benefit public welfare) without Government sanction. As 'win the war' is the Government purpose, no permits for rebuilding or extending the moving picture representation in Australia are being issued."

Mr. Fraser states that, barring "topicals," which come largely from England, the entire film supply for Australia is drawn from American manufacturers. Last year ten or a dozen distributing firms organized the Film Renters' Association of Australia, honoring Mr. Fraser with the office of president, which he still holds. He is managing director of the Frazer Film Release and Photographic Company, agents for Australia, during the past four years, for Universal product. It is to renew this contract that Mr. Fraser came to New York on his present trip.

Asked concerning the big features that have lately brought so much money to American exhibitors through exposing the Hun's brutality, Mr. Fraser said that they will soon be showing in the antipodes. "My Four Years in Germany" was due for exploitation by Australasian Films, Ltd., just about now. "The Kaiser" will be on the screen in Australia early in June. Other features are being arranged for through the established Australian connections of the various producers.

Paramount-Artcraft and Fox maintain their own distributing service, with the main office in Sydney and branches in Melbourne, Brisbane, Perth, Adelaide and in Wellington, N. Z. Goldwyn is at the present time concluding an arrangement with J. C. Williamson, Ltd., the great legitimate theatrical firm, to distribute its product. Metro's connection is the Co-operative Film Exchange, Ltd. The Progressive Film Service has the Mutual agency, while the Australasian Films, Ltd., distributes Triangle, World, Vitagraph, Select and Pathe.

Essanay, in that land of universal suffrage and woman's rights, has the distinction of being represented by Mrs. Mason, widow of Plymouth Mason, a pioneer in Australian film service who died something like a year ago.

The World reporter who took notes during Mr. Fraser's call at our office absolves the genial Australian for any mistakes that may have been made in transcribing. Perfection will not have been attained until the Kaiser is licked—and we desire to reflect our impression, gained from Mr. Fraser, that Australia is doing her full share to that desired consummation.

SIMPLEX GETS GOOD AUSTRALIAN REPORT.

A recent report received by the Simplex company from the Australasian Films, Ltd., Sydney, distributors for the machines in the island continent and in New Zealand, records the sale of eighty machines in all principal cities in every state of the Commonwealth and in New Zealand, covering a limited period.

"While these sales are satisfactory considering the present difficulties of transportation," says E. M. Porter, general manager of Simplex, "we are particularly gratified, as we have every reason to believe that in normal times the number of machines placed by the Australasian company would have been more than double."

Film Exporters to Form Association

Will Get Together on Thursday to Consider Action Designed to Combat Possibility of Industry Being Declared Non-Essential.

THE grave possibility that the Allied Governments and the United States may refuse shipping accommodations to films and all forms of moving picture accessories, by placing moving picture products on the "non-essential" list, is assuming alarming proportions. Although no official action has been taken, there is a general rumor current that the attitude of the Allies is to prohibit the shipment of films on the grounds of non-essentiality to all the beligerent nations, as well as the neutrals with whom shipping arrangements have been effected. Should this ruling become effective, it would leave open to the exportation of film only the Spanish and Portuguese speaking nations of the world, which are comprised within the bounds of South America, Central America, the West Indies, Philippines, Mexico, Spain and Portugal.

There will be held on Thursday a meeting to form an exporters' association, the aim of which will be to guide the lawmakers in Washington along justified and patriotic lines, intended to convince them that film should be classed as "essential."

No one man, or set of men, has undertaken the calling of this gathering for any purpose of personal glorification or self-advancement. The meeting will be open to any and all forms of cinematografic exporters, wherefore an announcement has been placed elsewhere in this issue of the Moving Picture World, for the purpose of extending an open invitation to everyone.

While the matter of maintaining shipments of film to all parts of the world, at this time, is the important consideration, the association will also endeavor to rectify many, in fact all, of the evils that affect the business from time to time. Chief among these are the piracy of films and the smuggling and illegal shipment of stolen and duped productions into the foreign markets. Steps will therefore be undertaken effectively to combat this evil right from the headquarters in New York, which town is really the fountain-head of these permanently illicit activities which could be curbed in this country, as both the Italian and French producers have solved their difficulties in Italy and France.

The meeting has been arranged for 12.30 p. m. Thursday, June 6 on the eighth floor of the Hotel Astor. It is hoped that everyone who would be affected by the possible government ruling on films will be in attendance.

To Hold Up American Women to China

Alice Lee Preparing Film to Show Her Countrymen How Gentler Sex Is Regarded Here.

ASKING a million questions a minute and carefully storing away in her keen mind all the information she absorbs for future use in the elevating of womankind in her native country, Alice Lee, a bright young Chinese girl, is the busiest person about the World Pictures studio in West Fort Lee, N. J., these days. Miss Lee realizes that motion pictures are the greatest propaganda force in the world, and it is for that reason that she has chosen the screen as the mode of bringing her countrywomen to higher things.

Miss Lee is appearing as one of the leading characters in a World Picture, "Mandarin's Gold," in which Kitty Gordon is starred, and she is utilizing every moment she has at the studio in studying the making of motion pictures, from the staging of the plays to the developing of the negatives and the making of the prints.

"Everyone knows," said Miss Lee, "how the Chinese father considers a son a blessing and a daughter a curse. Everyone knows how different things are here—how American women are looked up to and respected and what an important place they take in the daily life, especially in these war times. There is no reason why the Chinese women should not also be looked up to and respected by the Chinese men and, with the aid of the knowledge I have gained in this country I hope to be successful in bringing this change about, or at least starting the change.

"I am going back to China soon, and with me I will take some thousands of feet of film showing the way American men treat American women—with the utmost respect everywhere. Then, when I am in China, I will take pictures showing the way that Chinese men treat our womenfolk. After this I will show both pictures, one after the other, and in this way forcibly bring home to my countrymen the difference in the standing of women in America and China. It is so that I may be able to have success in taking the pictures back home in China that I am studying so hard here now and asking so many questions which everybody so kindly answers for me."

Alice Lee.

British Notes

ARE film celebrities worth the large fees paid to them? is a question that has been asked again and again since the inception of the movie star and the attendant princely stipend which the film manufacturer seems only too ready to pay for his or her exclusive services. Public opinion on the question is finely divided. Recently George Bernard Shaw was asked what he thought of Mary Miles Minter's salary, eight times more than that of an English Cabinet Minister even with war bonus. Shaw sees nothing to complain of except "that it won't last more than a few years. Still it is a very fair salary for a young lady of sixteen. When I was that age I only had a salary of £2 a week and nobody made any fuss about it. She is putting up the standard for everyone, and I hope she gets a raise at Christmas." Horatio Bottomley, as would be expected, treats it purely as a business transaction and says she is worth all she can get. George Lansbury, labor leader, reflects the other side of the question, the side that an increasing number of renters and exhibitors are fond of presenting, and says that no person is worth such a salary.

Bairnsfather's comedy from the Oxford theater, one of the war successes of the vaudeville stage, has been played before the moving picture camera. "The Better 'Olt or the Romance of Old Bill" is a trench comedy woven around Capt. Bairnsfather's famous character, ably impersonated in the photoplay version by Chas. Rock, a former player of the London Film Co. The producing enterprise is a new one, the firm of Welsh, Pearson & Co., Ltd. Mr. Welsh was at one time manager of the Gaumont Co.'s exchanges in England and Mr. Pearson produced the "Ultus" pictures.

"Sapho," the Famous Players version, has been banned from exhibition at Huddersfield on the order of the local authorities. This is not an isolated instance of an objection to a notorious name rather than a questionable production.

The price of all "paper" supplied with films has been increased ten per cent. by French exchangemen, who have also stipulated a fixed tariff of rentals for old or second-hand films supplied to the smaller exhibitors. These approximate $4.50 per 1,000 metres for one day's hire up to $12 for a week's hire. The first of the Goldwyn pictures, imported by American Film Releases, have been disposed of by Mr. Edmondson on a territorial rights basis.

Upon the petition of Sir James M. Barrie, the Ideal Film Renting Co. have been restrained from using the title "Admirable Crichton Up-to-Date" for a film production on the ground that it might lead the public to believe it a version of Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton," the screen rights of which have been sold to the Samuelson Film Co.

The Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd., are making in this country a series of single-reel comedies starring Ella Shields, a popular artiste of the variety stage. Percy Nash is directing Miss Shields and the first number has the terse title, "Herself." It shows the player in four different characters.

A private moving picture theater has been opened in one of the residences adjoining Parliament buildings, Westminster. It is to be used principally for the projection of propaganda subjects issued by the Government Department of Information before they are passed for general circulation.

The American kinema fans will learn with interest that all profits from the Allied war pictures exhibited in the States under the direction of Chas. Urban, including these shown at the Strand theater, New York City, are to be equally divided between American and British war charities.

Harold Shaw, principal director of African Film Productions, Ltd., is at present producing another spectacular subject at Durban, Natal, with a strong war plot. The film when completed will be exhibited solely for the pecuniary benefit of Durban relief and charity funds and any copies sent to the U. S. A. will be devoted to the same purpose for American institutions of a like nature. The lead in the film is taken by Mrs. Shaw (Miss Edna Flugrath).

William Fox Entertains Drive Aids

Presents Octagonal-Shaped Gold Watches to His Twenty-five Guests in Appreciation of Their Co-operation.

TUESDAY evening, following the close of the drive, William Fox assembled twenty-five of his most active lieutenants around tables upon which a "war banquet" was served at Murray's. Festivities began at 8 o'clock in the evening and wore down a goodly part of the Wednesday's early morning hours before the company disbanded.

Every guest found under his plate, when he seated himself at the table, a beautiful memento of the Red Cross Drive. Appropriately engraved watches, bearing the name of the recipient and a phrase of appreciation from Mr. Fox and his chief lieutenant, Winfield R. Sheehan, will be carried proudly by their possessors for years to come. The watches are fashioned along nifty lines—the late-styled octagonal shape, thin, and of solid gold.

How twenty-five enthusiastic men, flushed with admiration for the skill and efficiency of their leader, and individually proud of the help they had rendered in making the great drive a whopping success; how in the enthusiasm of their immediate surroundings with good things to eat and much bottled table-water to drink they would while away six or eight hours in a private room with wifey well placated in advance, may better be imagined than could possibly be described.

Had polls opened and closed at Murray's that evening, William Fox would have been elected unanimously to any office he might indicate as his patriotic heart's desire. It was declared to be a fitting "End of a Perfect Drive," with William Fox the hero of the hour.

HIGH TALENT FOR "ROMANCE OF COAL."

The increasing proportions of the Educational Film Corporation's picture spectacle, "The Romance of Coal," have made necessary the reorganization of the production staff, with the result that on June 1 E. Lloyd Sheldon was put in charge of the scenario and Carroll Fleming, former director of the New York Hippodrome, playwright and film producer, was appointed director-in-chief.

It was felt the emotional and poetic side of the story needed Sheldon's visioning, while the spectacular possibilities of mightily moving scenes laid in "the Switzerland of America" required a production chief like Fleming, capable of handling the biggest units.

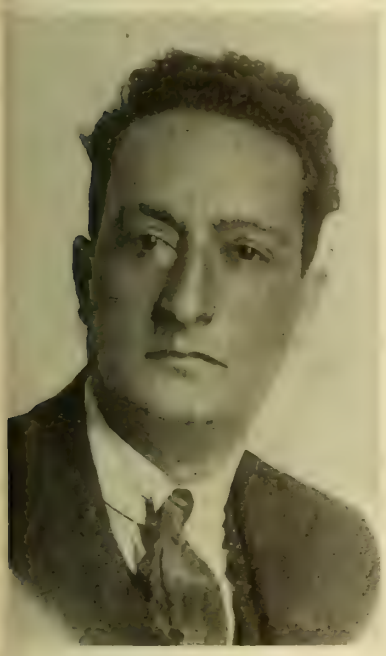
From Argentina to Panama

South American Renter Discusses Trade Conditions in the Neighboring Republics.

BERNARDO HERRERA, "the luckiest moving picture impresario in South America," as his friends in the trade call him, is again in town fresh from a six months' trip which covered the different republics of the southern hemisphere from Panama to Argentina. As soon as he made his appearance in the offices of our international edition, Cine-Mundial, we knew that we were in for some interesting information. Mr. Herrera has been a theatrical producer, a manager of bullfighting rings, and, during the past five years, a renter and exhibitor of moving pictures. He is the man who bought "Damaged Goods" for Chile about a year ago, re-edited the picture practically beyond recognition, obtaining for it the backing of sixty prominent physicians, and in seven months of exploitation in Chile, Peru and Bolivia cleared, according to the local press, a net profit of 40,000 Chilean pesos.



Bernardo Herrera.

"When I came here about two years ago," said Mr. Herrera, "the number of American-made pictures shown in South America did not exceed 10 per cent. of the total, and it meant hard work and a considerable investment in preliminary advertising to convince the exhibitors that it would pay them to run an American feature. At that time the soporific effects produced by one of the earliest serials were still remembered, and the general opinion among showmen down there was that American pictures would drive away even the chairs in the theaters. The first picture that opened the eyes of the South American exhibitors and renters to the possibilities of the United States as a source of supply was "The Million Dollar Mystery," a serial that is still being successfully exploited in some of the republics.

"At the present time, ninety per cent. of the film exhibited in Argentina, Chile, Uruguay and Peru comes from this country, although quite a large proportion of it is entirely unsuited to the needs of those markets.

"In my estimation, the fact that American producers have not yet captured all the Latin American markets is only due to lack of proper understanding of the local conditions prevailing in the various countries. What has been done in Argentina and Chile can be easily duplicated in Venezuela and Ecuador—but always in a smaller scale. I mean by this that the value of a territory should always be estimated by the number and importance of the theaters, and not by population or size. Bolivia is many times larger than Cuba, but would anybody in his right senses ask the same price on a picture for both countries? You might as well figure by the number of churches, in which case Colombia would be the greatest market in the world.

"It may sound ridiculous, but I can remember a few instances in which I have been quoted by New York and Chicago manufacturers pretty nearly the same prices for Chile as for Bolivia, despite the fact that the former supports about 150 fine moving picture houses and the latter not over 8 or 10, and most of them in a rather precarious condition.

"I have noticed that from time to time you have taken up the matter of exclusive rights in foreign territories, and their infringement, in the columns of the Moving Picture World and Cine-Mundial, and you should keep on hammering at it until the evil has been eliminated. Outside of Argentina and Brazil, where the local laws offer some protection, the other republics do not recognize any cinematographic copyright privilege and anybody possessing a picture can show it. However, after many years in this business, and as a result of thorough investigation, I have come to the conclusion that the trouble lies right here in the United States. I am satisfied that 95% of the duped, pirated and stolen films shown in Latin America are shipped from two or three ports in this country—New York, of course, being responsible for the lion's share.

"The title question is another important one. It seems to me that American manufacturers do not realize the value of having their productions properly presented before Spanish and Portuguese audiences. Fox, Pathe and Universal are the exceptions, and, as far as I know, none of their pictures has as yet been marred by faulty titling. In the other American films that I have seen in South America, the titles, as a rule, were so short that they could scarcely be read, blurred and, to make matters worse, poorly translated. Even the titles of "Civilization" were full of errors.

"My last trip from Chile all the way down to Panama proved exceptionally interesting, and I have no doubt that it will turn out profitable. I found conditions changed in many places. In Nicaragua and Costa Rica, for example, the authorities have barred the exhibition of serials and all other films dealing with detectives, thieves, robberies, murders, etc. In San Salvador, the most progressive city in Central America, I had a chance to observe a thrilling advertising fight between two rival moving picture managers. One of them Luis Bustamente, had purchased "The Million Dollar Mystery" and was advertising it as an extraordinary feature, making it quite plain at the same time that extraordinary admission prices would be charged. Then Miron Estrada came along with another copy of the same film, and, just for the pleasure of smashing his friend and brother manager, announced that he would release the picture in his theater at the usual 10-cent price. The night of the release, when both managers had brought down the price to five cents a throw, the town was hit by an earthquake and Miron Estrada's print and theater were entirely destroyed. The next day Mr. Bustamante's copy was playing to full houses—admission price, $1.00.

"In Central America I found a gentleman of color—very deep color by the way—acting as local representative for a New York firm the name of which, if I remember rightly, was the Central American Film Service. This man was renting film at the rate of $5 a month and doing, naturally, a great deal of harm to the business. Among other pictures, in a more or less dilapitated condition, he was exploiting a copy of "The Broken Coin," with two reels missing.

"Although some of the southern republics are jealously neutral and the governments will not allow the exhibition of any partisan photoplay, whether it be pro-Ally or pro-German, there are always some means of getting around this difficulty by using a little diplomacy. Here is an example. In Temuco (Chile), a city where the Germans are as thick as flies, the manager of one of the local theaters was about to show "The Battle Cry of Peace." The posters for this film, as you know, have a very savage picture of the Kaiser wielding a burning brand in one hand and a murderous dagger in the other. The Germans, naturally, created an uproar the minute they saw them, and a protesting committee was immediately formed, with the result that the film, although it had nothing to do with the present war or the Germans, was barred by the authorities. Did the manager give up the fight? No, sir. He hired a painter, had the Kaiser shaved and the dagger changed into a bouquet of flowers. The picture was shown without further trouble."

Mr. Herrera is a member of the firm Pairoa & Herrera, with headquarters in Santiago, Chile. They do not furnish programs, devoting all their energies to the exploitation of special features. Among their recent purchases, special mention should be made of "The Woman and the Law" (Fox), for which a record price was paid, "The Bar Sinister" and "The Fall of the Romanoffs." Mr. Herrera will remain in New York for one or two months.

A Voice From the Trenches

Eugene Lauste, Cinematographer, Is Making His Mark on the Battlefields of France.

25th April, 1918.

Dear Sir: Just a few lines to thank you very much for the two copies you kindly sent me of the "Cine-Mundial," which duly reached me in the first line trenches last week. It contained an article on my father's invention, entitled "El Cinematógrafo Parlante," which I think was admirably written. I was specially pleased with the blocks, seeing I took the original photographs of all his instruments.

It may interest you to know that I was decorated with the Croix de Guerre" on April 17th. My citation reads:

"Soldat courageoux. Volontaire pour toutes les missiones pezillense. Il est particuliarment distingue en assurant une liaison parfaite dans des circonstances difficultes."

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) E. L. LAUSTE.

Mr. Lauste is a veteran of the moving picture industry. He was in this country for a few years and left for England in 1897 as printer for the American Biograph Company. Connected with different moving picture firms in various capacities he traveled in pre-war times through France, Italy, Spain, Holland, Norway, Sicily, Germany, Austria, Portugal, South Africa, British East Africa, German East Africa, Belgian Congo, Uganda, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, Canada and sundry other places.

Up to the time of joining the colors of his country—France—he held the office of chief photographer at the Gaumont Studios in London.

His many friends in the trade, here and in Europe, will surely be glad to know that after four years of war he is still very much alive and doing his best to make the sojourn of the Germans in France as unpleasant as possible.

American Pictures in Brazil

Photoplays Succeed Where Diplomats Fail—Chaplin and Hart Brazilian Favorites.

THE following article, published last week in the New York Sun, will bear reproduction. At this time when people are discussing essential and non-essential industries, it will not be amiss to emphasize the kind of service that is being rendered to the cause by American moving pictures in all neutral and allied countries. And it is a service that cannot be successfully performed through any other medium.

Rio de Janeiro, May 1.—Before the war the average Brazilian's ignorance of the American and his activities was vast—as vast as the average American's ignorance of the Brazilian and his affairs.

Now, after more three years of war confusion, the Brazilian has his ideas about the Yankee and fairly clear ideas they are too. The change was brought about by an utterly unexpected agent—the American motion picture film.

Much has been said and written about the tightening of Pan-American ties. Conventions there were at which representatives of the more than twenty western continent republics banqueted and made speeches. Commercial interests strove to weave tight the web of business relations.

Diplomats multiplied plans and policies of the common acceptance of the Monroe Doctrine. The press of the two continents clamored for a solidification of American interests. But the man who is "putting it over" is the impresario of the celluloid stage.

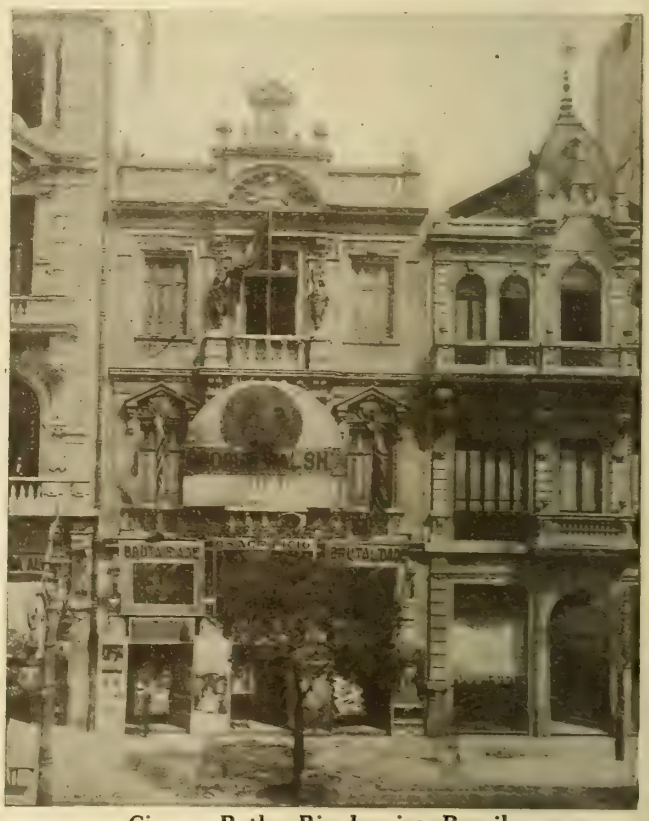
For it follows, as day follows night, that Pan-American ties of friendship are possible only when the friends are acquainted with each other. Seeing American implements of progress in action creates a commercial demand for those implements. Living scenes of the American in his home and business make the American character understood and appreciated, and the task of the diplomat becomes easy. Formerly he had to combat the notion that the American's soul was stamped with his dollar sign, and that his instincts were imperialistic.

Teatro Phenix, Rio Janeiro, Brazil.

Used European Films.

The interest aroused by screen pictures of America has caused demand for news and knowledge of the happenings in that country and the columns of the press now show a fair proportion of events "made in U. S. A." And the picture play's the thing that did it.

Before the war Brazil was receiving practically all of its motion picture films from Europe, principally from France and Italy. But the film business not being considered among necessities, it was one of the first to suffer. Many of the principal actors of European filmdom were called to the trenches, and the feminine portion took to Red Cross and knitting. Materials used in production of films were needed for munitions. Transportation to South America became difficult. The result was that the European supply of films was almost completely cut off.



Cinema Pathe, Rio Janeiro, Brazil.

There was wailing and woe in Brazilian "movie" fandom. But in the midst of this the American hero, with a sombrero on his head and an unerring six-shooter in his hand, came galloping to the rescue. He galloped right into the warm heart of the Brazilian, and presto, the maiden was saved, the stolen papers restored, the villain vanquished, and Pan-American solidification became as simple as a recipe for apple pie.

Enter Bill and Charlie.

There is scarcely a "movie" house in Brazil that is not showing American films. The same shows that are being put on in every city and village of the United States are doing their turns here, and probably at about the same time. The Brazilian is fond of "action" in his film plots and the American companies are giving it in a way never seen in the European product. William S. Hart, Dustin Farnum, George Walsh, Charlie Chaplin and all the other stars in the American constellation are twinkling to popular approval down under the Southern Cross.

The popular mind is vastly astonished and somewhat appaled at the movie version of the American girl. Her independence and freedom—her self-assertion and ability to manage for herself—the respect with which she is treated by men with whom she associates as with equals, is the cause of much lifting of eyebrows.

Incidentally, as the moving picture show is the Brazilian's favorite amusement and has had a tremendous development in this country, the American export trade on picture films is a considerable commercial item.

Inter-Ocean Activities

Becomes Sole Exporter of "Fulco" Line and Acquires Selexart Pictures.

THE first big news from Inter-Ocean Film Corporation since entering their own building at 218 West 42nd street, New York City, comes in the announcement by president Paul H. Cromelin of the taking over of the entire foreign distribution of the accessories and supplies made by the E. E. Fulton Co., Chicago, Ill., known as the "Fulco" line. At the beginning the firm will confine itself to offering abroad such specialties as enclosed rewinders, bench rewinders, lugs, carbon savers and carbon adapters. Eugene H. Kauffman, who managed the "Speer" carbon campaign, will be in charge of the "Fulco" foreign sales drive.

Mr. Cromelin further announces that Inter-Ocean has secured the Selexart features for foreign distribution. They are "Honor's Cross," starring Rhea Mitchell; "Blue Blood," starring Howard Hickman; and "Social Ambition," with both Miss Mitchell and Mr. Hickman. The Lewis S. Stone features, "Inside the Lines" and "Man of Bronze" and a Robert T. Haines play, "The Victim," have also been added to Inter-Ocean's list.

Among the Exporters.

Gillespie Bros. & Co., an old-established commission house with offices at 11 Broadway, New York, has started a department for the exportation and importation of films and all kinds of cinematographic supplies. This firm has branches in the following countries: Great Britain, Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, Guatemala, Peru, Dominican Republic, West Indies, and agencies in other territories. José Manuel Aragón, who recently severed his connection with Rojas, Randall & Co., is in charge of the new department. It is understood that the activities of Gillespie Bros. & Co. will not be confined to Latin America, their intention being to cover all the markets of the world available at the present time.

Jacobo Glucksmann, New York representative of Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, reports that in addition to a large number of Metro productions already finished, he has just contracted for the entire 1918 program of the Metro Pictures Corporation with exclusive rights for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia. The deal was closed through the Export & Import Film Co., of New York. With the purchase of the Metro output, Max Glucksmann has materially increased his already large service of American productions in the territory covered by his firm.

B. Lichtig, who has represented the Universal company in the Antilles, Mexico and Central America for nearly two years, has become one of the most important moving picture factors in those territories. According to Cine-Mundial's correspondent in Havana, the Campoamor theater, controlled by Mr. Lichtig and the only continuous performance house in the West Indies, is doing great business with Bluebird, Butterfly, Jewel and other Universal productions.

Teatro Campoamor, Havana, Cuba.

William Vogel, who owns the foreign rights on all the new Chaplin pictures, reports that copies of "A Dog's Life" have already been shipped to Panama, Chile, and to the headquarters of the Central American Film Company, at Havana, for distribution in Cuba, Porto Rico, Santo Domingo, Jamaica, Venezuela, Colombia and the Central American republics with the exception of Panama.

The Haworth Pictures Corporation, of Los Angeles, announces in the June issue of "Cine-Mundial" that its first picture with Sessue Hayakawa in the title role will be ready for release in the Latin American markets within a few months. This announcement will create a great deal of interest in the Southern republics, where the Japanese actor has many admirers.

David P. Howells has removed his office from 220 West 42nd street to the eleventh floor of 729 Seventh avenue. Chester B. Sawyer, New York representative for the Central American Film Company, which will handle Mr. Howells' "First National" pictures in different Latin American territories, has also an office in the same suite.

Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, left last week on an extended trip through Latin America in the interests of his firm. He will visit Panama, Ecuador, Brazil, Bolivia, Peru, Chile, Uruguay and Argentina. Mr. Lang expects to remain away from New York for nine or ten months.

The M. P. Sales Agency, of London, and the Australasian Films, Ltd., of Sydney, bought the Jester comedies for the United Kingdom and Australia respectively. Both deals were consummated through David W. Russell, of New York.

Havana will soon boast of a large theater specially built for the exhibition of moving pictures and equipped with all modern appliances. The corner of Prado and Neptuno streets has been selected as a site, and it will have seating capacity for 1,100 spectators. The name of it will be "The Rialto."

W. H. Productions Co. announces the following sales: Five Bessie Barriscale features for France to M. Monat, of Paris; "Carmen of the Klondike," for South Africa, to the Apex Films, Ltd., of Johannesburg; and for Norway, Denmark and Sweden to John Olsen & Co.

Alvarez, Arrondo & Co., of Mexico, are advertising in the local trade press "Enlighten Your Daughter," an Inter-Ocean controlled production, and "Who Will Be Number One," presumably the Paramount serial of similar name.

* * *

The Cuban Electrical Supply Company, with headquarters at Havana, has been appointed agent for the Nicholas Power Company in Cuba. The deal was closed during A. J. Lang's recent visit to the neighboring republic.

"Fox Farming at East Northport, L. I." (General Film).

A HALF reel showing how one of the most productive industries is carried on. The fox farm at East Northport, L. I., where silver foxes of great value are reared for their fur has been photographed in a way that gives us unusually familiar views of these animals, which at the slightest strange sound will take to their holes for weeks at a time, coming out only at night. Evidently the avenues to their underground homes had been closed up, for they are seen to rush about their pens frantically hunting a point of escape. Finally a chicken hung in the middle of one of the pens lures one of the foxes to a more prominent position in the picture and makes him forget his fear.

"Transplanting Nuremburg" (Universal).

The transferring the world's toy making center from Nuremburg, Germany, to Winchendon, Mass., is the subject of an interesting series of views in the Screen Magazine No. 74. The manufacture of mechanical toys such as tin autos and boats, of a toy cannon, and of a toy piano are attractive features of the picture. Then there is the making of blackboards and the assembling of rocking horses, all of which interest.

"War Garden Hints" (Paramount-Bray).

The 122d release of the Pictograph gives an excellent idea of how to manage not only a war garden, but any garden if you really want things to grow. Miss Grace Taylor, an energetic young woman connected with the United States Department of Agriculture, demonstrates in closeups just how the work should be done. She spreads the fertilizer, digs the ground and turns it under, and then sows the seed. When the seed has been transformed into plants she shows how to care for them. One of the things to which she draws particular attention is the planting of beans, which she tells us should be planted with the eye down. Closeups of the sprouted bean, planted both ways are shown by way of illustration.

"Building Liberty Hospitals" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting and well-illustrated subject in the 122d release of the Pictograph shows us a new type of ward for a field hospital. This ward is known as the Liberty Field Hospital Ward, and has been presented to the country as one of the contributions of the American Museum of Natural History to the national service. The plans for this ward were executed by Harry F. Beers under the direction of President H. F. Osborn. The idea is based on the remarkable results obtained in an English hospital when cures were effected by direct exposure of the wounded to the open air and sunshine. The ward is built in portable style and is seen in the picture under erection.

"Our Engineers Win Renown 'Over There'" (Universal).

In the Universal Screen Magazine No. 74 will be found some illuminating views showing the splendid kind of work our army engineers are doing on the battle front of France. It shows them after throwing aside their picks and shovels helping the British and French to maintain their positions against the enemy. It also shows them on the hike and building pontoon bridges.

"Britain's Bulwarks," No. 4 (Pathe).

This series of actual scenes connected with the present war is destined to have great historical value, as it gives intimate glimpses of conditions on the British front of an official character. This number gives some excellent views of a German prison camp in England, showing the humane treatment of prisoners and the occupations and amusements provided for them. The second half of the reel shows King Albert and Prince Alexander of Teck on a visit to the British front. The devastated trenches of Thiepval and the war torn valley of the Ancre are pictured.

"Yosemite in Winter" (Pathe).

A winter subject, showing this famous park under a mantle of snow. The various waterfalls are pictured, also Glacier Point, Union Point, Balanced Rock, Glacier Point Hotel and other features. Two mountain climbers are also pictured doing daring stunts on slippery trails.

"Educated Seals" (Universal).

One of the most entertaining numbers in the 74th issue of the Screen Magazine are some views of educated seals performing juggling tricks. These well trained animals do the most marvelous things from balancing balls on their noses to playing musical instruments. Those who have seen performing seals on the vaudeville stage or at the circus will be able to appreciate the attractiveness of this number.

Films for Civic Betterment

Municipal Reference Library of New York City Gives Screen "Once Over" for Productions of Civic and Educational Value—Metro Scores.

ANOTHER evidence of the acknowledged usefulness of the moving picture screen is given in the fact that the Municipal Reference Library of New York City has been preparing under the supervision of Librarian D. W. Hyde a bulletin of screen productions of civic and educational value to be sent broadcast over the country. This, published periodically, will be used for reference by communities and organizations wishing to utilize highgrade pictures in their work of town betterment, health campaigns and patriotic propaganda. The Library plans to use constructively for the national benefit the widespread interest in moving pictures.

The subjects in which they are especially interested are Americanization, fire prevention, milk supply, sanitation, food conservation, health education, engineering, police departments, public works of utilities, child welfare, city betterment, city planning, recreation, municipal gardens, etc.

An announcement from the Metro Pictures Corporation states that the following productions of their make have been chosen for recommendation: "Help Wanted" (Drew Patriotic comedy); "The Patriot" (food conservation); "Gas Logic" (Drew comedy on fuel conservation); "The High Cost of Living"; "My Own United States"; "Lest We Forget"; "Her Boy"; "Draft 258"; "Her Greatest Power" (story of girl chemist); "The Slacker"; "The Legion of Death"; "The Landloper" (on impure water supply); "The Upheaval" (story of graft reform); "God's Half Acre" (philanthropy); "The Sunbeam"; "The Eternal Mother" (child labor); "Red, White and Blue Blood"; "The Hidden Spring," and "Under Handicap" (showing western reclamation projects).

Questionnaire Reveals Film Tastes

Travel and Western Tie for First Place With Children of Schools of Onawa and Des Moines, Iowa.

THERE have been comparatively few careful studies of the subject of motion pictures in relation to young people. Miss Irene Farrell, instructor in Latin and English in the high school at Onawa, Iowa, population 2,500, has taken a deep interest in the subject, and recently made a careful survey in the high schools of that town and of Des Moines. It was conducted by means of a questionnaire.

The results indicated that high school pupils want entertainment of this kind about twice a week. In Onawa and Des Moines, they usually go with their parents or with their friends. Their reading habits were affected, one-fifth finding that the motion pictures, probably the news weeklies, increased the desire for newspaper reading. General reading was not so widely influenced, except that in every case where a picture was based on a book, there was registered an increase in the desire to read the work. News weeklies and picturized novels were found to have been very helpful in the study of current events, geography, and history and picturized novels in English. Those suffering from eye trouble due to optical ailments were the only ones whose eyes suffered from looking at motion pictures. Miss Farrell summed up as follows:

"The kind of picture given first choice was 'Spectacular,' which claimed its rank by a single vote over 'Travel' and 'Western,' which tied for second place, which likewise by a single vote ranked above 'Romantic,' 'Comedy' and 'Educational,' all of which peculiarly were given third place. 'Thrillers' and 'Tragedy' were relegated to the background, the former receiving three votes, the latter but one. From the opinion as regards 'Thrillers,' we conclude that the pupils' taste must be refined and literary, but in respect to tragedy, when we consider that in school much study is made of the classic tragedians, Shakespeare especially, we conclude that we are teaching something naturally disliked or possibly we conclude that the tragic appreciation needs stronger cultivation. Perhaps the pupils have in mind the overworked tragedy—as one boy says, 'I dislike the tragedy in which the hero's manly breast heaves with suppressed emotion.'

"'Educational' and 'Travel' proved to be the kind remembered the longest, while 'Comedy,' which ranked third by choice of subject, received one vote for being longest remembered.

"As a result two points stand out as important and valuable. First, the children are as a whole appreciative of the best in pictures and are vitally impressed by the best, and second, motion pictures may be used to supplement class room instruction with positive and effective results. It is advisable to encourage the best pictures; it is sound educational doctrine to use this additional method of instruction."

Mexico on the Screen

Educational Films Corporation of America Releasing Splendid Series of Mexican Films.

IN spite of the fact that the twelve-reel series "Mexico Today" which is being handled by the Educational Films Corporation of America opened at the Rivoli theater, New York City the closing week of May, its general release is set for June.

"Mexico Today" represents the work of George D. Wright, a young American who has been settled in Mexico City for several years. The fact that he was in partnership with a native Mexican afforded him unusual facilities for picturizing all the aspects of native Mexican life. Among the subjects of these one-reel films are: The Heart of Mexico; Picturesque Industries; History and Architecture; Market Days and Fiestas; The World's Most Useful Plant; The Floating Gardens; Life in the Indian Villages; In Silverland; A Modern Hacienda; The Power House of Mexico.

New Series of Anthropographic Films

Social Life and Environment of Mongolian Tribes of Arctic Siberia and America Arrives at Seattle.

FOUR reels of anthropographic films which promises to be interesting has been photographed by Frederick Yanegich, of 415 Madison street, Seattle, Wash., and brought to that city to await the most suitable marketing

These films are said to cover the social life and environment of the Mongolian tribes of Artic Siberia and America. Each reel contains about 650 feet of action and 350 feet of titling, and each covers a different subject which is said to lead logically to the following reel.

Not having seen this series of pictures we are not in a position to qualify as to their merits, but we are glad to announce to the trade the news of its existence.

Items of Interest.

The Strand theatre, New York City, is running as a trailer to its topical review, Topics of the Day told in "title form" and arranged by the Literary Digest from the press of the world. The Topical Review for the week of May 19 also contained Part I of the Story of the Hun Drive at Picardy from Pathe, and also a Ditmars number from the Educational Films Corporation of America entitled "Night Animals." "A Coorial on the Oronoco," the fourth number of the Outing-Chester series, formed one of the features of the program.

The 77th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine for release June 29 contains among its most attractive subjects, "Studies in Insect Life," covering plant lice, the tomato grub, and other vicious species. It also tells the story of the peanut industry from the planting and gathering of the nuts to their conversion into peanut butter. Safe and unsafe methods of canoeing are also shown, as well as the rearing of young squirrels.

Fred Stone Starts for West Coast

At the Lasky Studio Comedian Will Begin Work on a Production in Which Athletic Stunts Are Featured.

FRED STONE, famous eccentric comedian and one of the best known musical comedy stars on the stage, left June 2 for Hollywood to begin his motion picture work at the Famous Players-Lasky studio, where his first Paramount pictures will be produced. Mr. Stone the night before completed a season's run in "Jack o' Lantern" at the Globe theater. Mr. Stone could well have played "Jack o' Lantern" all summer, but he is anxious for what he terms his vacation, which this summer will be found in his motion picture work.

Mr. Stone's first Paramount picture will be a circus story, written by John Emerson and Anita Loos especially for him, and will be directed by Donald Crisp. Work will begin at the Lasky studio June 10. In this picture the acrobatic comedian will have opportunity for performing stunts which are impossible on the stage. As he says himself: "I expect there will be hundreds of feet of acrobatic features which I have never before performed in public, but which I have been practicing daily, not only this season, but in seasons past. These stunts could never be presented on the stage, but in motion pictures they will be easy.

"In my first picture there will be a dozen or more new stunts which I have never shown to the public, such as leaping over seven horses, doing all sorts of trapeze stunts, roping six head of cattle at once, and many others of this nature," said Mr. Stone. "The beauty of the story, as I have gathered from the scenario, is in the fact that there will be a reason for bringing in these various athletic features. As a matter of fact the story is practically, as it stands, the story of my own life, and naturally I am very keen about it."

Vance Joins New Producing Combination

Author to Be "Production Analyst" of the Ince-Sawyer-Lubin Company.

FOLLOWING the announcement of the formation of a company to produce "Ralph Ince Film Attractions," with Ralph Ince, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin as the moving spirits, a statement was issued by Mr. Sawyer relative to the acquisition of a famous American novelist who will be added to the personnel of the new organization.

Louis Joseph Vance is the author. As a result of contracts closed between Mr. Vance and the Ince-Sawyer-Lubin combination the writer will play a prominent part in the preparation, construction, titling and supervision of all of the special vehicles to be released by the company.

A special executive capacity has been created for Mr. Vance whereby he will not only furnish several original stories, but also will occupy the position of "production analyst." In this capacity he will bring all his constructive knowledge of story writing and the drama to bear on each attraction before it is placed in production.

VISIT COAL CONVENTION AS GUESTS.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, and Miss Caroline Gentry, co-author of "The Romance of Coal," attended as guests the convention of the National Coal Association of America, held May 28 in Philadelphia.

Mr. Hammons and Miss Gentry went there to meet many of the operators who have declared a friendly interest in the coal picture and to report the progress that they have been making. Many so-called industrial pictures have been made that have dealt in a more or less detailed way with the coal mines, but "The Romance of Coal" is the first literary and artistic attempt to use a great industry as a background for an entertaining story.

BINDER GETS SEND-OFF FROM BIG-U ASSOCIATES.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Futile Argument.

SEEKING to traverse a recent statement an exhibitor seems to argue that advertising does not pay. He has lately come into the management of a house largely advertised by the previous management, but he argues that this costly advertising did not pay. He has cut down the size of his newspaper space, runs reissues of features alternating with first runs, and points with pride to the greatly increased profit he is showing on the box office statements. On the face of it he has all the best of the argument. The house is making more money than it did when it paid a large film rental and took half-page spaces in the newspapers. But the exhibitor does not realize that he is running upon the reputation builded by those earlier advertisements, and that presently he will be found out and a slump will ensue that will be gradual at first, but, acting with increasing celerity, will in time bring the house to a position where only another and even more expensive advertising campaign, backed by newer film, can possibly pull the house back to the position it now occupies. A single newspaper spread cannot make a clientele, nor can the occasional omission of heavy advertising break it down immediately. Success comes only through a long and persistent campaign of advertising. A management cannot use a ten-inch space for months and expect to pull a half page business immediately upon the insertion of a half-page advertisement. The half pages must be repeated with reasonable frequency if a permanent clientele is to be built up. The single half page will undoubtedly bring into the house more than its cost if the advertisement is properly written, but steady, permanent results come only from steady and persistent advertising campaigns, and what has been built up by patient endeavor cannot be overthrown in a day. A house well advertised for a couple of years will live on that advertising for from six months to a year. The impression has been created that the house is desirable. Patrons will be slow to realize that the change affects the value of the show, but inevitably they will make this discovery and stay away in increasing numbers, and they will be slow indeed to respond to a new campaign to regain business. This is a trap into which many inexperienced managers fall. They come into a well advertised house, and are pleasantly surprised to find that business holds up in the face of a materially decreased advertising appropriation. They at once plume themselves upon their superior ability which enables them to dispense with the heavy newspaper bills and still do business, and this frame of mind continues until they awake to the true facts too late to regain easily what they have so easily lost. Advertising will last beyond the period of advertising, but unless the house is to be dumped it will not last long, and the last state of the house will be worse than the first. We have seen this happen in New York houses and in small town theaters. It never fails to work out, and the manager who argues that he is saving money through dropping his advertising to a minimum is assuredly digging his own grave.

Bad Breaks.

Jimquin, formerly of L. A., but now of El Paso, sends in an advertisement for "The Whispering Chorus" in which the printer makes the types say that "Conscience doth make cords of us all." A Mexican program announces the appearance of a certain feature "with the famous actor, William Fox." He also tells of a tent show in a Mexican town which on one day announced a show for men only, and offered as the unannounced attraction the Passion Play. The crowd burned down the tent after smashing up the seats for kindling. Reminds us of the good old days of the store fit-up with the innocuous cooch for a "blow-off."

Hooked Up.

P. E. Coe, of the Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., gets right up to the minute with the Liberty Loan announcement. It runs:

BUY A LIBERTY BOND

By all means—but you can also help Uncle Sam by attending this theater regularly. The two cents war tax on admissions you pay is part of the $100,000,000 yearly collected by picture theaters for the Government.

We have changed the original text to the extent of adding the last three words. "Collected by picture theaters" is a bit vague. The addition of "for the Government" leaves no question as to the disposition of the money.

Doing His Bit.

C. D. Buss, of the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., is now a member of the photographic division of the Signal Corps, and is stationed at Columbia University, New York. We are going to miss his work for the Third Street, for Mr. Buss is one of the oldest friends of the department—and one of the most alert.

No Cuts, but——

The Strand theater, Minneapolis, produces an excellent advertisement with merely a cut signature and type from the cases. This is a four tens in the Sunday paper, and the star is played up with a fifteen-line letter that is much to be preferred for advertising purposes to a meaningless cut. This is a lesson that so few exhibitors and advertising agents seem to have learned. All type is infinitely to be preferred to a cut that means nothing. This particularly applies to portrait cuts so poorly printed that the identity of the player cannot be imagined. Some of the portrait cuts of Miss Pickford that are to be found in the advertisements are both wasteful and libelous.

Poor Lettering.

Here is another example of the foolishness of striving for effect. Possibly the cut will not show as badly as the original, which is taken from a quarter page, but there are white lines running down through the letters which give the effect of a poorly printed type letter at first glance, and few will give it a second glance unless they are interested in the announcement of the house. Keep to solid black letters for your important announcement, and you cannot go far wrong. The place for fanciful lettering is not in newspaper advertising, but in more carefully printed announcements.

Ruff on Titles.

Referring to a recent comment on titles, Ralph Ruffner writes:

> There is something to titles, and there is something to advertising. It has come to pass that millions of our best dividend dealers travel by sound, and sound synchronized with proper advertising appeals. The bow on the violin string may vibrate a steel building, or it may make the tenant in the next room wrathy, it all depends. But if it is handled deftly it may get response from both, a unified balance of two distinctly different natures.

There is a lot to that. The title should be pleasing in sound, for a fluent and pleasing title will do a lot to help the sale, but sales should not be made on sound alone, but on the recommendation of the house. Some companies carry the attractive title so far that they take all the character of the picture away. Undoubtedly many persons want to see a picture "because it sounds interesting," but they do not want to be misled by the title. Ruff sends in his idea of a Chaplin advertisement, but thinks that the artist might have injected more humor into the drawing, in which opinion we concur. The sketch is not humorous, though the posing is well conceived. Personally, we think that the laughing face would have been better than the tearful one. The comedy rather than the alleged pathos should have been played up.

Ruff Is Late.

Ralph Ruffner writes that we can "step on" this one, and continues:

> For the benefit of the boys who have not favored our past donations, owing to the amount of space they occupy and the expense of putting them across, want to tip you off to one that doesn't cost a cent. We have found it a most pleasant means of banging 'em in the eye with a laugh and at the same time calling very, very definite attention to a forthcoming production.
> In this instance we will take Elsie Ferguson in "The Rose of the World." The usual method would be to announce her coming with a single slide. We use ten, adopting the K.C.B. style of disconnected sentences. During the running of these slides the audience is as quiet as "mice" except where the laughs ooze through. About the fifth slide it begins to get on their nerves, and the tenth slide drops 'em over the cliffff. Invariably the slides get a big hand, and when an audience will applaud an ad it shows conclusively where and how it hit.
> To begin with, we aim to grab their attention by our opening line, thus:
>
> Slide 1. "Here's a tough one:
> If you were a beautiful young woman and your first husband
> Slide 2. had been a dashing army officer who had died a hero, and your second husband was > Slide 3. an old man of title and wealth, but stupid and so forth, whom you had married in a moment
> Slide 4. of weakness and > Slide 5. you found your love for your first husband growing stronger and stronger until > Slide 6. you could not bear the presence of your second husband, and to complicate matters
> Slide 7. if your first husband's best friend fell in love with you probabilities are you would > Slide 8. beat it
> Slide 9. down
> Slide 10. here early Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and see Elsie Ferguson in "Rose of the World."
> Slide 11. We thank you."
> The foregoing text was taken from the press book furnished by Artcraft. We have altered it in one or two places to make room for a grin. Cut out all music during the running of the set; the silence serves as an added incentive to be alert for the unusual—and they'll find it.
> I would be glad to read through the department the results attending the use of the idea and suggestions for further embellishments. We are firm believers that an ad accompanied by a laugh is the best kind of an ad, consequently we eternally seek the humorous side of the public, and humor is entertainment personified.

Just so! Now if Ruff will reach down his copy of Picture Theater Advertising and turn to page 54——" It has been a good idea for several years back. We forget who first sent the idea in, but it was someone in the mid-west, and the scheme has been worked to advantage innumerable times. We like very much Ruff's advertisement for Captain of His Soul, but we think that the companion advertisement for the Columbia in the same issue is about as bad as they come. The artist has chopped up the lettering until you have to take a day off to find out what it is all about. That Apostle of Originality Ruff has on his staff should be persuaded to give the titles half a chance. That's what the advertising is for. Any artist who draws a title in interrupted lines is a traitor and should be shot at sunrise. Ruff sends in some billboard studies. The two Jensen and Von Herberg houses maintain 55 stands weekly, all painted. About the niftiest is that for the Columbia, shown here. The lettering and frame are in gold with the panel in green. It is a 24-sheet size. We do not like as well a set in which the star's name is painted in two colors—red and black—the upper half red and the lower black. Both colors have the same photographic value, so that the contrast does not show in the cut, but we do not like two colored letters or letters that are set into a panel of two colors. They are not as easily read, and the chief aim of the billboard should be to get the legend read quickly and clearly. No one has time to stop and puzzle a billboard out. In the cut the streamer is green and the house name in white. The third example shows the star's name in white on black and the comedy in red. This is a better scheme. Legibility should be the first consideration, and all else should defer to this. Ruffner explains that his principals believe in spending five dollars to bring in five dollars in the hope that more than five dollars will come in, and adds "The fear of spending money keeps a lot of guys from its companionship." There is a whole bookful in that quotation.

Gosh!

Think of spending $4,000 for advertising for a single picture! That is what S. Barret McCormick did for "My Four Years in Germany," at the Circle, Indianapolis, but he had the picture for two weeks (a record for a city the size of Indianapolis), and he went out into the country to get the patronage he needed. The Circle seats 3,100 people, and gave six shows a day for fourteen days. As the picture played to practically packed houses all of the time, it played to about 60,400 more persons than the population of the town. But

Mr. McCormick did not merely hire the picture and let it make good for him. He knows that cannot be done. He booked the attraction and then set out to get his money on it. He knew that the former Ambassador was due in Indianapolis to speak for the Liberty Loan drive. He hooked up with the Loan Committee and he arranged to get the film pre-release so that it might open the day following the appearance of the distinguished visitor. The newspapers, as a matter of news, ran considerable material on the Ambassador for several days before his arrival, and McCormick hooked up with this by announcing the appearances of the speaker in his advertising. He used five-column advertisements to start the campaign and they ran the length of the page. The film barely made connections, but it got to town the evening before the opening, coming by special messenger. Meantime the country for a radius of fifty miles had been billed like a circus, and a large portion of the patronage consisted of persons who came from the outlying districts to see the film, for stress was laid upon the fact that this was an exclusive booking and that the film would not be seen in Indianapolis at any other house. Doubtless considerable money was brought into town to the local merchants by the visitors. After the first day the advertising included indorsements from the Mayor, the Defense Committee, and others, and one large department store even included a commendation of the film in its own advertising for the good of the propaganda. Every bit of the publicity given Mr. Gerard naturally reacted in favor of the picture from the smallest newspaper paragraph to the parade of 40,000 which the Ambassador lead and the rousing big meeting in the municipal hall it all worked for McCormick. But Mr. McCormick did not cheapen the presence of the author by seeking to arrange for a personal appearance at the house. He knew that such a move would defeat his own ends. He merely took the publicity that came to him naturally, worked in with the Loan Committee in giving all possible publicity to the appearance of the star of the loan drive—and broke another record. Four thousand dollars for a two weeks' advertising campaign is a lot of money, but it was only a fleabite to what it

NOTICE.

Owing to illness, Mr. Sargent will be unable to reply to any inquiries whether a return envelope accompanies the questions or not. No exceptions to this rule can be made, perhaps, for several months.

Not the Idea.

WRITES an earnest inquirer: "As I understand your idea, you want us authors to keep on writing stories without trying to sell until the market gets good. Now suppose it takes two or three years for the market to improve and in that time I have written between one and two hundred stories. Am I to send out those stories in a batch? It seems to me that if all beginners followed your advice the market would be glutted." We think that if the correspondent keeps on writing for two years he will not, at the end of that period, send out those two hundred stories. He will find that about three-fourths of them are so poor as compared with his later work that he will be ashamed to offer them for sale in the condition in which they are in. The real idea of the waiting policy is not to have a huge store of ideas with which to flood the market, but to hold back the ideas that will not sell now against the time there is a demand, and, meanwhile, to make such progress in writing as to be able to realize that the stuff stored up is merely the foundation of a better story in every way. If the average author writes two hundred stories in two or three years (and this is far too many) he cannot but arrive at a point of judgment where he can see the faults of those early stories. He will not use them as mailing material, but as the foundations upon which to build better and stronger stories in the light of the newly acquired experience. The approximation to perfection comes only with practise, and the greater the practise the more nearly perfect is the product. We do not think it possible for a man or woman to write two hundred stories and not learn something from the endeavor, and since this is the case, the writing of the two hundredth will help the sale of the first production when the proper time comes. Don't sit with your stories in your lap all ready to dump them into the first available market. Fix them up before you send them out, and send them singly.

Ware the Wildcats.

Shun those local companies that are springing up all over the country. Possibly some of them will pay at first while the money from stock sales is coming in, but most of them are stock-selling schemes and nothing more, and they are not buying stories. You stand no chance at all in such a case.

A New One.

One author at least showed some originality when he sent out a couple of scripts with "Liberty Bonds accepted for this story" typed across the face. The trouble was that the smallest Liberty Bond was worth more than the story.

Two Opinions.

One old-timer writes that the market is completely dead, and another of the old guard writes that he has turned again from fiction to photoplay "on account of the growing demand." You may take your choice.

Too Long.

A beginner writes that he is putting in ten hours a day studying photoplay writing, but that he seems to make no progress. He is overdoing it. A person can go stale on ten hours a day at any job. Put in two or three hours a day and you are doing about all you can do.

A Copyright Question.

An author wants to know if he can use an incident related in a news dispatch from the front. There is a copyright line over the story, which is sent out by a news-gathering syndicate. The incident will work in nicely in a story he is writing, and he wants to know how to get the right to use it. If he is certain that the material appeared as a news item, no copyright line will protect the matter. News is in the public domain and cannot be protected by copyright, no matter if a copyright line is used above it. It has been ruled that even a fictitious incident presented as news loses its privilege if so presented, and the writer can lift the matter without arrangement with any one. Copyright in such a case could apply only to the special form of words in which the story is told.

Telling the Director.

Authors are too fond of trying to boss the directors by inserting in their stories elaborate explanations of just how a thing should be made. This is not only useless, but irritating. The studio staffs know how to do their work. They ask only for stories to produce and to clutter up a manuscript with elaborate details as to how to get tableau and light effects or how to build the clock in which the ever-present papers are hidden is an excess of care that will bring nothing to the author save rejection slips. Depend upon your story. Do not trust to light effects to excuse an absence of plot.

Hoist Up.

Last week we invested in a bookkeeper's stool and had it cut down to a 24-inch height. Then we put on socket casters and now we write sitting on the seat and not on a pile of newspapers balanced on the top. Regular typewriter chairs do not come this height, but it is a comfort to be able to get your elbows above the work. Try it some time by building up a chair, and if you like it you can have a platform made that will raise an ordinary kitchen chair to the proper height if you do not want to go to the cost of a special stool.

Changing Over.

A writer says that he is going out of town for the summer and wants to know if changing over to a portable machine will spoil his touch on one of the heavier makes when he returns to it in the fall. We think that he will have trouble as to speed for a couple of weeks on both changes, but this letting down in speed is only temporary, and the portable machines are very handy if one is moving about much. We ship our regular machines if we expect to be out of town for more than two weeks, and find the scheme works well and is not as expensive as it sounds, but then we have a battery of machines and can start one or two machines off ahead of our own departure, ensuring the arrival of the machine before we get into the new town.

Indigestion.

"I have been floundering around trying to digest what I have read in books and magazines," comments a student. Usually too many books bring on an attack of acute indigestion. It is better to carefully select one standard text book, by getting from the public library what they have on the subject and making a selection. Master the teachings in that and then—and not until then—read the others, accepting as fact only such statements as may logically be adopted. Each writer on photoplay technique—and there are no exceptions—had his personal preferences, which may be in direct violation of the preferences of others, though both may be substantially correct. One author, for instance, may number his scenes in the middle of the page, a second may favor a marginal numbering, and a third declare for the inset number. All three forms would be substantially correct, and to keep changing the placing of the scene number would militate against the work of the student. It is best to accept a form that is simple and convenient and to adhere to this until a studio job is had, when, of course, the author will use the form most favored in that studio. Nothing is more confusing to the beginner than to try to reconcile the teachings of half a dozen writers, where the differences are merely matters of opinion. Accept one good form and adhere to that.

Don't Send Them In.

It seems to be necessary again to remind authors that we will not read manuscript stories. We cannot spare the time, for one thing, and we will not make the time, for another. This applies with equal force to fragments of a script. Don't send them, please.

Do It, Anyhow.

In commenting upon a script recently, the Writer's Magazine said that it was not necesary to type with author's name and address upon every sheet of manuscript, "though it did no harm." It is not necessary, it is very true, but it is a wise precaution against the loss of one or more sheets, and rubber stamps are so cheap that no author should omit this precaution.

Criticism.

There is only one criticism that really amounts to anything, and this begins "enclosed please find release slip for ——."

Add This.

When you say that a plot of yours is absolutely new, add "to me." There is nothing to prevent someone else from thinking of the same thing, and it may be that you have been beaten to it.

Use the Library.

If your home library is small, learn to use the books in the public library. If you have no late encyclopedia and are not certain of your facts, take the time to go to the library and look up the data, that you may get it right. You will find most librarians anxious to help you, and in time you'll learn your way about without assistance.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A standard and tested handbook for the experienced writer of picture plots as well as for the beginner. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The Transverter.

On my recent visit to Cleveland I called upon the Hertner Electric Company, makers of the Transverter, and had a pleasant visit with D. C. Cookingham, sales manager.

Since the Transverter first appeared, several improvements have been made in its construction, the most important ones being the ventilating system and the construction of the coupling which joins the AC rotor with the DC generator shaft.

The first machines built were fitted with couplings of machinery steel. These couplings were keyed and had a pressed fit on the rotor shafts, the DC armature shaft being keyed and given an easy slip fit into the coupling. The company's experience was that if a customer removed the DC armature for the purpose of truing up the commutator there was a good chance of the end of the shaft, designed to fit into the coupling, becoming slightly injured and that if while in that condition it were forced into the coupling, it would be difficult to remove the armature when occasion again required. The first change made in order to eliminate this possibility was to fit the machines with couplings which were hardened and ground. The dissimilarity of metals composing such a coupling and shaft to a large extent eliminated the possibility of the shaft sticking in a coupling so tight that it could not be drawn out.

This did not, however, eliminate the possibility of rust accumulating so as to effectively join the coupling and shaft and prevent the two being taken apart and, in order to eliminate all of these possibilities, the later machines have been fitted with a flange type of coupling, either half of which is keyed and has a tight pressed fit on its respective shaft. In the outer edge of the flange of this coupling is a ⅝ square pin rigidly attached to one-half of the coupling and having an easy fit in a slot milled into the flange of the other half of the coupling. This is much stronger than the original type coupling and makes the taking down of the machine a very simple matter.

At the time this improvement was made the machines were fitted with a centrifugal type fan and a new type center section. The design of the fan is such that it sets between the two halves of the coupling and is driven by the same driving pin as is used for driving the DC armature. The center section of the machine which joins the AC stator to the DC generator frame has four long, narrow openings, which permit the fan to draw a much larger volume of air both up through the AC motor, down through the DC generator, and out through the openings in the center section. About four times as much air is drawn through these new type machines as through the older type, which is, of course, a wonderful improvement in the ventilating system, so that while the machines have the same capacity rating as originally, they will run much cooler.

Another improvement noticed is in the design of the inspection covers, four of which are in the top yoke to facilitate inspection of the brushes and commutator, and to provide ventilation. In the original design of the machine it was necessary to remove screws in order to remove these inspection covers. The new design is such that one need only back the screws off in order to remove them. The screws cannot be taken out, therefore there is no possibility of accidentally dropping one of them down into the machine where it could cause damage.

Some improvements have also been made in Transverter cabinet panels. They are now made entirely of steel, the panels "A" and "B" having the generator field regulator, voltmeter and ampere meter mounted on the steel door which forms the face of the cabinet. This door is hinged so that when open all mechanism and connections are accessible.

One notable improvement is the addition of a double coil relay in panels supplied with double arc transverters. Before explaining what the relay accomplishes it is well to review the current characteristics of double arc transverters. It will be recalled that in my first description of the Transverter, in going from one arc to two, the amperage remained constant and the voltage delivery of the generator doubled.

It is stated by the engineer and designer of the Transverter, J. H. Hertner, that in order to get constant current over an operating voltage range from 50 to 110, which is required for one or two arcs respectively when wired in series, a generator having an open circuit voltage of approximately 200 or more must be used, and that such a high voltage would seriously overheat the shunt fields of the generator were some one to negligently permit the machine to run on open circuit for more than a short time. It is in order to prevent such a possibility that a relay is used having its windings in series with the shunt fields and the regulator. This relay is adjusted for a maximum voltage. When the voltage exceeds that it automatically inserts the entire resistance of the field regulator in the field circuit. This is likely to occur only in case of the machine being run open circuited with strong field adjustment, but when all of the regulator's resistance is inserted in the field circuit it weakens the generator's field strength to such an extent as to cut down the open circuit voltage of the machine to much less than that which the fields would be capable of standing continuously, and in this way it protects the field coils against overheating. As soon as the arc is struck the relay restores the regulator connections to normal operating conditions, and in order to make doubly sure it will do so the entire current of the arc load is passed through a series coil, which is also on the relay, but in such position as to reverse the action of the relay's working element. This also compensates for any slight misadjustment of the relay which may take place, due to wear or other cause. In short the additional feature safeguards the machine against the human failings.

The Argus Lamp & Appliance Company.

The Argus Lamp & Appliance Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, is marketing an apparatus known as the Sheck Universal Adapter—same being a secondary lamphouse designed to be attached to the front end of the regular lamphouse of standard projectors. The apparatus I have examined and find that with some late improvements tending to strengthen the construction, it will meet all the requirements of the service it will be called upon to perform.

The Adapter is attached to the regular projector lamphouse by removing the condenser casing therefrom and drilling four holes through the front end to receive the holding bolts. It has all of the adjustments necessary to focus the incandescent lamp, has ample ventilation and the necessary adjustments for handling the mirror to focus the filament image between the filament coils of the lamp. This apparatus has the approval of the Projection Department and is recommended for favorable consideration to those proposing to install Mazda Projector Lamps.

During a recent visit to the office of the Argus Lamp & Appliance Company I had the privilege of meeting Mr. Cudmore, who is one of those solid, substantial citizens, fully and entirely filling the chair he occupies. Also, according to the report of mutual friends, Cudmore is what our friend the Swede would term "a Guide Faller."

The arguments I have had with Brother Cudmore had to do with certain statements made in Argus Lamp & Appliance Company bulletins and advertisements. Friend Cudmore has made certain claims as to the maximum possibilities of the Mazda lamp, with which I was not able to agree, but this has nothing whatever to do with the apparatus the company is marketing. My position with regard to the limitations of the Mazda lamp in its present stage is well known and needs no repetition. The Mazda unquestionably has a field, which it will fill and fill very acceptably. Mr. Cudmore says that it is not the intention or practice of the Argus Lamp & Appliance Company to try to displace the carbon-arc for motion picture projection in motion picture theaters or any other places where the present carbon-arc motion picture projection apparatus and the projection conditions are not within the limitations of present types of Mazda projector lamps as established and recommended by the Mazda lamp manufacturers. In proof of this he submits the fact that in every case the company insists on having complete information relating to present carbon-arc equipment before making recommendations for the installation of Argus equipment with Mazda projector lamps.

He Seconds the Motion.

Evan Skelly, New Orleans, Louisiana, arises, makes his bow, gets the floor, and seconds the motion as follows:

> I second the motion that a left hand projection machine be placed on the market. In my opinion W. L. Russell, Deming, New Mexico, has the right idea. I agree with his contention that the projectionist should be stationed between the projectors. Now that very nearly all projectionists in this country know how to construct a dissolver for their projectors, it is no longer necessary that the machines be placed so close together. By having them spaced a little further apart all the necessary instruments, such as voltmeter, ammeter, switches, telephone, shelf for the slides and rack for tools can be placed between them. In my opinion the first projection machine manufacturer who takes this step will prosper thereby. I think the projectionists of the country should wake up and express their views on this subject. It is both interesting and important. Will you kindly send me a folder, describing the new Westinghouse Krantz automatic jack switch?

You have sent no street address, therefore I could not send a folder. Address the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., East Pittsburgh, Pa., Publicity Department. They will be glad to forward the folder you desire. By the way, what has become of our old friend, Turo Gluckstman?

Projecting Small Picture on Short Throw.

Charles E. Keeril, Kansas City, Missouri, contributes the following:

In May 11 issue I see where Mayo Foster, Nashville, Tennessee, asks about projecting an 8-foot picture at 40 feet. I am a cameraman with Gaumont News, also run a projector for a church occasionally, using an Edison Exhibition Model machine. The current through a Power's 15-25 ampere rheostat. Project a 7½-foot picture at 40 feet. The wiring is too small, and heats up when rheostat is adjusted for 15 amperes. In spite of these handicaps I get a fairly good picture if the film is of ordinary density, though it is not, of course, what one would call brilliant. Current, A. C.; carbons, 9-16 inch Electra; screen, a heavy, duplex window shade, white on one side and green on the other. In spite of low amperage, which must be under 15, I get a clear field without any unusual amount of attention; probably a little greater frequency of carbon feeding is required than when using heavy amperage. Cannot say for certain, as I have handled high amperage arc but very little. I contribute this in the hope that it may be of use, and thus partly repay you for the aid I have had from your department. Have had several arguments with a projectionist and a photographer about distance of projection. You say in second edition of Handbook that, provided picture size remains the same, distance of projection has little effect on screen illumination. You may have changed this in the third edition (Not materially.—Ed.), if so, I beg pardon for what follows: The projectionist I discussed this with said the throw had a very great effect on two pictures of the same size, with the same amount of current, but was unable to tell me why. The photographer dropped a hint which caused me to reason as follows: He said that long focus lenses were slower than the short focal length ones, which caused me to think that the aperture acts the same as the diaphragm of a photographic lens, except that it is fixed instead of adjustable. By this I mean that the aperture limits the opening of the lens the same as does a between-the-lens diaphragm. Since the aperture is fixed for lenses of all foci, the shorter the foci the faster the lens. This is illustrated by two lenses of 6 and 10-inch focal length, but both having an effective diameter of one inch, the speed for the former being F-6 and the latter F-10. This tends to prove that long focal length projection lenses do not pass as much light as those of shorter focal length. Where the lost light goes I do not know, though it is probable it is lost in the spread of the beam, as shown in your light ray experiments. It may be that all I have said is just another way of looking at the facts you have proven by your experiments. Best wishes to yourself and the World.

Without entering into any discussion of your own letter, Friend Keeril, let us examine into the matter for a moment. In the first place, I think I may say there is little or no similarity in photographic action and projection action, as applied to the objective lens. The former deals entirely with what amounts to a converging ray of light, whereas the latter must handle a more or less sharply diverging ray. I speak of the whole volume of light directed toward the lens as a "ray." The projection machine aperture cannot, I think, be viewed at all in the light of a diaphragm. If we could get the condenser back far enough to cause the short focal length projection lens and its longer focal length brother to receive an equally diverging ray, and at the same time keep the arc an equal distance from the condenser, then I see no reason why the light delivered to the screen by both lenses will not be equal, or substantially so. In practice we cannot, however, do this, but we may approach near enough by intelligent application of the knowledge we possess to make the actual difference pretty nearly indiscernible, except in extreme cases. This is helped out by the fact that there is somewhat less light absorption and reflection in the thinner, flatter lenses of the long focal length lenses; also the longer focal length lens gives sharper definition, and, I personally believe, utilizes to better advantage the light delivered to it by the condenser. By this latter I mean that there will be less reflection loss inside the lens, and that the sharper definition gives better contrast and an illusion of greater brilliancy per lumen. Taken altogether the projectionist you argued with is right, but only so in a very modified way; also he probably formed his conclusions from observation alone, and under conditions which gave him no real information. It requires real knowledge to properly match up a long focal length projection optical train, and the projectionist by his "I don't know why" disclosed the fact that he possessed no knowledge. He is proceeding by guess—by rule o' thumb. He knew that he was unable to get as much light on a screen of given size with a long focal length lens as with one of short E. F. But what he did not know was that most, if not all, the difference was chargeable entirely to his unintelligent handling of the long focal length optical train. He did not, for instance, know that it is quite possible to have a considerably narrower main shutter blade with a medium long focal length lens than with a very short focal length lens, thus saving materially in light delivered to the screen. The same applies to a very long focal length lens, though its application becomes difficult by reason of mechanical limitations of projectors. In closing, I might add that there is still much to be done in the perfection of the optical train of the projector. The light loss we have been discussing mostly occurs between aperture and lens, though there are also other quite important factors.

A Queer Case of Trouble.

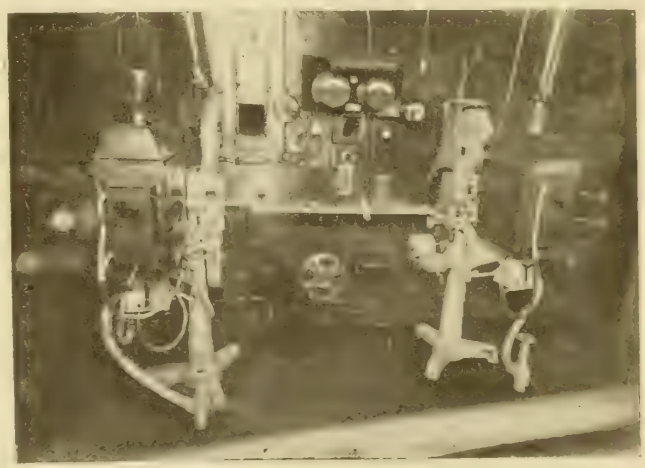
From a small town in Ohio came a letter from a theater manager setting forth the following:

> City current has been changed from 200 D. C. to 110 A. C. Have Simplex projector, 75 foot throw and 14 foot picture. Everything was fine before the change, using D. C. to D. C. Fort Wayne Compensare. After change in current supply we installed Fort Wayne Hand Compensare (means A. C. to A. C. Compensare.—Ed.), 14-30-60 amperes, using National ⅝ cored above and ⅝ special below. Trouble developed at once, as follows: During an evening's run both the compensare and wires from it to lamp get very hot—so hot I cannot hold my hand on them. Carbons get red about one inch from arc. Cannot get an arc on the 30 ampere notch; on the 60 it is weak. Thinking trouble was in compensare, I borrowed another, it being a Fort Wayne 20-40-60 ampere machine. With it we can get an arc at 40 and a better one at 60, but the arc is weak, and far from what it should be; also the compensare and wires get hot. Now I used this compensare in another town for six years without the least trouble. The city electrician says I must get a special Simplex A. C. carbon holder, as these we have are for D. C., and that that is what my trouble is. Wires to compensare were not changed, but from compensare to lamp heavier wires were installed. Please advise me as what I must do.

Sorry, but guess I'm stuck myself. Your city electrician is full of prunes. There is no such thing as an A. C. or D. C. carbon holder, as you should know if you used A. C. for projection for six years. I am putting the thing up to our readers. All I can see which could possibly account for such a condition is (A) a compensarc working on current of widely different cycle than that it was made for, but this would not account for the hot wires. (B) A very heavy ground in the lamp, but a ground as heavy as this could hardly last any length of time without making itself so evident that you would see it. (C) That you are overloading your compensarc by having supply voltage higher than it is supposed to be, and expecting too much of the A. C. arc. But this is knocked out by the fact that under that condition you should get an arc at the 14 and 30 position. Another queer thing is that, whereas you say you get a weak arc, still the carbons get red for an inch from their tips, which would indicate ample current flow. I might also think you are used to a D. C. arc and are expecting too much from A. C., but you say you used A. C. for six years. Well, I give it up. Let us hear from you, gentle readers, if you have a solution to offer.

One of the Regular Fellers.

Over in Cleveland there is a whole-souled, large-bodied, deep-voiced projectionist named Howard Codding. Codding is one of those reg'lar fellars; one of the boys it does one's soul good to meet. You can see his hand sticking out in welcome while you are half a block away.



You can read your welcome in his face and sense it in his manner. I like to have men like Howard Codding for my friends, but if he were my enemy I think I would sidestep Cleveland or be prepared to run on sight. I know how it feels when he slaps you good-naturedly on the back. If he landed a punch in another spirit, I am afraid it would be anything even faintly resembling funny. And Codding is a good projectionist too. The light on his screen is as pure and brilliant as any I have ever looked at. In fact, it is too much so. It is chalky white. Friend Manager should secure for Friend Codding two amberlux lenses. With them installed the picture at the Monarch, where Codding holds forth, would be what is commonly termed a "peach." The photograph shows Codding's operating room, but I think it must have been taken the morning after the night before when the Simplex projectors had been out on a spree. Really those machines stand as straight and true as plumb line, but the wide angle lens has caused such distortion that the right hand machine seems about ready to fall over. Observe beneath the lamphouse Codding's gentle hint to Friend Manager that he wants a couple of automatic arc controllers. Also take note of the volt and ammeter between the observation ports. The walls of the room are black.

And now I want it to be clearly understood that the foregoing is not a mere bouquet of roses. I mean every word of it. Codding is a friend of the kind that is worth having, and more than that he is a distinctly high class projectionist. He has been at the Monarch theater for several years.

From Ireland.

Patrick Murphy, Waterford, Ireland, writes of conditions in Paddy's isle as follows:

> I have greatly enjoyed the third edition of the Handbook. Consider it the greatest work on projection of which I have any knowledge. I only wish we had a book like it on this side. As to conditions in Ireland, operating rooms vary as to size. Some are so small one can scarcely get into them, while others are built comfortably large. The usual rule is to allow about three feet between the two machines, and about two feet on the outside. But the builders generally make a hash of the operating room. As for ventilation, the lantern body (Lamphouse.—Ed.) has no vent for conducting the heat and gases away. A window in the top or side of the room is all there is. Our fire shutters are the same as described in your Handbook (Fig. 87), only they are released by pulling, or by the foot. The pull nearest the door releases all shutters, but the inside ones only release the one machine's shutter. As to projection machines in the early days Kham's dog movement (Beater movement.—Ed.) was a great favorite, though some places used Urban's dog movement machines. This type is still in use, but usually only in country towns. Pathe, Gaumont, Power's, Kalee, and Brockliss maltese cross machines are the ones most generally found in our cities and large towns; also the Ernemann, a German machine, was a great favorite before the war, and there are still hundreds of them in use. My theater has Gaumont machines installed, and they give a rock-steady projection; also a very clear picture. There are only three cities in Ireland (Large cities, Brother Murphy undoubtedly means.—Ed). First of all is Dublin, the capital, then Belfast, means.—Ed). First of all is Dublin, the capital, then Belfast, and Cork. Dublin's current is 3 phase A. C., 200 volt for lighting, and 346 for power. When the picture houses first opened the power company allowed them to work off the mains. The usual way was to use a step-down transformer with 200 volt primary and 100 volt secondary. This was then again reduced through resistance, the usual amperage being 60, some large houses using 100. Belfast supply is 220 and 440 D. C., three wire system. Houses there usually work off a motor generator, using a 440 volt motor, the generator delivering 80 volts. Sixty amperes is the most usual thing. The box is wired to throw the D. P. switch across 440 volts through resistance in case of breakdown. These resistances usually deliver 60 to 70 amperes. Some houses prefer to generate their own supply, using gas engine power. In such cases two generators are coupled together, one generating 110 volts for lighting, the other 80 volts for projection. There are ten such installations in Belfast. As for Cork, I don't know what the conditions are, never having worked there. Size of pictures varies according to idea of individual managers, but, as a rule, they are comparatively small. Our theaters have 60 to 70-foot throws, and mostly use 3-inch and 4-inch projection lenses, though some use 4½-inch, which gives about a 15.5-foot picture. The usual speed of projection is close to 60, or, roughly, 1,000 feet in 15 minutes. But this is not always adhered to. In some of the continuous shows on busy nights managers get their operators to put the films through at a disgraceful speed. The operating room staff consists of chief operator, assistant and film boy. Some houses open at 1:30 or 2 p. m., and the staff has to peg away until 10:30 p. m. Other houses run two shifts, one relieving the other at about 6 p. m., but these houses are few and far between. Condition of films is generally good, only some stupid boys keep ruining the titles, also cutting holes in the ends of the reels of film (Wonder if he means the change-over punching we are ourselves cursed with.—Ed.). The operators are not licensed, and they have no union, all of which brings about a nice (?) state of affairs. Wages in the cities are disgracefully small, and it is no uncommon thing for boys to take chief operators' places at from £1, 5s to £1, 10s. The net result is that a really capable man has no chance at all. Conditions in Belfast are better in this respect than in Dublin. I find country positions are the better paid. The reason for this is that most smaller towns are lighted by gas, and the operator has to take charge of a gas engine electric generating plant, and thus the operator-electrician comes into his own. A capable man may, under these circumstances, command from £2 10 s to £3 a week and only have one or two shows a night.

Well, boys, what do you think of that. A competent man can, under the very best circumstances, command almost $15.00 a week (£1 equals about $4.85), but in cities it goes as low as about $6.00 a week. Of course it isn't quite as bad as it looks on the surface, because the worker is not accustomed to and does not expect the United States standard of living. I understand, however, that for an equal standard of living it costs about as much to live in England or Ireland as in this country. We certainly are obliged to Brother Murphy for his very interesting letter. It will be observed that he has, for the most part, used our terms. This is, I presume, because he has a Handbook and has applied them in his letter. As I understand it the operating room is mostly called a "Box" over there, and D. C. is termed "continuous current." Maybe that does not apply in Ireland, however. You will note the comparatively high line voltage and the, in some cases, queer pressures, as, for instance, 346 volts. It is also of interest to know that the old, and I had supposed obsolete, beater (dog) movement is still in at least limited use in Ireland. I would recommend to Irish projectionists a good, strong organization. They surely do need it.

Supervisor of Motion Pictures.

From an old correspondent, W. S. Turnpaugh, Corsicana, Texas, comes the following:

> I have an idea for a device for rectifying A. C. into D. C. Ibelieve it can be used in conjunction with mercury arc rectifiers, eliminating the tube, also with compensarcs. It would have only one moving part, which, once set, would never be changed. Could also be used for storage battery work, and would cost but little by comparison with present rectifying devices. This information is, I know, rather meager, but the way I dope it out it is O. K. What would be your opinion of such an animal. I am on a new job now. Am supervisor of motion pictures for the Community Motion Picture Bureau of the Southern District. My duty is to travel from one army camp or aviation field to another looking after the welfare of a lot of projection machines and their appliances. There are several states in this district, so I am on my way quite a bit of the time, but I like it. Best wishes to you.

Really, old man, I could express no opinion having the slightest value from the data provided. Glad you like your new job. Better make a model and give it a tryout, then we shall see what we shall see. Glad you called Come again.

Bell & Howell Splicer.

The firm of Bell and Howell, Chicago, makers of motion picture machinery de luxe, has perfected a film splicer designed for studio use which is remarkable. Inasmuch as it is designed for use only in studios (the process is too slow, I think, to ever find favor in exchanges, and is clear out of the question for theater use) there is no need for a technical description of the machine itself, except to say that it is very sturdily built. The splice it makes is the remarkable part. It is a bevel splice, and is only about 1/32 of an inch wide. In a film 6.5 thousandths of an inch thick the Bell and Howell splice is only 8 thousandths of an inch thick. I saw the splicer in operation at the American Film Company's studios in Chicago. It is necessary to use a slow-drying cement, and the process is itself slow and rather complicated, but the splice seems to be very strong, the slow-drying cement welding the film together. The opinion at the American plant was that it was especially adapted for negative films. For myself, I would first have to have it very thoroughly demonstrated that the splice would stand up when used in positive.

New Contract.

Leroy Holt, Waco, Texas, orders a new Handbook, and says:

> Well, we are having a nice time down here in the Lone Star State. Just got a new contract put through without much grumbling from friend manager, though just a little, of course, for the sake of appearances. We have an army cantonment near us, and there are several houses out there. A new airdome opens next Sunday, and taken altogether, No. 266 is doing very well, thank you. Wish yourself and the department all kinds of good luck.

You did well to get a Handbook, Brother Holt. The projectionist without the educational books of his profession is not doing himself, his employer, his union or the moving picture industry justice. I am very glad indeed to hear that the Waco men are doing well and that 266 is prospering. Let the good work go on.

Denies Responsibility.

In the account of my late visit to Chicago I gave a somewhat detailed account of viewing the opening night showing of the "Hearts of the World," in course of which I commented on the projection of the picture. I said, "The name of the chief projectionist was set forth in the program as Benjamin Turner. If Mr. Turner was in charge the work was small credit to him." Since my return, Turner has called me up and explained that after arrival in Chicago with the show he was tied up with the board of censors almost until the opening of the show: that he employed two Chicago projectionists who were highly recommended to him as first class men, and that he was, under the circumstances, obliged to depend on them.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

Mr. Rothapfel's Right-Hand Man.

WE found the delightful Doctor Riesenfeld, musical director of those twin monuments to the picture industry, the Rialto and the Rivoli, seated at an ordinary business desk and looking for all the world like a broker or some magnate of finance. Yet there was a difference in his surroundings that breathed of the finer arts. A vase of flowers stood conspicuously in the center of the desk obstructing our view of the doctor's classic profile, and we proceeded to remove the flowers. Manuscript music lay carelessly about the top, and a toy metronome of beautiful workmanship spoke eloquently of his profession.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

Looking about his neat little studio-office one found paintings in oil (not imitations, but original work), a few shelves of books treating of many phases of musical endeavor, some exquisite charcoal drawings, one or two photographs, and the musician's ever reliable tool, a piano. The fine taste displayed in the furniture scheme makes this little den, hidden away as it is, on one of the upper floors of the Rialto, most cozy and homelike. Nothing offends the eye or jars the ear. The atmosphere soothes and pleases. In fact the temptation to remain in these pleasant surroundings requires strength of will to resist.

"Has the advance in picture music kept pace with the advance in picture making?" we asked the genial Hugo.

"I have little chance to see what the other theaters are doing, but, speaking for myself and the work which we are accomplishing here, I can assure you that we are taking more pains, exerting more effort, and considering more detail than we formerly did; say, two years ago. Music for the picture has become one of the outstanding features in presenting features to the public. The novelty of the 'movies' has worn off, and our patrons demand more than 'just pictures.' At the same time we always give the picture first place. Never do we allow our music to predominate over the picture situations. Never do we permit the melodies to transcend the scenes. Our music must fittingly accompany the picture just as one would accompany the voice. Another point in which we have progressed is in treating the psychological aspect of the picture. Formerly this side was utterly ignored, and for that reason the picture lost much of its musical meaning. We look beneath the surface and get at the underlying motive of each scene. Mere titles don't tell us the story. We analyze the action and place the scenes in their definite position with regard to the climax of the plot."

The earnestness which he put into his discourse theme lit up and almost transfigured his face. No one seeing him expounding his theory could possibly doubt his sincerity and strong love for his work.

"The ideal accompaniment for pictures," he continued, "would be an orchestra where the brass instruments were absent. Because of the monotony of the strings and woodwind it would be necessary to replace the brass with a new kind of instrument—a smaller trumpet with less volume, trombones of a smaller size, and so forth. The color should be the same, but the blare should be eradicated and the volume diminished. No matter how piano the brass section play it overbalances the orchestra to a certain extent."

This is decidedly a new idea, and as America is the home of invention, there is no doubt that the day will arrive if the need becomes strong, when picture theaters will have orchestras composed of different and new instruments. There is no question that the brass section as now found in symphony orchestras does not exactly fill the bill for pictures. The coloring is too decided, too well defined and clear cut to allow much beauty of shading.

"What constitutes a good conductor for pictures?" we asked.

"First let me say that showmanship has nothing to do with conductorship. It is said of Raphael that had he been bereft of hands he still would have been a great painter. The same holds with a conductor. His graceful gestures and good stage presence are not the attributes that make him a great leader. A good conductor for pictures is one that is a thorough musician—he cannot be too thorough—who forgets what he has learned, disregards all markings, and reads his score in the picture. He must play to screen action, and his dynamic effects must coincide with those on the film. Of course this does not hold when a special score has been written for the picture, because the composer places his markings and expects that they will be adhered to. But when you must fit your picture with music that has its own interpretation and which must be changed to suit yours, one is forced to transgress many of the rules of good musicianship."

Mr. Riesenfeld is extremely conscientious and is continually at war with himself on the subject of picture setting. His inherent sense of the artistic and his reverence for the great works of the masters rebel within him when he is forced to distort their music to fit a scene adequately. He is not the self satisfied person that you would expect.

"Frequently, after spending many hours on a setting, I go away disgusted with the result of my efforts. It is not an unusual thing for my librarian to receive an early telephone call the morning following our completion of a score and be requested to change certain numbers therein. A good night's sleep clarifies one's vision, and I always find that the changes of the 'morning after' bring good results."

Mr. Riesenfeld compares the screen to opera without singing. His twenty years of grand opera experience has stood him in good stead. Frequently a scene recalls one similar in an opera of earlier days, and gives him his cue for proper musical interpretation of it. Of course, when he must fit pictures which are based on the stories of certain grand operas, he is at home, and the difficulties become very slight. Even while selecting numbers for light pictures his experience in comic opera can be drawn upon with telling effect. There is no question about it. A real conductor must be one of wide musical experience because of the wide scope of the picture industry today. Nothing is sacred to the film manufacturer if it will give him a good story that has in it a drawing capacity for box office receipts.

Our host kindly showed us the immense library of music which the Rialto and Rivoli use in putting together their respective weekly programs. The music is neatly arranged upon shelves and duly catalogued under characteristic names in alphabetical order. Two large rooms are needed to hold it all, and a librarian with two assistants is kept busy filing and setting up the music. There is nothing intricate about the system used in this library, for it follows along the usual method of tabulation. Conforming to the exacting demand for detail of S. L. Rothapfel, the managing director of both houses, necessitates the special arranging of many numbers that are out of print or for some reason cannot be procured for use. This has added to the library a large collection of almost invaluable stuff that can be used over and over again without fear of repetition. Besides this asset there are many original compositions by Mr. Riesenfeld called forth by some delicate or peculiar situation in a particular feature that in themselves are works of art and real value. Altogether, we were much impressed with this library, its methodical working and its magnitude, and left feeling that the high standard of efficiency in the musical department could be credited to that careful, clean, and clear-cut brain of born artist, Doctor Hugo Riesenfeld.

Music At the Rivoli.

During the week commencing May 19, the Rivoli theater offered a superb program of music. The Rivoli Symphony orchestra is gradually rounding into form, and is becoming a cohesive aggregation that will set a mark for itself in the near future. It takes a few weeks' practice for any large sized combination to get together and perform smoothly. Then the artistic touches can be brought out without fear of shambling.

The overture, "Mignon," by Ambrose Thomas, was conducted by Erno Rapee in a manner which delighted us indeed. This is the best work we have had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Rapee do. He is improving immensely, and the older leaders will have to look to their laurels if his advance in the art continues. We sincerely hope that our prediction is more than fulfilled.

A pretty little divertissement was the "Minuet L'Antique" danced by two little ladies from the Albertieri Ballet School. The setting was especially effective, and the accompaniment from behind stage consisting of a harp, flute and cello made the offering one which you could only associate with fairy land. These little touches are the things that make for true entertainment of a highly artistic nature. They rest the eye and brain while pleasing them both.

The setting for "Old Wives for New" compared favorably with the high standard already set by this house. The idea of telling musically the characters behind the different sets of hands as they are exposed to view showed a careful consideration, and fulfilled its mission to the uttermost. We knew the principals by what the music told us about their hands. This psychological point of view is well worth some thought, as it no doubt will have a stronger bearing on music for the pictures in the future. One thing that pleased us was the fact that when a title, "Home, Sweet Home," appeared the orchestra did NOT play the old familiar ballad bearing the same name. We feel that a more marked change of music to denote the change of location in the last reel would have been effective. Italy is so different in its atmosphere from America, and a sharp musical accentuation of this fact would make the story live.

Winnifred Marshall, a light lyric soprano, attempted "The Shadow Song," from Dinorah. The voice is pleasing, and, with the possible tendency for falling away from the true pitch, has wonderful technical ability. The aria was a little beyond the voice capability because of its immaturity. The foundation is there, and with years will come the necessary warmth of tone and breadth of timbre bespeaking success.

The comedy and organ solo closed one of the most satisfactory shows put on at the Rivoli.

French Music.

This war will make many changes in business, and the selling of music will, of necessity, undergo a radical one. The feeling against all that emanates from Germany or springs from the creative mind of its people will surely find expression in the field of music, and that expression will probably take the form of a distinct boycott. The progressive German and propagandist has done his work well in keeping German music in the foreground through every branch of the art. The best known songs come from Germany, the familiar operas are the German, the majority of programmed chamber music shows a large percentage of the German school, while in the orchestral and symphonic field we find practically the same majority.

The old masters of classics such as Johann Sebastian Bach, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Lizst will probably always be welcomed on the ground that though born in Germany they are international in their musical appeal. The few scholarly musicians who sufficiently antedate the war to remove the stigma of Hunnishness reduce the available music from this otherwise prolific source to a few hundred selections. The demand for good music grows greater continually, and the loss must be more than made up from other sources.

The French Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers keenly appreciates the chance of furthering the French school of music in America, and has sent Oscar Osso to thoroughly organize a branch office in New York to distribute the works of the thousands of French composers so little known in our land. The aim of the society is most laudable, and the method as outlined by Mr. Osso will commend itself to the general public.

"It is not our intention to burden the places of entertainment with heavy taxation for the performance rights to French music. That is, after all, a secondary consideration. We are here to educate the American public to the fact that there is a wealth of melodious and beautiful music which they have never heard, but which stands preeminently worthy of execution. Our ultimate plan embodies the idea of a chain of depots owned and operated by us where French music of all descriptions can be procured at a reasonable price. We are handicapped at present because of the poor transportation facilities, and find it difficult to obtain any quantity of saleable music. This condition will soon be remedied, and we will be in a position to supply all branches of the musical art with the best that France can offer.

"Regarding the taxing of theaters and other places of amusement for playing our copyrighted numbers we can only state that it is our intention to deal fairly by everybody. We want the American people to love our music, and the matter of a few dollars will not blind us to our first principle. Your picture theaters will receive special consideration, because we believe that they hold wonderful possibilities in the education of the masses to the better class of musical works. Whatever tax or fee we apportion to these places will be based upon an equitable principle that cannot fail to meet with hearty co-operation.

"Our entrance into the field will be most beneficial to places of amusement that provide music. The French people are proverbialiy gay and light hearted, and this shows strongly in the music of the nation. Competition is the life of trade, and when we begin to operate our influence should be felt in the reduction of fees already imposed by other societies. It will give the exhibitor a chance for choice in his music and not bind him to arbitrary taxes. We want your exhibitor to feel our friendship and realize that our hand is outstretched to help him in his musical needs."

Mr. Osso fully appreciates the fact that American exhibitors have not heretofore paid for the privilege of performing copyrighted music and thoroughly understands the difficulties that confront him in this new rule. He does not flaunt the law in our faces, but approaches us from the standpoint of our duty to the composer. We profit by his music, why not pay an insignificantly small sum to show our appreciation in tangible form. The French society has the benefit of the mistakes made by others, and should profit therefrom. The sense of justice seems to predominate over everything else in its propaganda, and we feel sure that if it plans carefully and acts with discretion the French Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers will become the real friend of the picture exhibitor.

Music in Public Parks.

Seattle, Washington, has for a number of years enjoyed public park concerts during the open season. An annual appropriation of $5,000 was made to pay for these concerts. One of the city fathers succeeding in blocking this appropriation this year on the ground of war economy. This action almost resulted in real war. The whole town, except that class of Pharasees who think any kind of pleasure, even good music, is sinful, protested. The Central Labor Council entered the most vigorous protest.

"Cheerfulness as usual," a fit sister to the slogan; "business as usual," with which this country was kept from the hysteria in the first dark days of war, was the desire expressed by the Central Labor Council in passing a resolution urging the park board and Mayor Hanson to reconsider action cutting off the annual appropriation of $5,000 for music in the parks, inferring that this city is fearful of defeat at the hands of the Kaiser and creating an atmosphere of gloom when the extreme reverse should be the order of the day. The resolution was forwarded by the moving picture operators, endorsed by the council, and the municipal affairs committee of the council instructed to convey the request to the mayor and park board.

This is practically the first instance upon record where the interests of the musician and picture operator coincided. Great credit is due the picture theater orchestras for their strenuous work in furthering a measure that they could not personally gain by, but which they fully appreciated as an advance in the art of music.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

A DAUGHTER OF THE WEST (Pathe—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante and Melodious. Suggest "Arioso"—Frey, "Clairs de Lune"—Thome, or "The Herd Girl's Dream"—Labitisky.

The picture is full of action, and of a dramatic nature. The atmosphere is Western, requiring many galops, a few hurrys, a misterioso, and a couple of big dramatic overtures in the last part. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

A ROMANCE OF THE UNDERWORLD (Keeney—Five Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "The Sunshine of Your Smile"—Ray, or "Extase D'Amour"—Roze.

The title indicates the nature and atmosphere of this picture. There is a strong love sentiment running throughout it. Such numbers as "East Side, West Side," or "Old Timers," by Lake, will be found useful. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Frank A. Keeney Corporation.

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN (Vitagraph—Five Reels)—Theme for Wolf Dog—Allegretto. Suggest "Babillage"—Castillo, "The Magpie and the Parrot"—Bendix, or "Twilight"—Cesek.

The atmosphere is that of a great Northwest. Animal life is shown, and there is great opportunity for pastorale music. At "T. Lerue, the One Who Cared," you will need some American Indian stuff, and it would be well to note the sleigh bell effects throughout the picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

DANGER WITHIN (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme—Tempo di Valse. Suggest "Valse Poupee"—Podini, "Love Is Like a Firefly"—Friml, or "Valse Poudre"—Popy.

This feature requires light treatment, and nothing of a heavy nature is needed until the last two reels. Use "Erl King"—Schubert, a galop, an agitato, a fox-trot, and close with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Vitagraph exchange.

DOLLY DOES HER BIT (Pathe—Five Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

Open with "School Days," by Edwards, followed by a light polka, light stuff till darky boy dances, then use a genuine of nigger hoe-down. During the scenes showing the automatic doll use the "Dance of Marionettes." A few misteriosos and agitatos are also needed. Catch auto truck and silverware falling. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathe exchange.

GUILT OF SILENCE (Bluebird—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "By the Banks of the Saskatchewan"—Caryll, "At the Hamlet" Godard, or "New Mown Hay"—Mathews.

This is a Canadian story. Lots of pastorale music is needed with a little that is dramatic. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal exchange.

INTERLOPER, The (World—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Sostenuto. Suggest "For All Eternity"—Mascheronie, "Wedding Morn"—Luscomb, or "Twilight"—Ayer.

This picture has two locations, one in the South, and the other in New York City. Make the change of atmosphere distinct and well defined by your musical selection. There is some dramatic emotion, but the picture is a bit light throughout. Open with "Dixie," and note the violin solo when musician sits at piano. Use a ballad for the singer who follows. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

LONELY WOMAN, THE (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante Dramatic. Suggest "Love Song"—Flegier, "Love Song"—Nevin, or "Elysuim"—Speaks.

You will need pathetic music for this picture, a few dramatic tensions, and a considerable quantity of big stuff. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

PAYING HIS DEBT (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Reverie"—Vieuxtemp, "Romance in F"—Tschaikowsky, or "Sweet Ponderings"—Langey.

There are some dramatic moments in this picture that require big stuff well selected. The usual numbers of tensions and agitatos prevail. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Triangle exchange.

WINNING OF BEATRICE, THE (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest "Sleeping Rose"—Borch, "Golden Hearted Daisies"—Williams, or "Bridal Bouquet"—Sawyer.

This is a modern business drama with touches of comedy sprinkled throughout it. The opening is dramatic and misterioso, and would suggest using the selection from "Othello," by Verdi. Thereafter it lightens up for a few hundred feet. Then a misterioso is followed by a furioso segueing into a big dramatic tension. Again we have light stuff for almost two reels. The last reel must be of a broader quality of music, and finish with the theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

A Handy Exposure Meter.

J. L. Harvey, whose exposure meter for still cameras was mentioned these columns a short time ago, has sent the department a new ter for use with a motion picture camera.

Mr. Harvey's letter explains the instrument so well that it may well reproduced here:

I am putting on the market June 1st, an Exposure Meter for Motion Picture Cameras. This meter is a practical meter that has been made for motion picture cameras, owing to the fact that, for instance, with the shutter half open at a cranking speed of two turns to the second, the exposure is 1/32 second; but if the cranking speed is changed so that you have say 1½ turns per second, then the exposure is 1/24 second; and if the cranking speed is but one turn per second, the time changes to 1/16 second, and the same way with the other settings of the shutter. With this meter a person sees at a glance the correct exposure for any shutter setting.

A couple of years ago I placed on the market the No. 2 Harvey Exposure Meter for ordinary cameras. I might say this meter has met with remarkable success, owing to the fact that it gives the exposure for the various kinds of subjects and all stops at one setting, without requiring any calculations whatever.

The figures for these meters were found by four years of experimenting, taking pictures in various countries, and from Cuba way up 400 miles north of Quebec, in order to determine the exposures. For instance, a picture would be taken of a "Portrait in the Open" at 1/100, 1/50, 1/25, 1/10, 1/5 and 1/2; or, more correctly speaking, with a known under-exposure to a known over-exposure, and developing the plate or film to find out which exposure was correct to give the middle of the latitude of plate or film used. Then a picture would be taken of a dark building, building part in shade, in the woods, etc., in the same way.

Three cameras were used in order to obtain the average shutter speeds of different types of shutters, although I used 10 or 12 or more cameras in all at different times in testing. This necessarily involved an enormous amount of work.

The plate speed list enclosed gives a number of plates other than listed on the No. 2 Meter.

The meter has been found so correct, as I say, it is simply a question of proper development in order to obtain first-class pictures, as the meter gives the average of my best pictures during the tests.

The plate speeds are different than those given by other meter manufacturers, but in determining my plate speeds I always used the developer as recommended by the manufacturer for each plate or film and developed them according to the time and temperature method given by the manufacturer, if he gives one, so that the user of a plate or film simply opens up his box of plates and finds the developer to be used and obtains the correct developer.

You will notice the enormous changes in time required when making exposures of different kinds of subjects on the same day with the same light and the same plate. The time changes from 160 to 200 times, depending on the class of subjects you are photographing, and on the motion picture meter the stop changes enormously, as will be seen readily, depending on the class of subjects you are photographing, on the same day with the same light; or as you go to other countries, when the light changes, or season of the year changes, the stops, of course, are changed very materially.

In practice I have found that different people have different developing methods, and some require slightly longer and some slightly shorter exposures than what I call normal. Even this is taken care of on the Harvey Exposure Picture Meter.

he Harvey Exposure Motion Picture Meter is a new departure in fi ers, as it shows cuts of the shutter settings or angles instead of f tions of a second, and gives automatically the proper stop to be ed for any lens.

No calculations whatever are required.

This meter is only to be used for outdoor motion picture cameras. It is not suitable for other cameras.

When you are cranking at "Normal Speed" of two turns per second, which exposes sixteen pictures per second, the shutter angles shown below give the exposures shown in seconds:

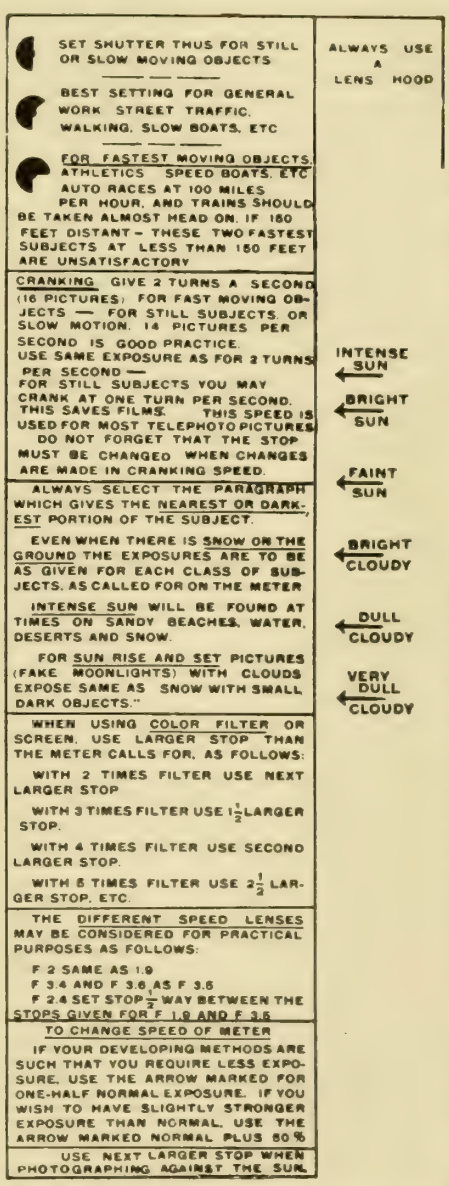
Shutter 1/2 open, 180 feet	1/32 of a second
Shutter 3/8 open, 135 feet	1/48 of a second
Shutter 1/4 open, 90 feet	1/64 of a second

Cranking at 1½ turns per second:

1/2 open	1/24
3/8 open	1/36
1/4 open	1/48

Cranking at 1 turn per second. Pictures often used for still subjects:

1/2 open	1/16
3/8 open	1/24
1/4 open	1/32



SET SHUTTER THUS FOR STILL OR SLOW MOVING OBJECTS
BEST SETTING FOR GENERAL WORK STREET TRAFFIC, WALKING, SLOW BOATS, ETC
FOR FASTEST MOVING OBJECTS, ATHLETICS SPEED BOATS, ETC AUTO RACES AT 100 MILES PER HOUR, AND TRAINS SHOULD BE TAKEN ALMOST HEAD ON. IF 150 FEET DISTANT — THESE TWO FASTEST SUBJECTS AT LESS THAN 150 FEET ARE UNSATISFACTORY
ALWAYS USE A LENS HOOD
CRANKING GIVE 2 TURNS A SECOND (16 PICTURES) FOR FAST MOVING OBJECTS — FOR STILL SUBJECTS, OR SLOW MOTION, 14 PICTURES PER SECOND IS GOOD PRACTICE. USE SAME EXPOSURE AS FOR 2 TURNS PER SECOND — FOR STILL SUBJECTS YOU MAY CRANK AT ONE TURN PER SECOND. THIS SAVES FILMS. THIS SPEED IS USED FOR MOST TELEPHOTO PICTURES. DO NOT FORGET THAT THE STOP MUST BE CHANGED WHEN CHANGES ARE MADE IN CRANKING SPEED.
INTENSE SUN
BRIGHT SUN
FAINT SUN
ALWAYS SELECT THE PARAGRAPH WHICH GIVES THE NEAREST OR DARKEST PORTION OF THE SUBJECT.
EVEN WHEN THERE IS SNOW ON THE GROUND THE EXPOSURES ARE TO BE AS GIVEN FOR EACH CLASS OF SUBJECTS, AS CALLED FOR ON THE METER INTENSE SUN WILL BE FOUND AT TIMES ON SANDY BEACHES, WATER, DESERTS AND SNOW.
FOR SUN RISE AND SET PICTURES (FAKE MOONLIGHTS) WITH CLOUDS EXPOSE SAME AS SNOW WITH SMALL DARK OBJECTS."
BRIGHT CLOUDY DULL CLOUDY
VERY DULL CLOUDY
WHEN USING COLOR FILTER OR SCREEN, USE LARGER STOP THAN THE METER CALLS FOR, AS FOLLOWS:
WITH 2 TIMES FILTER USE NEXT LARGER STOP
WITH 3 TIMES FILTER USE 1½ LARGER STOP.
WITH 4 TIMES FILTER USE SECOND LARGER STOP.
WITH 5 TIMES FILTER USE 2½ LARGER STOP, ETC.
THE DIFFERENT SPEED LENSES MAY BE CONSIDERED FOR PRACTICAL PURPOSES AS FOLLOWS:
F 2 SAME AS 1.9
F 3.4 AND F 3.6 AS F 3.5
F 2.4 SET STOP ½ WAY BETWEEN THE STOPS GIVEN FOR F 1.9 AND F 3.5
TO CHANGE SPEED OF METER
IF YOUR DEVELOPING METHODS ARE SUCH THAT YOU REQUIRE LESS EXPOSURE, USE THE ARROW MARKED FOR ONE-HALF NORMAL EXPOSURE. IF YOU WISH TO HAVE SLIGHTLY STRONGER EXPOSURE THAN NORMAL, USE THE ARROW MARKED NORMAL PLUS 50% USE NEXT LARGER STOP WHEN PHOTOGRAPHING AGAINST THE SUN.

These various figures are rather complex. It is not necessary to remember them when using this meter.

For the best shutter angle to be used for various cases, see back of Slide "C" on the meter.

The meter works just as well with shutters that are not adjustable. Slide "C" may be pulled out of the meter and on it will be found:

Shutter settings for still subjects, moving objects, fastest work, etc.

Suggestions for cranking.

Suggestions as to reading the meter.

Use the different lenses.

Use of color screens, etc.

When you move Slide "C" on the meter you will be surprised to see the enormous changes of stops required for any particular shutter setting. You will probably be impressed with the idea that it is a very difficult proposition to remember these settings for the various classes of subjects, under the changing conditions in which outdoor photography is done.

The proper knowledge of the great changes in stops required for the different classes of subjects it is of the most vital importance to produce good work.

The light reflected from the subject takes the picture. Some outdoor subjects reflect about 200 times more light than others.

The light grows weaker the farther north you go from the Equator. Under Summer and Winter the names of cities appear; also Lat. (latitude). Therefore the meter may be used in any part of the world.

In the southern hemisphere the meter would read correctly with one exception, and that is, you should read Summer as Winter, and Winter as Summer, using the latitudes as given.

All the above factors and conditions are answered for you automatically by the meter.

There is nothing made giving so much information on cinematography exposures as this meter in such condensed form.

In reading the meter you would first set the meter as per instructions printed on the meter. Then you would see on the front cut of the meter that the stop to be used would be for "People in the Open." For example:

With the shutter set a 1/2 opening use f 6.3.
With the shutter set a 1/3 opening use f 5.6.
With the shutter set at 1/4 opening use half way between f 4.5 and f 5.6, and so on for each class of subjects.

You will notice on the back of the meter that Normal Exposure is given Normal plus 50% and Half Normal. Different workers prefer slightly different exposures to suit the different developing method they employ. Using Normal plus 50% exposure gives you the fullest desirable exposure, and Half Normal is the shortest practical exposure. Thus the meter is easily adapted to the individual requirements of the worker.

On the meter will be seen a note for increasing the speed for early and late hours, and a diagram showing the angle of the sun above the horizon. This works correctly for any season in the year and in any country.

Always select the Paragraph which gives the nearest or darkest portion of the subject you are photographing.

Even when there is snow on the ground the exposures are to be as given for each class of subjects, as called for on the meter.

In general, if the sun is directly behind the back, you obtain a flat lighting, as the shadows are cast straight behind the subject. It is better with any camera to expose the light coming at an angle of about 45 degrees on the subject; more as though it came from over either hand when extended from you, the shadows will then be clearly seen and the object will then stand out in clearer relief.

Portraits are best when the subject is in the shade or on cloudy days.

If you are taking a picture with the sun in front of the camera you should use a long lens hood and the next larger stop that the meter calls for. A hood on a lens is good practice at all times for any camera.

Clouds and distant landscapes, especially the Grand Canyon, snow pictures, yellow or red, and most subjects photograph best when a color screen or ray filter is used. A 2 or 3 times filter is best for outdoor work.

The stop to be used with color screens is given on back of Slide "C" of the meter.

Some foreign lenses are marked with stop numbers 9, 12, 18, 25, etc. In using the Harvey Meter, which reads stop 16, for example, place the lever controlling the stops on your camera slightly from the 16 mark toward the 12 mark.

If you do not know, for instance, whether it is "Bright Sun" or "Faint Sun" you may set the meter half way between "Bright Sun" and "Faint Sun" and the meter will read correctly.

The meter is for any lens; for other lenses than those listed see back of Slide "C" on the meter.

The speed of a lens is termed by its largest stop. Thus, an f 3.5 lens is five times faster than an f 8 or (U. S. 4) lens.

If any fast lens of any make (Rectilinear or Anastigmat) is stopped down to any stop, say to f 11, for example, it is no faster than any other lens at f 11.

Always focus on your principal object if possible.

For subjects at different distances, like parades, street crowds, etc., the following table may aid you:

HYPERFOCAL TABLE FOR CINEMATOGRAPH LENSES.

If lens is focused on objects at the following distances, everything is supposed to be sharp from one-half that distance to infinity.

f 1.9	70 feet
f 3.5	40 feet
f 4.5	30 feet
f 5.6	24 feet
f 6.3	22 feet
f 8	18 feet
f 16	10 feet

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Manager-Director.

DOES a mailing list pay? This question has often come up for discussion in connection with advertising and particularly in connection with the theater. The Strand management is a firm believer in the effectiveness of the proper kind of a mailing list. At the present time we are conducting a vigorous direct-by-mail campaign in addition to our other advertising and have prepared special material along these lines.

We have selected thirty thousand names from the telephone book. These names were not picked at random, only the telephone exchanges in the better class residential sections of New York City being used. In this mailing list are included the names of the best families in New York; at the same time the Goulds and Vanderbilts are omitted for they are not patrons to the regular motion picture theater. Of course, there are times when even they come in for a circularization For instance, when we were showing "My Four Years In Germany," the entire gross receipts of the theater for the week were invested in Liberty Bonds in conjunction with the Women's Committee of the Liberty Loan. At an official ceremony recently this matter was taken up with this body, at which time the key of the Strand was turned over to the women's organization which included pesons most prominent in New York's best society. Many of these society women were present therefore and others were invited. However, for general circularization the families in the better residential sections are more susceptible to the appeals of an institution such as the Strand.

We do not circularize 30,000 names each week, but take 5,000 weekly. Instead of taking a few telephone exchanges at a time comprising a certain district of the city, we take all the names under A in each of the exchanges and go down the list until our 5,000 names have been obtained. This gives us a representative list of names covering the entire city. The following week the list is commenced where it was left off and so on until the thirty thousand have had a broadside, when we begin at A again.

Our present mail appeal is a two-page folder, the covers being in two colors presenting the same covers as those on our house program. Inside on the left hand sheet is the bill for the next week, together with some selling talking on the various features of the entertainment. On the right hand sheet are the features of the bills for the next four weeks. Thus the person who receives this announcement has before him the offerings of the Strand for the coming five weeks. By the system used at the Strand he gets one of these announcements every five weeks. They are mailed to him on Fridays so that he gets them Saturday, the day before the change of bill takes place at the Strand.

Some time back we prepared a set of calendar cards, twelve of them, each one containing the month's calendar. Starting with the January card, we sent out one card to each person on the mailing list at the end of every month. Above the calendar dates on the card was the program of every week's attraction during that month so that the current attraction was always before the eyes of the person making use of the calendar, which had the name of the Strand prominently displayed at the top. Not only was this a handy reference for two purposes for the person who received it, but it was a good advertisement for the Strand. The card was of good size so that the dates of the month were prominently displayed. Each card was of different color so that its change each month in its accustomed place on the wall would be noticed.

BULL MONTANA TO COACH SAILORS.

"Bull" Montana has enlisted in the United States Navy. He will be rated as physical instructor for the submarine base at San Pedro, which includes thousands of enlisted sailors. "Bull" will be remembered for his work in several pictures with Douglas Fairbanks.

Montana's last work was in "Say Young Fellow," now nearing completion at his Hollywood Studio. Montana was discovered last year by Douglas in Bothner's New York gymnasium and was immediately placed under a long term contract that began with "In Again, Out Again," in which the Italian actor played the part of burglar and made a hit.

Bull has won national fame as a wrestler, having many successful arena matches to his credit. He is said to wear a size 6¼ hat and an 18½ collar. He has it all doped out "just how he will beat the Kaiser at his own game."

PHILADELPHIA ANTI-CENSOR MOVE SEEMS FIZZLE.

After three futile attempts had been made by the Penrose faction in Pennsylvania to bring the local film men together for the purpose of discussing ways and means by which the present form of censorship could be improved, nothing has been accomplished for the present that would tend to instill any desire on the part of the film men to become mixed up in any political issue.

HELEN EDDY ENGAGED BY UNIVERSAL.

Helen Eddy, well-known Lasky-Famous Players actress, who possibly achieved her greatest fame as leading woman with George Beban in his notable character dramas, has been engaged by Director Elmer Clifton to support Monroe Salisbury in his next Universal picture, based on D. W. Ogden's well known novel, "The Rustler of Wind River."

Funkhouser's Suspension Stirs Chicago

Censorship of Pictures Not Included in Charges, But Insubordination and Disobedience of Orders Are Declared.

THE suspension of Major M. L. C. Funkhouser as second deputy superintendent of police Saturday, May 25, by Acting Superintendent of Police Alcock has created widespread discussion, in which the major has numerous stanch supporters. It has developed that the action taken by Acting Chief of Police Alcock had nothing to do with Major Funkhouser's activities as censor of moving pictures, but that insubordination and disobedience of orders will be charged against him in some of his other official capacities. These capacities include the suppression of commercialized vice, the inspection and supervision of police equipment and the management of police automobile shops.

It is understood that the major will be charged before the merit board with using the authority of his office in the shadowing of prominent citizens and city officials. He also will be asked to explain why the expenses incurred in such cases were paid out of the second deputy's vice investigation fund. Aldermen were followed and reports of their actions made and filed. Other reports showed that telephone wires of members of Mayor Thompson's cabinet were tapped and that large sums of money had been spent by vice investigators in buying wine in disorderly places.

Acting Chief Alcock has declared that the major was suspended for disobedience of orders and inefficiency, but has refused to make known any details until the investigation takes place before the merit board. The charges will be filed in about two or three weeks, and the investigation is expected to last several months.

Spirited support is being given Major Funkhouser at this time by women's civic organizations and church associations in his capacity as moving picture censor, while Alderman A. A. McCormick is putting up a stiff battle for him in the city council in the matter of the Maypole ordinance. Acting Chief Alcock has informed the council that he would like to have action deferred on the ordinance until he has the leisure to examine it.

On Wednesday, May 29, the thirty investigators in vice matters employed in the office of Major Funkhouser up to the time of his suspension were dropped from the service, and the forty policemen assigned to the major for raiding purposes were distributed among the various police stations throughout the city. This action was taken by Acting Chief Alcock on that date.

The acting chief had the following to say about film censorship: "I want to impress on the civic organizations of Chicago that the suspension of Major Funkhouser was absolutely divorced from the question of censorship of the movies. The movie censorship will not be jeopardized by the suspension of the major. Men, women and civic organizations interested in movie censorship need not worry. The censorship will be regularly handled and no laxity will be permitted in the censorship of films."

In the issue of May 30 the Chicago Tribune referred editorially to the Funkhouser case as follows:

"The acting chief of police says he suspended Major Funkhouser for disobedience of orders and inefficiency.

"If this is an accurate and complete statement it will, of course, be promptly supported by charges explicit and concrete. The odor that thus far arises from the case is suspicious, not to say offensive. The discovery of disobedience and inefficiency is rather sudden. The attendant circumstances were peculiar. The grounds of complaint will have to be sustantial and established clearly if attention is to be distracted from the very interesting moving picture possibilities of the situation.

"At any rate the public will ask for plenty of light, and is likely to get it, if not from official, from non-official sources."

Members of Local 110 Cited for Bravery.

Members of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., have been contributing their quota steadily to the first three drafts made to secure men for the front. In the third, or recent draft, 28 moving picture operators have been called from Chicago, making in all 118 up to date.

Alex Mitchell, formerly operator at the Kedzie Annex, enlisted with the Canadian Forty-eighth Highlanders early in the war, and was recently severely wounded in action at Cambrai, and Richard Cohen, formerly operator at the Vitagraph theater, but now a machine gun man in the aviation division, was shot in the shoulder recently at Cambria while bringing down his third man. James Cahill, formerly operator at the Winchester theater, on Chicago avenue, went over on a torpedo boat when Admiral Simms crossed with his flotilla.

Others who have gone are Harry Trilling, formerly operator at the Chicago theater, State and Eighth streets; Jack Lucas, Castle theater, State and Madison streets; "Whitey" Lewis, Orpheus, on Twelfth street, and Stanley Smith, White Palace theater, Kedzie and Alton, all of the Nineteenth Engineers, now in France, who have been cited for valor and bravery.

A Septet of Unspeakable Criminals.

Monday evening, May 27, a man with six blond girls dressed as Red Cross workers drove up to and entered the Avon theater, 3325 Fullerton avenue. The man demanded that the show be stopped while the young women solicited cash gifts from the audience. Meantime he made a speech lasting about seven minutes, the six blondes being busy during that time collecting money. After they left Max Hyman, owner of the Avon, who had not been in the theater at the time of the collection, became suspicious and called up Red Cross headquarters. He was informed that no workers had been sent out in that district. The strangers collected about $100.

M. H. Hoffman, manager of the Bell theater, 1539 Milwaukee avenue, and John Bobeng, of the Armitage theater, 3553 Armitage avenue, report that as far as they can make out the same set of workers did the same thing at their theaters—at the Bell on Monday and at the Armitage on Tuesday night.

The police are searching for the septet, whose crime is worse than sacrilege.

Douglas Bergh Off to Pacific Coast.

Douglas Bergh, personal traveling representative of George Kleine, returned from a tour of Canada last week and left for the Pacific Coast by way of Omaha on Wednesday, May 29. On the trip he will visit in order Salt Lake City, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver. Moving picture conditions in Canada at the present time are rather backward, Mr. Bergh informed me.

"Prunella" at Orchestra Hall.

"Pershing's Crusaders" closes Sunday night, June 2, at Orchestra Hall and thereafter throughout the summer Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be presented, the first being Marguerite Clark in "Prunella," or Love in a Dutch Garden.

Funkhouser Cut-Outs Restored.

The eight cut-outs ordered by Major Funkhouser in "My Four Years in Germany" have been restored by Acting Chief Alcock after viewing the film as it originally appeared, and the feature is now being shown in its entirety.

Lubliner & Trinz Liberal to Red Cross.

Lubliner & Trinz celebrated Red Cross Day on Wednesday, May 29, at their big Convent Garden theater, 2653 North Clark street. The entire net proceeds for the afternoon and evening presentations, amounting to about $1,500, were donated to the Red Cross. On the program were "Social Briars," with Mary Miles Minter; "The Spirit of the Red Cross" and a current events reel. Messrs. Lubliner & Trinz are to be heartily commended for their patriotism.

"Over the Top" Draws Well at Auditorium.

"Over the Top," Vitagraph's war feature, began its run of two weeks at the Auditorium Sunday, May 26. It was expected that Arthur Guy Empey, who wrote the book and who is starred in the photoplay, would be present for the Chicago opening, but he was held over in Detroit, where the picture is now running, to assist in the Red Cross drive. Mr. Empey telegraphed Manager T. W. Chatburn, of Vitagraph's Chicago office, to admit all British-Canadian recruits at any presentation free of charge. Wednesday, May 29, the public generally was admitted free of charge at the reception given the Blue Devils of France, who were being entertained and feted in the city on that date. Manager Chatburn reports excellent business thus far at the Auditorium, and states that every succeeding day shows a steady increase.

Metro Wins Injunction Suit on "Revelation."

An injunction granted the Homan Photoplay Company to restrain the Metro Pictures Corporation from leasing, and the Central Park theater, this city, from showing, Nazimova in "Revelation" was dissolved Monday, May 27, in the court of Judge Windes. The Homan Photoplay Company operates the Twentieth Century theater here, and claimed a previous verbal contract for "Revelation."

Big Demand for "Tarzan of the Apes."

Bookings for thirty-three of Chicago's leading theaters—in most cases for a run of two days—have been made for "Tarzan of the Apes" following its successful run at the Colonial and Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum. This bespeaks big business for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange with this feature.

Changes in George Kleine Branch Offices.

Harry Graham, who has been branch manager of the George Kleine System in Minneapolis for the past two years, has been transferred to the management of the branch office at Dallas. C. R. Mitchell, who has been chief salesman out of the Minneapolis office for the past two years, has succeeded Mr. Graham.

Pathe's General Sales Manager Touring Country.

F. C. Quimby, general sales manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., came in from New York Monday, May 27, and left the same day for Minneapolis, accompanied by Ralph O. Proctor, district manager for the Middle West. Mr. Quimby is at present making a tour of Pathe offices.

George A. Blair Visits Chicago.

George A. Blair, of the cinema department of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., arrived in the city Tuesday, May 28, and remained until the closing day of the month. Mr. Blair was kept busy during his stay making the rounds of the trade.

"Cleopatra" Showing to Good Business at Colonial.

James Grainger, Fox representative in charge of "Cleopatra's" run at the Colonial, is much enthused over the fine attendance at the presentations of the big film thus far. Manager Field of the Colonial believes that the picture will easily make a run of four successful weeks.

Funkhouser Removal Pleases First National Circuit Officials Believe Police Chief's Action Was Due to Rumpus Over Gerard Film Eliminations.

THE removal of "Major" Funkhouser from the office of second deputy superintendent of police of Chicago is a culmination of legal proceedings that were brought against him by attorneys for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit following the elimination of seven scenes and subtitles from Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," is the belief of circuit officials in New York.

As soon as Funkhouser's ukase was given out demanding the elimination of "objectionable" material before a license would be issued for the exhibition of the Gerard film in Chicago, Jones, Linick & Schaefer, the local franchise holders in the circuit, acting in co-operation with Warner Brothers, producers of the film, and J. D. Williams, manager of First National, retained the law firm of Adolph Marks to file a petition for the removal of Funkhouser.

Mr. Williams also wired protests against Funkhouser's action to George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information; Governor Lowden of Illinois, the governors of various states and the mayors of several cities in which the picture had already been successfully shown. Federal political pressure was also brought to bear upon the city officials of Chicago through the personal representations of Ambassador Gerard, so that the men who have up to date stood sponsor for the activities of Funkhouser found themselves in the uncomfortable position of either countenancing the censor or throwing the doughty major overboard.

Three of Funkhouser's aides were also included in the suspension order of Acting Chief of Police Alcock. These were Hugh Borland, manager of properties; Joseph A. Mahoney, inspector of moral conditions, and Frank Schoeffel, acting department inspector.

William H. Luthardt has been appointed acting second deputy in Funkhouser's place. The day following the major's suspension Mr. Luthardt and Acting Chief Alcock spent several hours in Funkhouser's office examining his papers. Uniformed policemen were stationed at the door of the second deputy's office with orders to bar Funkhouser and his aides and to permit no one to remove records.

All of the eliminated material from "My Four Years in Germany" has been reconsidered by Mr. Luthardt and the entire board of censors and ordered back in the production. The film is now being shown in Chicago in its ungarbled form.

Major and Fox Many Times at Odds

In Past Eight Months There Have Been Serious Differences of Opinion Between Censor and Company.

FOR eight months the William Fox branch office in the Mallers Buidling, Chicago, has been the center of the bitterest fight Major Funkhouser has ever had on his hands, and the Fox officials in Chicago may be pardoned if they looked upon the action of Chief Alcock as justification of their determined stand against what they and in most cases the courts considered injustice.

Since last fall no less than eight of the more important of the Fox pictures have been the subject of controversy between the major and the film company. Those which aroused the most comment were the cases of "The Spy," "The Rose of Blood," "For Liberty," "The Tiger Woman," and "Cleopatra." Others were "The Conqueror," "Camille," "When a Man Sees Red," and "Du Barry." Before that period there were numerous other differences of opinion between the major and the Fox officials, but it was upon "The Spy" the producer made his most determined fight, and that picture may be said to have marked the beginning of the real warfare between the major and the company. In his contest and in the whole fight against one-man censorship, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has been a conspicuous and forceful factor.

The fact that, with the exception of "The Rose of Blood," which is still in the courts, all of the pictures are now being or have been shown indicates how infrequently Major Funkhouser has been upheld in his attitude.

Famous Players' Managers Conclude Sessio

Announcement Is Made That Company Will Release Three Features a Week as Well as Reissues.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation district managers adjourned their New York meeting, called by Walter E. Greene, managing director of distribution, after six days of discussion, at which the plans for the season of 1918-9 were discussed and decided upon. The details of the new year's releases of Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be announced shortly.

The new season's star series will commence on September 1. In addition to a thorough discussion of film conditions in this country, an outline of the world distribution of Paramount and Artcraft pictures was made.

Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, announced that a series of territorial meetings of the branch managers and salesmen will be held about June 15.

It is said there will be regularly released three features each week, in addition to which a number of the most famous features of the past will be reissued under a novel arrangement, which should prove highly profitable to exhibitors.

HAL ROACH RETURNS TO WEST COAST.

Hal Roach, managing director of the Rolin studios, returned to Los Angeles the latter part of last week after a ten days' visit at the Pathe headquarters in New York.

"Our two big bets ready for current release are Harold Lloyd in 'Somewhere in Turkey' and Toto in 'Cleopatsy,'" said Mr. Roach. "Coming along in the Lloyd program are 'Sic 'Em Towser,' 'Are Crooks Dishonest?' 'An Ozark Romance,' and 'That's Him.' Other Toto releases impending are 'The Furniture Movers' and 'Fire the Cook.'"

"Cleopatsy" is announced for an engagement over the entire Loew Circuit. It is a burlesque of the story of Antony and Cleopatra.

LASKY STUDIOS TO GIVE BENEFIT DANCE.

Will Raise Fund for the Benefit of Families of Former Employes Who Are Now At Front.

A STUDIO dance will be given by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at its Hollywood studios for the benefit of the "Folks at Home Fund" on June 8. Director-General Cecil B. De Mille is the chairman and the fund is for the benefit of families of men who were employed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and who have gone to the front. From all indications the dance will be a huge success. Not only will a splendid sum be raised for the relief of dependents in the studio soldiers' families, but also the large crowds that turn out on the night of the festivities will be treated to an excellent entertainment.

The exact nature of the many attractive features of the big show has not as yet been announced by Mrs. W. D. De Mille, who is the head of the entertainment committee; but it is assured that all the stars will be present, and hundreds of film fans who have seen their favorites on the screen will have a chance to see them, talk to them and dance with them.

Huge Liberty Theater for Camp Kearny.

At San Diego work has been started on Camp Kearny's Liberty theater, which is to seat at least three thousand soldiers. The theater entrance will be at the end of Center street, in the civic center, and the natural slope down the canyon of the camp will save the Government time, labor and lumber, as the tiering of seats thus will be made simple.

The contractors estimate that the building will take about 00,000 feet of lumber and that the theater will cost about 30,000 when completed. Girders seventy-five feet long, ung about thirty-five feet high, will span the monster pit f the show-house and thus eliminate obstructive supports.

"Smileage Books" will be in demand when the Liberty heater opens, with the best stage talent obtainable covering this end of their thirty-six house circuit.

Theda Bara Entertained by Her Godsons.

The 158th Infantry Regiment, stationed at Camp Kearny, wanted to show their godmother, Theda Bara, just what kind of a bunch of husky lads she had adopted, and so they invited her down to witness their field games. "The Vampire" Regiment, as the 158th is now known, outdid themselves in displaying their athletic prowess.

After the morning's games, which ended with an exhibition of wild west riding, Miss Bara had mess with the officers, after which she presented to all members of the regiment an autographed photograph of herself and a bronze "good-luck" pin in the shape of the signs of the Zodiac.

Clifford Company Enlarges Activities.

W. H. Clifford, vice-president and general manager of the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, has appointed W. G. Gilmour as business manager for his organization. Mr. Gilmour was formerly business manager for the Signal Film Company, and prior to that was associated with the Ince-Triangle company.

Shorty Hamilton is being supported in his present five-reel comedy-drama, "The Pen Vulture," by Ruth King, a recent addition to the Clifford organization.

Despite the many shutdowns of larger producing companies the Clifford company is finding an unusually active market for its products. In fact, so great has been the demand for the Clifford features that Mr. Clifford is considering putting on another company, headed by a well-known male comedian. In addition to this Mr. Clifford is personally directing his multiple-reel state right feature, "The Black Boomerang."

Hayakawa Gets Letter of Appreciation.

Sessue Hayakawa's campaigning for the Liberty Loan has brought the following letter of appreciation from James K. Lynch, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco:

"As fiscal agent of the United States Government for the twelfth district the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco extends sincere thanks for the valuable service rendered by you in the third Liberty Loan campaign. Your co-operation is particularly appreciated by reason of the additional assurance it affords our National Government of the loyalty and support of its citizens in the present emergency."

Start of the Grand March at the "Two-Gun Men" Ball Given by Bill Hart, May 11, at the Hotel Coronado in Honor of the Officers of the 159th California Infantry, of Which Regiment Hart is Godfather.

American Players Give Benefit Performance.

Edward Sloman and fellow workers at the American studios realized $1,400 on the benefit performance of "The Wolf," which they gave recently at the Potter theater in Santa Barbara. The entire receipts were turned over to the fund for Belgian soldiers in German prison camps. Sloman, who played the chief role in the original New York production, directed the play and played the role he originated. Margarita Fisher, Lloyd Ingraham and Jack Mower all distinguished themselves in their parts.

"The Spawn" Is Completed by Director De Grasse.

What promises to be one of the most sensational Bluebird productions of the year has been finished under the title of "The Spawn" by Director Joseph De Grasse for a Bluebird release at the West Coast studios of the Universal.

The play anticipates the close of the war and the conditions that will arise from the chaos produced by the human trail left by the Germans as they passed through the belligerent countries.

The big climax of the production comes when a brilliant opera singer, the mother of one of these unwelcomed Boche babies, engaged to be married, meets socially the retired German army officer, the babe's father, who is visiting her country with his Teuton wife.

Grace Cunard plays the leading role, and in her support are Edward Cecil, Herbert Prior and Dora Rogers.

Billie Younger Gets Married.

A. P. (Billy) Younger, assistant to Scenario Editor O. L. Sellers, of the Triangle, put one over on his friends at the studios while supposedly enjoying a vacation. Younger slipped quietly away to Santa Ana and married Miss Mary V. Dearing, a Kansas City society girl, without telling a soul of his intended matrimonial leap, news of which just leaked out at the Culver City studio. Younger, who is a member of the Hollywood Officers' Training School, is in Class A in the draft and expects to be called into service at any moment now. Mrs. Younger will accompany her husband, living near him as long as he remains in the United States.

Mae Murray Celebrates a Birthday.

Finishing touches are being taken at Universal City on "The Big Little Person," a Mae Murray production, based on Rebecca Hooper Eastman's novel of the same name.

During the week production lagged for a few minutes while Miss Murray celebrated a birthday, cutting an enormous cake presented to her by members of the company and drinking a toast to the success of the Mae Murray Universal features.

Seaman Resigns from Superba.

Frank V. Seaman has resigned his position as manager of the Superba theater to leave soon for the northern part of the state, where he will give his personal attention to operating his mining property.

Mr. Seaman assumed the management of the Superba several months ago when Al Nathan went north to take the management of the Alhambra theater in San Francisco.

Seaman has many friends up and down the Angeleno rialto who will be sorry to see him forsake the bright lights.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Walter Perkins, well-known character actor at the Triangle studios, has returned to work after an illness which confined him to his home for two weeks. He contracted a severe cold while working along the seashore in scenes for "The Last Rebel," and his condition for several days was regarded as serious.

* * *

V. R. Day has been appointed manager for the Boy City film studio at Culver City, which concern produces the Judge Willis Brown pictures. Mr. Day still retains his position as western representative for the Essanay Film Corporation.

* * *

Jean Hersholt, Triangle actor, who played the role of Manson in the H. O. Davis production of "The Servant in the House," has been removed to his home from the California Hospital, where for several weeks he hovered near death following an operation for appendicitis. When he reached the hospital the surgeons declared he had only one chance in a hundred for recovery. Despite the odds against him Hersholt won, and his case is regarded as one of the most remarkable of its kind ever treated at the California Hospital.

At the Ince studios Dorothy Dalton's latest story, "Green Eyes," by Ella Stuart Carson, is nearing completion, and Miss Dalton is busy consulting time tables preparatory to leaving for the East. Miss Dalton's ultimate destination is New York, but she has several invitations to stop over in many of the large cities en route.

* * *

Mrs. Margaret Raub, who is in charge of the hospital at the Triangle Culver City studios, has offered her services to the Hollywood Officers' Training School, and twice a week will instruct classes in first-aid work and other phases of Red Cross activities.

* * *

Gus Peterson, veteran cameraman of the Triangle Culver City studio, has made application to enlist in the photographic department of the United States Army, and hopes soon to be "shooting" Germans in France.

* * *

Al Santell has joined the National Film Corporation, and is now directing "Smiling Bill" Parsons. Santell is alternating with Director Louis Chaudet in directing these comedies.

Wyndham Standing left May 22 for New York to join the eastern studios of Goldwyn.

James K. Lynch, Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, has written a letter to Ann Kroman, Triangle player, thanking her for her efforts in behalf of the third Liberty Loan campaign. She was a nightly attendant at the Los Angeles tank meetings, and by her individual work gained many big subscriptions to the loan. The grand total raised by film players at the tank meetings was $582,000.

Carmel Myers and her Bluebird company of Universal players are at Seven Oaks taking mountain scenes for her next picture, based on Margaret Widdemer's well-known novel, "Why Not?" It is the story of a "dreamer of dreams." Supporting the Bluebird star are Thomas Holding, Kathleen Emerson, Harry V. Meter, Philo McCullough and Elizabeth Janes. Elsie Jane Wilson is directing the production from a working script by Fred Myton.

Stuart Paton has returned from a location trip to the mountains east of Fresno, where he took a company of Diando players to film scenes of a logging camp. The deep snow foiled his plans, however, and the trip will have to be repeated soon.

CHIEF CASEY TALKS OF BOSTON SITUATION.

John M. Casey, chief of the licensing department of the mayor's office, Boston, who has charge of the regulation of motion pictures in that city, passed through New York on May 28 on his return from a trip south. Mr. Casey, when interviewed as to the motion picture situation in Boston, stated that the regulation of motion pictures was progressing smoothly; that with the assistance of the National Board of Review many perplexing questions which might be involved in connection with films bearing upon the war were skilfully adjusted, with the result that the public in Boston appears satisfied with the type of films presented.

METRO EXCHANGE BIDS GODSPEED TO ASSOCIATES.

The New York Metro exchange tendered a dinner on May 25 to three of its men who have been called to the colors. Herbert Kaufman of the sales force left for Spartanburg, S. C. Jack Bowen, booker, and Robert Elsworth, manager of the film room, leave for Pelham Bay June 5. All of these young men have been with the Metro for a considerable period. The dinner was a great surprise to the boys. They were each presented with a silver wrist watch.

CLAIRE WILLE JOINS WORLD ART DEPARTMENT.

Miss Claire Wille, a recent graduate from the art department of Cooper Union, has accepted a position in the art section of the advertising department of World Pictures. Miss Wille takes the place left vacant by the drafting into the army last week of James MacDonald, who for two years was the World Pictures advertising department's artist.

The End of the Trail

By Sam Spedon

Special Representative of the World Reports from Several Cities on Great Lakes

MILWAUKEE was the first large city we stopped at on our way from St. Paul. We found conditions very much as they are in all places of its size, 450,000 population. There are ten motion picture theaters located in what might be termed a loop; centered on Grand avenue and Third street, not over a radius of two blocks. Those on Grand avenue are the Majestic, Butterfly, Palace, Alhambra, Strand, Merrill and Theatorium. The Merrill, located directly opposite the Butterfly, charges 10 cents admission, plus war tax, while all the others charge fifteen or more, excepting the Theatorium, which charges 5 cents.

On Third street, within the loop, there are the Princess, the White House, the American and the Magnet. The last two are five-cent houses, the others charge 15 or more. Most of the downtown houses, as you can see, are holding to the fifteen-cent admission price, plus the war tax. We asked E. C. Bostick, manager of the Merrill, why he was the exception to the rule. He said: "I raised the price to 15 cents and my patronage fell off. I returned to 10 cents and at once it increased. I am doing a very good business and see no reason why I should not continue it. I may be wrong, but I think it is best to leave well enough alone."

The Merrill, Alhambra, Butterfly and the Strand are the more pretentious houses, well managed and equipped. George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra; Leo Landau, of the Butterfly; Frank Cook, of the Princess, one of the oldest and best managers in the business, and Charles C. Perry, of the Strand, an apt protege of Theodore Hayes of St. Paul, extended to us every courtesy and gave us some valuable information. They are all readers of the Moving Picture World and we needed no introduction. At the Alhambra we were much impressed with the chidren's play and reception rooms, of which we shall speak more fully at another time.

Neighborhood Houses.

In order to get a general and varied idea of conditions in Milwaukee we rode out to the Downer Theater, managed by R. C. Wheeler, and located in the finest residential section of the city. It is a beautiful house seating nine hundred, at an admission price of 15 cents, including war tax. It is well attended at matinee and evening performances. We were unable to visit the Modjeska, one of the Saxe circuit, on the outskirts of the city, which we understand is one of the finest in the country.

To get another angle, we visited the more thickly settled part of the city, what might be likened to tenement or store centers. We took in the Arcade, Atlas, Aurora and Fern theaters. These are smaller houses and are about as they are in all such neighborhoods where the theaters are more numerous, each one getting a fair quota of patronage.

Taken all in all Milwaukee theaters are doing a good business, although most of it is done in the "Loop." Of course, they feel war conditions and the inroads of warm weather.

We regretted that we could not spend more time in Milwaukee. One could make a profitable stay of ten days, with no time to lose and then not see all the people and places he would like to see. There are between seventy and seventy-five theaters in the city.

We were told that there are ninety thousand persons of German extraction in Milwaukee, and for that reason a certain character of war pictures were not as popular with this class as some others.

Plenty of Business Here.

We spend Sunday in Racine, Wis., a flourishing city of 50,000. There are five theaters there and all doing a very good business. There are large manufacturing interests at this place and everybody is prosperous. The names of the theaters are the Rex, Bijou, Palace, Majestic and Orpheum. The last one is a vaudeville house, which is not as well patronized as the motion picture theaters. The Bijou is run by Owen McKivett, seats about 1,200 and packs them in. The Rex, managed by Tom Norman, does a thriving business and seats 600. The Majestic is a neighborhood house, some distance out, wihch we were unable to visit on account of a terrific rain and hail storm. The Palace seats six or eight hundred and is well patronized by a good class of people. Arthur Friedman, the proprietor, is in other business, but a staunch believer in motion pictures. He has a theater under construction a few doors from the Palace, which he hopes to open in July. It will seat fifteen hundred and is built on modern lines of architecture, with every advanced idea of comfort and equipment.

Hurried Visit at Chicago.

Our purpose in stopping at Chicago was to pay our respects to Messrs. James S. McQuade and Paul Hinz, who have charge of the Chicago branch of the Moving Picture World, and to say "hello" to a few of our exhibitor friends there. Our time was limited, but fortunately the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Illinois held a meeting on Wednesday, May 22, and we had a chance of meeting twenty or thirty exhibitor friends in a bunch, among them Joe Hopp, Phil Heaney, Morris Choynski, Louis Frank and W. D. Burford of Aurora. We had intended paying a visit to Aurora, as Mr. Burford is president of the Aurora Theater Company and controls five of the six houses at that place, but his presence at the meeting saved us the trip. We called at the office of the M. P. E. L. of A. to meet our old friend Bill Sweeney, the national secretary.

At the office of the Chicago Theater Managers' Organization we met Frank Rembusch, of Indianapolis, who was in town to attend a meeting of the A. E. A. to set a date for the business convention of that body to be held in Chicago the latter part of August. In the corridor of the Sherman House we met Harry Reichenbach, who was in Chicago in the interest of the Red Cross drive. We understood him to say he was a member of one of its committees. We also ran into Bob Levy, an old-time exhibitor.

On Tuesday afternoon we took a ride out to the Woodlawn, Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue, one of Chicago's neighborhood houses of 2,300 capacity. It is a remarkably beautiful theater, substantially built and up to date in all its appointments. It was packed at both afternoon and evening performances. It is well worth visiting.

On Wednesday evening we took a trolley ride to the Central Park theater, owned by Bellaban & Katz, one of the show houses of Chicago, seating 2,600. This is the theater that is equipped with dictaphones all over the house connected with the manager's office, transmitting criticisms and remarks by the audience to his ears, in order to get a consensus of opinion on the pictures, etc. The Central Park is located on Twelfth street at Central Park avenue. The neighborhood is principally Jewish and draws from the residential section further out. The house plays to capacity at almost every performance. Through the courtesy of Leopold Kohls, the assistant manager, we were shown through every part of it. We were particularly interested in the projection room, which is under the direction of J. H. Goldberg, a capable and ingenious young man. Just as we were about taking our leave we met Sam Katz, who wanted to show us the house all over again.

Directly opposite the Central Park is the Twentieth Century theater, an 800-seat house, where we met our old friend Joe Cooper, who is doing a good business, the Central Park notwithstanding.

There are so many beautiful houses in Chicago we wended our way eastward but could not give them the "O. O." and have a little chat with their managers, as we had intended.

Business in Chicago, from all accounts, is about normal for this season of the year, with some apprehension for the summer months.

The City Beautiful.

Leaving Chicago by way of the Michigan Central we wended our way eastward to Detroit, where we started out to visit some of the nearby theaters. We sauntered into the Washington, on Washington boulevard and Clifford street. Here we met Will M. Elliott, the manager, who took us through the house, seating 1,800. Mr. Elliott took us over to the Adams, 2,000 capacity, and there we met the genial Russell G. Pearce, the manager.

After a hurried inspection of the Adams we went to visit the Madison, 2,300 seats, across the way, where we met Manager Tom Moule, who gave us a hearty welcome and pointed out its main features of interest. These theaters are a few of the many beautiful houses of the John H. Kunsky Amusement Enterprises of Detroit, all of them high class in every particular and located at and surrounding Grand Circus Park in the center of the city.

Our next call was on W. M. McGee, who presides over the destiny of the Majestic, which has a seating capacity of 2,100. The Majestic is at Willis and Woodward avenues, about one mile out. It is one of the most elaborate theaters in the city of elegant and modern picture theaters. The Regent, a few blocks beyond, is another beautiful theater, seating 2,800. Rod Waggoner, the resident manager in charge, gave us the glad hand and the freedom of the place.

We stopped in the Princess, 1,500 capacity, on Woodward avenue, near Grand Circus Park, owned by A. J. Gilligham. We asked Mr. Gilligham how the United Theaters Booking Corporation was doing in Detroit and he informed us he was not representing them, as it had not yet filed the necessary certificate in the state of Michigan.

Detroit is one of the busiest and most wide-awake cities we visited, and business is on the boom, owing to the large manufacturing interests there and their increased war output. Theaters are doing good business, although the opening of the summer parks, the starting of the steamer excursions on the lake, hot weather and general war conditions are noticeable in comparison to the attendance which might be expected if so many men had not volunteered or been drafted for the army. Within the past week or two 1,400 young men had left for the cantonments and many more have been called. There are 135 houses in Detroit.

Not wishing to overlook any of the interests of the industry we thought we would call on the Detroit exchanges. We were directed to the Mack Building, which houses every known distributing concern but two, the Metro and the Triangle, who are located some distance away. Our time being limited, we called on all we could, although we found some of the managers out. We did meet T. C. McConnell of the World, Field Carmichael of the Fox, J. M. Duncan of the Vitagraph and Dave Weinstock of Strand Features. We left our card at the Universal and Paramount. Outside the building we met Sydney M. Golden of the Nelson Motion Picture Company, a local manufacturing concern, and Lloyd Hammond, who said he was making pictures in Detroit. On Michigan avenue we met King Perry of the Enterprise Amusement Company, with whom we spent a pleasant half hour.

Last, but Not Least.

At Toledo we found a nest of theaters in the loop, or business part of the city. H. C. Horater, of the Alhambra, was there to greet us and we certainly enjoyed the privileges he accorded us. The Alhambra seats 750, well ventilated and nicely equipped with all the modern improvements that go to make its patrons comfortable. The same can be said of the Hippodrome. It is managed by Ernest H. Klink, who is treasurer of the Toledo Amusement Association, recently organized by both motion picture and legitimate managers, including every form of amusement. Mr. Klink informed us that it was formed for mutual protection and interchange of ideas and discussion of local problems.

From the Hippodrome we stopped at the Priscilla, Empress and Regent, all of which are five-cent houses of smaller capacity. Knowing that A. Horwitz is one of the directors of the T. A. A. we stopped in at the Colonial, of which he is the manager. Mr. Horwitz told us that he had always presented burlesque, but dating from Sunday, May 26, he would run feature pictures, starting with "The Unbeliever." As a burlesque house the Colonial has not been very successful of late and will now transform it into a first-class moving picture theater, with a capacity of 750. All of these theaters are on Summit street, in the heart of the city.

Over on St. Claire street we found the Princess, 900 seats. We had quite a chat with Manager R. W. Lebold. He took us through the house and pointed out the many features he had installed. Loew's Valentine, recently taken over by the Marcus Loew circuit, is the largest theater in Toledo, seating 1,500. E. H. Gersele, the manager, who is also on the board of directors of the T. A. A., is justly proud of this handsome theater, which is one of the most attractive in this section.

In the evening a ten-minute trolley ride landed us at the Lyric, 700 seats, on the east side, owned by the Broadway Amusement Company and managed by A. J. Beck, who is secretary of the T. A. A. Mr. Beck has another theater on the south side of the town, the Liberty, seating 1,000, in the Polish section.

At night we attended the performance at the Temple, 1,200 seats. The temple was originally the First Congregational Church. It has been transformed into a beautiful and modern theater, managed by E. A. Zorn. Everything about it is well arranged. The music, by a twelve-piece orchestra, is a feature of this novel theater, which is very impressive when associated with its ecclesiastical origin. Our attendance at the Temple brought us very close to home. The title of his local weekly was a reproduction of the cover of the Moving Picture World, and it certainly did look good. The manager in charge told us it had been selecte on account of the appropriateness of its design.

The Keith Vaudeville theater is now showing pictures fo the summer.

From what we gathered Toledo is doing a fair amount o business, taking into consideration war conditions and th natural effects of warm weather. Mr. Beck told us that 50 young men had been drafted in the neighborhood of th Lyric and 1,200 had volunteered in the Polish district, wher the Liberty is located. There is some talk among the man agers about shutting down for about six weeks this sum mer. There are thirty-seven theaters in Toledo.

If "Perchers" Butt In on You, Get After Them

Treasury Department Decides Clandestine Spectators Mus Contribute Their War Tax.

THE Treasury Department has just announced, through the Bureau of Internal Revenue, a unique decision, o interest to exhibitors who operate open air theaters involving those who witness motion picture shows and base ball games from nearby houseroofs. These persons ar named "perchers" and their action "perching," the applica tion of the terms coming from their likeness to birds. Th similarity was drawn by the bureau's press agent, who ha learned that a colored woman, whose yard adjoins a base ball park, had a tree in the yard which enabled people fo five or ten cents to view the game, the charge being base on whether or not the patron had to climb high into th tree branches or not.

The bureau announces that these "perchers" are subjec to tax just as any other person rightfully paying for a sea within the park, and when the negress was informed o that fact by a Treasury agent her prices immediatel jumped to six and eleven cents, the extra cent being des tined to go to Uncle Sam's pockets to help run the war.

The announcement of the bureau states that admission t outdoor amusement parks is not taxable, but the tax doe apply, however, to amusements within the grounds, such a motion picture exhibitions, side shows, etc., admission t which is more than ten cents.

Registration of all places of amusement required to collec the war tax is provided for under the regulations. Pro prietors must file with the collector of internal revenue statement setting forth the name of the theater or othe place of amusement, its location, capacity, the number o performances given during the year, and the names of per sons interested in the business. Goldwyn to Temper the Summer's Heat

Installing Specially Constructed Air Cooling Device to Re duce Temperature Under Glass Roof of Studio.

A LIFE-SAVING innovation is being inaugurated at th Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee to lower the summer tem perature beneath the great glass roof when the su begins to blaze. It takes the form of a specially constructe air-cooling device originated by Hugo Ballin, the Goldwy art director, and involving thousands of gallons of iced wate and no end of air. Through a network of pipes the wate will flood the roof every hour in the hottest July and Augus days.

The intense heat of last summer is not yet forgotten a the big studio on the hill. It is the determination of Gold wyn that insofar as possible the conditions of last summe shall not be repeated during the months to come. Not onl the stars, but every worker in the big studio, will be pro tected from any chance of collapse. This will be brough about by means of a plan to be put into effect within a few weeks.

At each end of the building is being built a duct about six feet in diameter. Through these openings ouside air wil be pumped into the studio, without, however, there being any trace of draught. A series of openings in the roof wil admit more air and do away with the lack of circulatior complained of in the past.

Iced water will flood the roof at hour intervals through a network of perforated pipes. In conjunction with the constant inflow of fresh air this will keep the atmosphere of the studio at a temperature considerably lower than outside. Preparations are well under way, and within the week the fifty horsepower engine necessary for the improvement will be installed.

Every Goldwyn worker is enthusiastic and the increased efficiency will, it is expected, more than justify the outlay.

Famous Players to Make Cheerful Pictures

In Company's Production, Vice-President Says, Recognition Will Be Given to Change in Public Sentiment.

By Jesse L. Lasky.

THE present world conditions have, it is scarcely necessary to observe, resulted in a pronounced revulsion of feeling and a decided alteration of the public thought, which in turn have had a marked influence upon the character of the amusements provided for public entertainment and edification today. America is finally involved to virtually the fullest extent in the world war, and each day brings closer to the people of this country the actual meaning of the struggle for democracy.

Jesse Lasky.

At such a time it is obvious that the duty of those engaged in manufacturing motion pictures or producing stage plays is to inculcate the spirit of cheerfulness, striving invariably to lift the thought of the people above their troubles, or, by the tone of the entertainment offered, to relieve their minds, if only temporarily, from the tragedy now at our very doors.

At all times the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been actuated by a desire to give the public and the exhibitors the kind of pictures they demanded, and has welcomed advice, suggestions and even censure, if merited, from film showmen or the patrons of the photoplay; and in this connection I wish personally to say that such comment and suggestion that has come to me has been a source of real satisfaction and has been thoroughly appreciated.

From the exhibitors and the public, then, we have received assurance over and over again that cheerful pictures are what are needed and must be produced. The morbid, tragic or depressing element in screen entertainment must be eliminated. This is more than a mere matter of good business sense; it is a national duty. Wars are as much the concern of the people at home as of the men in the trenches, and without the spirit of optimism, cheerfulness and confidence at home no battle is likely to be won. It is psychology simply.

Fairy Tales and Costume Pictures Unpopular Now.

In addition we have become convinced that photoplays dealing with religious subjects, fairy tales, allegories, costume plays and the like are neither desired nor accepted today by exhibitors or public. This condition is a result of a thorough canvass of the situation, a campaign of extensive character, in which showmen in all parts of the country have been interrogated as to their experience with motion pictures. The consensus of opinion has been decidedly against pictures of the character named.

Therefore, in pursuance of the foregoing, I desire to say emphatically that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will hereafter eliminate from its productions all photodramatic offerings of a morbid, depressing or tragic character, as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales, costume plays, allegories, etc.

Wholesome dramas, uplifting in character; clean comedies, comedy-dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production.

Finally, I wish again personally to thank the public and the exhibitors, who have time and again indicated their loyalty to our pictures and evinced an interest that has prompted them to offer sincere suggestions for improvement or change which have proved invaluable in our efforts to give them what they want.

Anna Held Sees "Joan of Plattsburg"

Actress Bravely Awaiting Death Is Entertained for an Hour by Goldwyn Subject.

ANNA HELD, the celebrated French actress, whose physicians have told her she has but a short time to live, saw Goldwyn's "Joan of Plattsburg," starring Mabel Normand, in her own apartments at the Hotel Savoy last week. Lying flat on a wheel chair the invalid, said to be slowly dying of a rare disease of the bones, paid unflagging attention for an hour as the inspiring story of the fortunes of America's little orphan Joan unfolded before her on a two-foot square of linen pinned against the wall of her bedroom.

The showing was arranged for Miss Held by her personal physician, Dr. Donald McCaskey, as a surprise and a diversion from the stressful routine of the sick room. Though six noted specialists have agreed in consultation that the actress cannot survive more than a few days, Dr. McCaskey declines to let her die. He believes an active mind does much to keep even a ravaged body in condition to make the last great fight.

Miss Held was much pleased with the picture and with the spirit which prompted Mabel Normand to ask that it be shown to her unfortunate sister artist of the stage and screen. She enjoyed every minute of it, and afterward asked Dr. McCaskey to write Miss Normand a note expressing her thanks.

The picture was screened with two De Vry portable projection machines so that the end of one reel blended into the beginning of the next and permitted the running of the entire picture without a moment's delay. Miss Held had never before seen a motion picture projected in so small a compass, and expressed her delight over an invention that bids fair to be popular in homes everywhere.

Though the actress is never without agonizing pain she seemed to forget this for an hour as the picture was shown. Dr. McCaskey said afterward he believed it had done her a great deal of good.

THE KATZENJAMMERS BREAK INTO ELECTRICS.

The Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligan cartoon comedies of the International are drawing cards, particularly since Educational enlarged their distribution to include many theaters that had never previously handled cartoons.

Manager Rothapfel availed himself of the drawing power of the famous Kids by putting "Katzenjammer Kids" on the electric light sign of his Rialto theater at Broadway and Forty-second street, the week ending May 25. The cartoon, "Up in the Air," evenly divided interest with the feature play starring Norma Talmadge. The houses were capacity from the beginning to the end of the week. Continuous applause, laughter and comments heard in the audience proved that a large percentage of the spectators had come especially to see the grotesque Captain and the lively Kids as drawn by Gregory Le Cava.

ROTHACKER TO PUSH NATIONAL MEMBERSHIP.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, has been appointed by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as chairman of a membership committee, which will have under its jurisdiction all of the Middle West territory. Mr. Rothacker was one the founders of the National Association when it was organized at Chicago in July, 1916, and he has been one of the most active of the film company executives in promoting and extending the work and activities of the national body since its inception. Mr. Rothacker has a wide acquaintance throughout the country and enjoys an international reputation as one of the most likeable and popular men in the industry.

Goldfish Praises Review Board's Work

Declares Voluntary Body Has Elevated Tone of Pictures 100 Per Cent. and Denounces Efforts to Deride Its Value.

By Samuel Goldfish, President of Goldwyn Pictures.

ALMOST harmful proposal with relation to motion pictures and to the cause of nation-wide amusement has just been under discussion by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at its biennial meeting in Hot Springs, Ark.

The proposal took the form of seeking to extend motion picture censorship across the country through the medium of individual censor boards for each state, and during the debate occasion was taken by several speakers to deride or deprecate the value of the long-established National Board of Review.

Against this effort to minimize the value of the National Board I make vigorous personal protest. In behalf of the sincere and earnest men and women who give their efforts to the work of viewing and passing upon pictures, as a producer of pictures, I desire to indorse the benefits this body has brought and is bringing to the cause of film cleanliness and healthfulness.

I had thought that the old political question of states rights, a source of frequent bitter quarrels between the states and the nation since the Civil War, had been eliminated in the turmoil of world war. The recurrent efforts to foist individual state censorship upon the film industry prove, however, that the states rights agitation hangs on tenaciously in this one direction.

Always it is the custom of reformers who seek to introduce a new mechanism to attack the existing one they wish to supplant, and this accounts for the slurs directed at the National Board of Review in the Arkansas conference. It was notable that the women members of this big and powerful organization did not personally engage in or encourage these attacks, which came from imported censors from other states, who hold positions created for them by state political machines.

Board of Review Has Elevated Picture Tone 100 Per Cent.

The National Board of Review has elevated the tone of motion pictures 100 per cent. It has been the mainstay and backbone of those producers whose inclination is to make clean, wholesome pictures. It has been the deterring mechanism that blocked the way of evil-minded speculators who would have brought ruin to the industry by rushing in and making one or two foul pictures for the quick profits that such productions occasionally earn. I know of no body of men and women more sincere in their purposes or more self-sacrificing in their work than the National Board of Review.

There is today in America, for the first time in the history of our nation, a centralized authority. State lines have been wiped out or forgotten; no state is today questioning the national viewpoint or the national authority in any manner. A President who is the most remarkable figure in our country's history has, with the backing of the public, become the most powerful authority and master any country has ever had. His Food Administrator is a final authority. His Railroad Administrator is a national instrument who cannot be halted by petty individual claims. His Munitions Administrator is unhampered in authority. His purchasing department centralizes the buying of supplies, and no one other than petty politicians and evicted managements stands to question the wisdom and authority of these men.

I mean by these examples to show our complete nationalization in every respect and to urge the nationalization of motion picture inspection and reviewing through the existing National Board of Review. No one can be more in harmony with the aims of the Women's Clubs and with all women in the desire for and insistence upon upholding cleanliness. I have always stood firmly for wholesomeness and cleanliness in pictures. But I wish to point out that the efforts that are being made to induce women's organizations to support individual state censorships all tend to the creation of thirty or forty individual and varying standards of judgment with regard to pictures and that this lack of harmony would do more to undermine picture cleanliness and wholesomeness than anything that has come up in the industry in the last five years.

WARREN JOINS WORLD SCENARIO FORCE.

Giles R. Warren has signed with World Pictures as staff writer. Mr. Warren became connected with motion pictures in 1910, when he was scenario editor for the Imp Company, and it was at that time he inaugurated the policy of replying to contributors with personal letters.

Stay Away From Capital Urges Crandal

Washington Exhibitor Declares Visit of Any Protesting Committee Will Result Only in Increased Tax.

THE rumor has reached Washington that the film industry is about to send a committee there to work for the relief of the business from the motion picture taxes placed upon it in the recent revenue laws. The House Ways and Means Committee has announced that it would give an opportunity to all interested trades to have representatives appear before it prior to the drafting of the proposed new revenue measure, the hearings to commence on June 6.

That the motion picture industry take no such action is strongly urged by Harry M. Crandall, who is keeping in close touch with the legislative situation here. To do so, he declares, may have the effect of inducing new legislation for the industry with accompanying new taxes.

"The House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee are going to hold hearings, but to my mind they are not opening the tax controversy to take anything off. That is a foregone conclusion, for the President, the Secretary of the Treasury and everybody else is declaring a need for more and more money to be obtained by such taxation. Congress is going to put more taxes on everything that it thinks will be able to stand additional levies.

"This is not the time for any individual or any committee to come to Washington to try and get Congress to take the present taxes off. The chances are 99 to 1 that such action will only result in either more taxes being put on or the present taxes being revised so that the exhibitors and manufacturers will have to stand a heavier burden. There are plenty of new ways that could be devised to put taxes on the moving picture industry, and Congress will not be slow in finding them if it thinks anybody is dodging his share.

"Speaker Champ Clark, of the House of Representatives, in a speech recently, said that the decision to hold hearings would result in the coming here of hundreds of buccaneers seeking to have taxes removed or industries exempted from proposed taxation. He declared he had no sympathy with the men who seek to get out from under their duty of helping to support the Government and join in paying for the war. His ideas are similar to those of many other members of Congress.

"Official Washington looks upon the men who try to dodge their share of any of the burdens placed upon the whole country as unpatriotic. The film business is not unpatriotic, and furthermore, it is not particularly suffering because of the present taxes placed upon the amusement business alone. We feel the excess profits taxes immensely, but that is aside from the admission and footage taxes against which the committee rumored as coming here from New York would work. Let sleeping dogs lie, is my advice, and cease agitation that is going to rebound against the industry."

The understanding here is that the Ways and Means Committee plan no new taxes for the industry, other than those that will come in a general way through levies on incomes and excess profits, but Congress is in other than a happy frame of mind because of being kept in session during extreme hot weather, and this bodes ill for those persons or those industries that are deemed "slackers."

LOUISE HUFF TO STAR IN WORLD PICTURE.

World Pictures announces that on June 3 Louise Huff will start work in the World Studio, in a picture bearing the title of "T'other Dear Charmer." The story was written by Charles Sarver. Miss Huff's most recent work has been with J. Stuart Blackton and Paramount. In Mr. Blackton's picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker novel, "Wild Youth," she played the leading role. She also appeared with Jack Pickford in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," "Jack and Jill," "Great Expectations," and the picturization of some of Charles Dickens' stories. She also played the lead in a number of other Paramount productions.

ONTARIO AGAIN JACKS UP FILM TAX.

The Ontario Provincial Government has decided to charge a tax of 25 cents a month on each reel of film as long as the film is in use. This tax will be collected from the exchanges and is designed to clear all old pictures off the market. The annual fee for moving picture exchanges has been raised from $150 to $200 a year, but the privileges under an exchange license have been extended to permit an exchange to operate a special or traveling show. Formerly an exchange was required to take out a special show license costing $150. The fee for traveling film shows has also been raised from $150 to $200.

A Section of the Great Wall, China. The Rainbow Bridge, Compared with the Flatiron Building. Molten Lava, Kilauea

Scenes from E. M. Newman Travel Pictures, Released by Educational Films Corporation of America.

Newman Hunts Out the Remote Spots

Many Picturesque Nooks Brought to the Screen by Educational Films Corporation.

THE war is making the Allied countries (and the neutrals, too) America's next door neighbors in a very real sense. The Newman Travels, which the Educational Films Corporation are bringing out with pre-releases at the Rothapfel theaters and regular releases monthly or fortnightly throughout the country, present the remotest nooks of the earth, but in an up-to-date way that ties them up to present events.

Among the lands picturalized by E. M. Newman in this series are Japan and China, our oriental Allies; Brazil, our chief South American ally; Peru, the land of the Incas; our new possessions, the Virgin Islands, and the life and scenery of American dependencies such as Porto Rico and Hawaii, as well as the great American Southwest.

Here are three remarkable snapshots from the E. M. Newman motion picture series. The first shows him photographed in front of the Great Wall of China, which the medieval Chinese Emperors fondly imagined would guard them against barbaric incursion from the West and North. Another striking view is of the solidified lava on the mountainside of a Hawaiian volcano. Nature literally sculptured the flowing fluid just as the human sculptor casts into stone the grace of moving foliage, wind-swept drapery or waving locks. The stupendous natural achievement of "The Rainbow Bridge" is represented by 1,000 feet, picturing the journey to and from the desert wilderness and the vast structure itself, as "shot" from many angles. It stands 309 feet in height, is 277 feet wide and 30 feet thick. The Brooklyn Bridge is small beside it, and the Flatiron Building could easily go under it. Next to the Grand Canyon itself, the Rainbow Bridge is the greatest monument of the American Southwest. Newman is one of less than one hundred white men who have visited it, and the only one who has pictured it. The film, which is presently to be shown, should attract an unusual amount of attention.

James Calnay Caught in Galveston

Gorge Roy Clough, Freelance Cameraman, Recognizes Him from Picture in This Paper.

THANKS to the Moving Picture World the industry is minus another 'producer' whose wildcat schemes and companies can easily be spared in these times of war and economy," writes Louis D. Lewyn, a Houston subscriber to the Moving Picture World.

"Through the columns of the World it was made known several weeks ago that a certain James Calnay, alias Kalany, was badly wantd by the Louisville, Ky., police for embezzlement, and other charges preferred in Louisville, in which city this man operated a studio, school of acting, and other pet fakir schemes, and that anyone who knew the whereabouts of this 'producer' would not only confer a favor on the chief of police, at Louisville, by communicating with him immediately, but would also be doing the trade a service by helping to eliminate crooks from the moving picture industry.

"The desired Mr. Calnay is at this writing in the Galveston, Tex., 'kooler," awaiting the arrival of a deputy to accompany him back to Louisville, and all credit for bringing about the arrest of this party is due George Roy Clough, freelance camera man, of Galveston, an ardent reader of the Moving Picture World, who lost no time in bringing this man to justice, and so doing the profession a service which all should recognize, through his alertness and sense of justice."

A few days ago Calnay called on Cameraman Clough at 2419 Q street, Galveston, to photograph some motion pictures for him. Recognizing him from a cut printed in our March 30 issue, he got in touch with some friends in Houston, where Calnay had been more recently operating, and made sure of his man. He thereupon had an officer go with him to the Panama hotel and make the arrest.

Congress Providing for Soldiers' Rehabilitation

Among Occupations Listed for Injured Men Are Operating, Photography and Theatrical Mechanics.

THE Senate has passed a bill providing for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces. The bill is modeled generally along the line of the law now in operation in Canada, and there was introduced into the Senate, as a part of the debate, a list of the occupations being trained for in the Dominion by soldiers who return from France after suffering the loss of one or more limbs.

The list introduced by Senator Smith, of Georgia, gives 196 occupations, among them motion picture machine operating, photography and theatrical mechanics. This bill, which now goes before the House of Representatives, has been declared to be a most important measure, as it will directly affect the thousands of men who will return maimed before the expiration of the war.

The occupations provided, however, do not include only indoor pursuits, by any means, but list a large number of outdoor occupations which can be followed without difficulty by men who have suffered the loss of a leg or foot.

It will be noted the men in the motion picture industry who return thus disabled will be able to continued in their former occupations or a modification thereof, in Canada, by the inclusion of the three industries listed above.

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS BACKING UP GOVERNMENT

The fine services which Cincinnati theaters, without exception, are rendering in the matter of cooperation in the various lines of publicity and educational work desired by the Government have been commented on in these columns before, but the exhibitors themselves are not yet satisfied with their work. A special meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce was held recently for the purpose of discussing means for giving even more efficient service, in order to forward Government activities of all sorts in and around Cincinnati. The Federal and local authorities in charge of war work have recognized fully the value of the screen as an advertising medium for them, and are highly appreciative of the patriotic attitude of the exhibitors.

EVANS GOES WITH UNIVERSAL AT MINNEAPOLIS.

C. R. Evans, who has been with the General Film Company for some time, has been engaged by the Universal Minneapolis Exchange to take charge of the features of Jewel Productions.

Select to Release Marion Davies Films

Contract Calling for Six Productions Starts Off with "Cecilia of the Pink Roses."

CONFIRMING earlier reports on an important recent picture transaction, Select Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition to its ranks of Marion Davies, whose defection from the stage, upon which she has been one of the noted beauties, has been accompanied by a notable publicity campaign.

Miss Davies has signed a contract with Select, calling for the production of six pictures in which she is to be starred during the first year. The first of these pictures is "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," a screen presentation of Katharine Haviland Taylor's popular novel of the same name. This picture was produced under the direction of Julius Steger, who has taken full charge of the work of bringing Miss Davies' personality and features to the screen in the first of her Select Series. Adroit director as he is, and thoroughly versed in all the lore of both speaking and shadow stage, Mr. Steger has accomplished much in the screening of "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," and has created in the screen presentation of Miss Davies a new idol for picturegoers to admire.

Marion Davies.

The avalanche of advertising and publicity of every form, coupled with the reception given the picture at its first private showing to an invtied audience, resulted in the immediate booking of "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" for the week of June 2 by the Rivoli theater and its booking for simultaneous showing during the same week, starting June 3, in all of the Loew theaters in Greater New York.

This presentation of the picture over the Loew circuit at the same time that it is playing at the Rivoli is said to be the first instance of such duplicate presentation in one of New York's great first-run houses, and in a chain of theaters blanketing all sections of the greater city during the same period.

Company Publicity Supreme, Says Cochrane

Universal's Vice-President Tells Publicity Department It May Ignore at Its Discretion Names of Officers and Employees.

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has taken official recognition of the controversy waged in the columns of the Moving Picture World on the deficiencies of the publicity director.

In his capacity as being directly responsible for all advertising and publicity of the Universal company Mr. Cochrane has transmitted to the employees of the publicity department the information that in the future they are at liberty to use their own discretion in the mention of the name of any official or employee of the company.

If the mention of the name of an official or an employee will add to the strength of a story Mr. Cochrane's instructions are that the name shall be used. On the other hand, he declares that names must not be mentioned when they fail to add to the strength of the story. This rule applies from the highest executive to the newest office boy.

"We are not running a personal publicity bureau," Mr. Cochrane explains. "We are in the business of making and marketing pictures. It is publicity that will assist in the sale of those pictures that we desire. Any other kind of publicity doesn't count. It means nothing to the exhibitor or to the public to say that a certain individual produced a certain picture when that individual had failed to make a reputation by past performances."

Mr. Cochrane declared that he doesn't care if the name of an individual ever appears again in a story originating in the Universal publicity department so long as the effort of the department shows in increased publicity and increased business.

NEW YORK MANAGER ENLISTS.

Dave Weinstock of the City Hall Theater Has Been Called to Camp Merritt.

ON Park Row, New York City, opposite the Post Office, in 1914, David Weinstock associated himself with the Little Bijou Theater as its manager. It was looked upon at the time as a daring enterprise to launch in the midst of an exclusively commercial and financial district, the busiest section of the city. From the start it met with success and grew steadily in favor as a haven where tired business men could while away an hour or so, seeking rest from the trials and problems of commerce. At night when the marts of trade were closed for the day janitors of the big office buildings and their families filled the little theater until it was found necessary to enlarge and embellish it. On October 19, 1916, the Little Bijou was transformed into the City Hall theater and David Weinstock continued as its manager. For four years he has been a figure and benefactor in the lower part of the great metropolis.

David Weinstock.

On June 3 Mr. Weinstock left for Camp Merritt, Tenafly, N. J. He has enlisted and been assigned to the Quartermaster's Department. Regardless of his call to service he held to his post at the City Hall theater until the last. During the Red Cross drive, as a fitting climax to his labors, he collected $57.21 at his theater, and a few weeks previous raised a handsome purse for the Catholic War Fund, as well as disposing of a large amount of Liberty Loan Bonds. His theater was at all times open to the four minute men and at the disposal of the government in its propaganda work.

Dave Weinstock has always taken an active part in exhibitors' affairs and was this year made secretary of the New York Exhibitors' League, Manhattan Local No. 1. In assuming his duties in the service of Uncle Sam he has the well wishes of the motion picture industry and the many friends he has made in every branch of it. Jack Devick will succeed Mr. Weinstock in the management of the City Hall theater.

METRO PICTURES FOR SANDY HOOK MEN.

Due to the action of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, Metro pictures are being shown free every Saturday night to the soldiers at Fort Hancock, which is one of the most important heavy artillery posts in the country. As the fort is somewhat off the beaten track it has not been regularly visited by the entertainers who are so often seen at other camps. This need of entertainment came to the notice of Miss Elaine Sterne, a first lieutenant of the National Honor Guard. Miss Sterne consulted June Mathis, of Metro's scenario department, who in turn consulted Mr. Rowland, with the result that the boys are assured of motion pictures every Saturday night. The first night that the sign "Free Movies" went up outside the Y. M. C. A. tent the place was literally mobbed, every one of the 6,000 men apparently wanting to get in at once.

Metro pictures are now the only regular feature of entertainment at the naval hospital in Brooklyn.

Film Studio Projected in San Francisco

Among the Promoters Are Such Prominent Names As Anderson, Hodkinson, Malone, Farnsworth and Dixon.

FRED WARD, advance agent of the Society Players Film Company, arrived in San Francisco recently and launched plans for the establishment of a large studio in the immediate vicinity of that city. He states that the San Francisco possibilities have been canvassed and found highly satisfactory from every standpoint. The fact that the peninsula district is credited by the Smithsonian Institute as possessing a perfect climate, with more hours of sunshine per year than any other community in California, is an added factor in the selection of this city as a producing site.

Carl Anderson, who recently disposed of his interests in Paralta Plays, Inc., and who will become executive manager of the new corporation, has also been here to help with the preliminary plans. Others interested in the new $6,000,000 corporation are Dudley Field Malone, former collector of the port of New York; F. Eugene Farnsworth, president; Dr. Thomas Dixon and H. Grattan Donnelly, authors; E. R. Sherburne, vice-president and treasurer; Miss A. Blackburn and W. W. Hodkinson. Those interested in the concern declare that the climatic and scenic attractions of the San Francisco Bay region so far excel those of any other part of America and that it is but a matter of time until this section takes its place as a great producing as well as distributing and export center. Madlaine Traverse Forming Company

AS previously announced, the Madlaine Traverse Pictures Corporation is in process of formation and soon will be in position to announce its officers and the personnel of the company. Madlaine Traverse, the star of the organization, in addition to her popularity on the speaking stage, is no stranger to the lovers of the film drama, having been seen to advantage in "Three Weeks," "The Money Master," "Fruits of Desire," "The Shielding Shadow," "The Closing Net," "The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Sins of Ambition," and other successes.

Her last work for the screen was as Madame Caillaux in "The Caillaux Case," which will be disclosed to a waiting public as soon as the final touches can be put to it. It may be remarked that Miss Traverse is only just recovering from the exceedingly strenuous work incidental to the taking of the picture. She is now playing in "Yes or No" at the Longacre theater.

Madlaine Traverse.

Madlaine Traverse was inoculated with the stage fever when she was twelve years of age. Her initial appearance was in her father's stock company, and at fifteen years of age she was playing leads. She was afterward sent to Europe to study for the voice and diction. Her first engagement on her return was in support of Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady" in New York, on tour, and also in London. She again studied for the voice, resuming her career in "Joseph and His Brethren." She was afterward seen in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" in New York and Chicago.

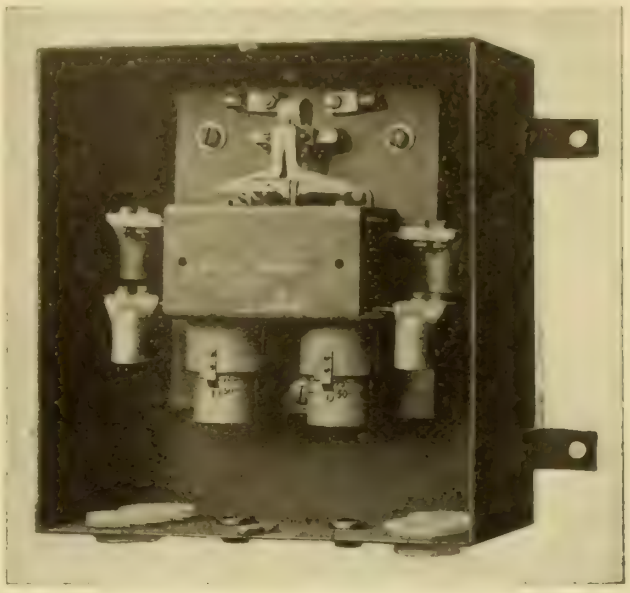
At this juncture Miss Traverse took up motion picture work, and her unqualified success as a screen subject has led to the ultimate formation of the corporation bearing her name. Feature productions only will be the output of the company, and each will be noted for its careful preparation and attention to the minutest detail. Miss Traverse has already accepted one scenario and is preparing an unusual and a costly wardrobe. The first releases of the Madlaine Traverse Pictures Corporation may be looked for in the early autumn.

A Safety First Relay

An Efficient Method of Providing Overload Protection for Alternating Current Appliances.

THE Safety First relay manufactured by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, provides a neat, safe, and efficient method of supplying overload protection for alternating current applications equipped with starters or switches having low-voltage protection.

The relay is enclosed in a sheet steel case which excludes dust and foreign particles of all kinds. The cover of this case is secured by two thumb screws and is provided with a safety device which automatically trips the relay when the cover is removed, thus rendering all parts of the relay "dead" as long as the cover remains off, so that inspection or repairs can be made without danger.



Westinghouse Safety First Relay.

This case is arranged for wall-mounting in any convenient place near the switching equipment.

The relay operates by means of magnet coils, which are inactive at loads less than that for which they are set. When the current value reaches or exceeds this setting, the coils lift plungers, which break the control circuit and operate the low-voltage relay to open the line circuit. With no current flowing in the line, the coils are de-energized and the relay is automatically reset, the bridge being pressed against the contacts by means of a compression spring.

The plungers operate in oil dash-pots, providing a time element which allows the relay to carry a momentary overload without tripping.

This time limit is adjustable by means of a small perforated disc in the dash-pot, which is readily accessible by unscrewing the dash-pot from the casting which holds it. Turning the disc so that more perforations are uncovered lessens the time of the momentary overload; with fewer perforations, the time element is increased.

These relays will operate over a wide range of current values, for which adjustments can readily be made by lowering or raising the dash-pot. This is marked with a scale, and an indicator clearly shows the tripping value.

To prevent accidental change of adjustment from vibration or jar, a spring lock is provided which holds the dash-pot firmly.

The relay is mounted on a base which completely insulates it from the case, within which all connections are made. This case can be arranged for either open or conduit wiring.

The safety device by which the relay is tripped on removal of the cover is a flat looped spring, which when free to act, holds the contact bridge away from the contacts. When the cover is fastened in place, this spring is depressed by a pin on the cover, thus allowing the contact to be made between contacts and bridge.

These relays are made in all commercial frequencies and voltages, and in capacities of 5 to 300 amperes.

Further details and information regarding prices may be obtained from the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa.

Famous Players-Lasky Reaching Out

John C. Graham Sails to Complete in Association with Syndicate Headed by Eduardo Suarez Formation of South Pacific Paramount Company.

A FEW days ago John Cecil Graham, general foreign representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed from an American port bound for Chile, to complete the organization of a corporation which will be known as the South Pacific Paramount Company, which will handle the distribution of Paramount and Artcraft films in Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

The headquarters of the corporation will be located at Santiago, Chile, and associated with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the enterprise will be a coterie of prominent local capitalists and business men, headed by Eduardo Suarez, formerly Chilean Ambassador to the United States. The completion of this corporation will be the result of negotiations started months ago between Mr. Suarez and E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of Famous Players - Lasky Corporation.

John C. Graham.

"The business will be launched by about 125 productions featuring the most prominent stars," said Mr. Graham, in an interview before he sailed, "and these subjects have been most carefully selected under expert advice as suitable for the theatrical requirements of the countries in which they will be exhibited. The business will be inaugurated along advanced progressive lines, similar to those now in vogue in the United States which have made Paramount and Artcraft household words from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. This will include publicity drives and exceptional service to exhibitors, which will no doubt command wide attention as such methods are entirely unheard of in South America at this time. Following the 125 subjects already selected we will continue to supply the market on the basis of at least two new features each week.

Big Demand Anticipated for American Scenics.

"The world war has aroused the interest of South American countries in other parts of the globe, and we are sending a considerable quantity of scenics. The welding of closer business relations with the United States will no doubt make pictures of this country particularly desirable, and we anticipate a big demand for such subjects. For other short subjects, including comedy films, arrangements will be made after my arrival in Chile. I am convinced that a ready market can be established for the extraordinary comedy productions being produced by Mack Sennett and Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle.

"This project is inaugurated under most favorable conditions, as our pictures have been so thoroughly protected at home that but an infinitesimal amount has fallen into the hands of improper parties, and these pictures will be absolutely first run in those countries. Furthermore, we are soliciting the business at a time when a healthy demand exists for our goods, for in my various interviews, from time to time, with theatrical men from both Peru and Chile, they have expressed gratification that a high grade product, such as ours, will be available to them on a legitimate marketing basis.

"With this additional distribution point established, we will be represented throughout South America, and it will add one more link in the chain of world-wide distribution which is now practically complete, excepting, of course, enemy countries."

Eduardo Suarez is well known in diplomatic and financial circles, and has been impressed with the magnitude of the film industry in the United States. He is a man of integrity and high standing, as evidenced by the important position he occupied, and he has associated with him a group of men of the same calibre, who will be jointly interested with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the new venture.

Mr. Graham sailed on a ship of the United States and Pacific Line, a company authorized by the Government to promote business relations between the United States and the west coast of South America. The trip requires about nineteen days, via the Panama Canal.

Tallis of Australia in New York

Half Owner of J. C. Williamson, Ltd., Here to Purchase Stage Plays and Arrange Goldwyn Distribution.

BOOKING thus far received on Goldwyn Pictures in Australia have never been equaled in the history of the industry, according to George Tallis, who, in partnership with Hugh Ward, owns J. C. Williamson, Ltd., the theatrical trust of the Antipodes, who arrived in New York last week to purchase some of the current stage successes and to attend to details of the distribution of the Goldwyn productions in his country.

In January last Williamsons entered into a contract with Goldwyn for the distribution of its productions. The first of these, "Polly of the Circus," opened the last week in March at the Theater Royal, in Sydney, with the largest symphony orchestra in Australia. A week later it was given its first showing in Melbourne at the Paramount theater.

F. W. Thring, who manages the Williamson enterprises, has obtained record bookings for the Goldwyn productions, Mr. Tallis declares. He considers Mr. Thring the ablest motion picture man in Australia and says that the record achieved by Goldwyn Pictures through his efforts is no more than he expected.

Among the Williamson theaters of Australia are Her Majesty's theater, the Theater Royal and the Majestic in Sydney, and Her Majesty's theater and the Theater Royal in Melbourne. In addition to these houses the Williamsons also have beautiful theaters in Perth, Adelaide and Brisbane. In Melbourne they own the Paramount theater, a most pretentious motion picture house, and the Star and Victoria theaters.

Mr. Tallis was accompanied to New York by George Smith, manager of the Theater Royal of Melbourne. He is going to buy an American car and motor to San Francisco, from which port he will sail for Sydney. He will be here until about July 1.

Call for Screen Players for "Over There"

Harry Raver to Organize a Company of Two Men and Two Women to Entertain Soldiers.

WORKING in conjunction with America's Over-There Theater League, in an effort to supply our soldiers behind the lines with entertainment, Harry Raver is organizing a company of four to appear in a novel picture, the story of which will be written by a famous author, the production made on this side, before sailing, and reproduced in the Y. M. C. A. huts, after being enacted and "taken" by the company in the presence of the audience.

The aim of Mr. Raver in working on the project is to produce a novelty in the hope of presenting to "our boys" a new angle of the motion picture as well to assist the Over-There Theater League in the splendid work it has undertaken. The most prominent men and women of the legitimate and vaudeville branches have volunteered their services and Mr. Raver hopes to enlist four prominent names, distinguished in pictures, for the plan under way. The requirements are for one leading man, one heavy man, one ingenue and one "vampire."

These must be over twenty-five years of age, American born, descendants of American born parents and grandparents, able to give character references of six American citizens, birth certificates, or if not available proof of birth by affidavit of member of family, and must have no immediate relatives serving under the American colors. Only reasonable physical fitness necessary. Applicants must be in sympathy with and loyal to the war aims of the United States.

Mr. Raver wants to hear from those who feel the call of duty and who are willing to spend three months on the other side. The Y. M. C. A. will supply ocean transportation and actual living and traveling expenses. America's Over-There Theater League offers, in addition, "a soldier's wage" of $2 a day for extras and incidentals while in France. Harry Raver can be reached at Suite 825, Knickerbocker Theater Building, 1402 Broadway.

Business Prospects Not Bad

Over Forty Theater Managers Interviewed Around Pittsburgh—Tendency in Direction of Outright Ownership.

THE warm weather, together with the abnormal war conditions, is beginning to make an impression on business in the towns surrounding Pittsburgh. I have interviewed about forty exhibitors from various towns in Western Pennsylvania and all of them complained of the falling off of business. Many of them were not disheartened, however, as they attributed the situation to the usual yearly dropping off in May. There are those, however, who feel that the draft is making a marked decrease in business, one town in particular showing a departure of 700 men through induction or enlistment. This exhibitor explains that the younger men were the backbone of his patronage, together with their girl friends or relatives. Since their departure the girls and relatives have pursued other avocations in their spare time. Yet there are not many theaters for sale in the district considering the general decline of business. Perhaps better business for the theaters is looked forward to by the majority of exhibitors.

There is more building of theaters and remodeling and enlarging of old ones than has ever occurred in the history of the industry in this section. Week after week I have reported new theaters under construction, and these are fairly well scattered over the territory. A small group of exhibitors and exchangemen have formed a company to purchase outright property in three towns of an industrial nature near Pittsburgh, and erect theaters in the near future to seat between 600 and 700 each. It is understood that the first theater will be built in Milvale, the second in or near Sharpsburg, while the location of the third has not been exactly determined. The locations for the first two have been purchased and the deals closed. The idea of this group seems to be to avoid large propositions and avoid where possible rental or lease arrangements, outright purchase being deemed almost a necessity to make the theaters paying propositions.

There have been any number of instances where the exhibitors have made a real show-house out of a "lemon" through untiring effort and good judgment only to have the landlord step in and ask for an exorbitant rental on renewal of short-term leases. A short time ago a census was taken by an exhibitor in the Beaver Valley section, which is a prosperous picture section, and it was found that only three exhibitors out of about fifty owned the property on which their theaters were built. The general end of operations in the future will unquestionably be to buy outright and get away from high rentals and uncertain tenancy.

Votes Approve Sunday Film Shows

Nashville Favors Sunday Moving Pictures Ten to One—Mayor Still Stands Against Them.

WITH a vote that surpassed by several hundred the total vote cast in the last election in both the city and county Sunday moving pictures in Nashville were approved in a newspaper voting contest by an unprecedented majority. Over 9,000 voters took part, and of this number 8,237 voted "yes" and 844 voted "no."

After this overwhelming display of favor for Sunday pictures committees from various churches got into action, and on Monday morning, May 27, visited the city hall with protests. Mayor Gupton announced that Sunday pictures would not be permitted in Nashville under any circumstances. He contended that there are both city and state laws against Sunday amusements, and if the city commission failed to stand by him on the question he would invoke the aid of the state law. Just how he considered the question of Sunday baseball within the city limits on Sunday was not entered into at the meeting.

About seventy-five men comprised the committee from the churches which called on the mayor, headed by Dr. James I. Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. After talks and appeals by various ministers and churchgoers against Sunday pictures the Rev. A. S. Allen, of the Second Presbyterian Church, North Nashville, took the floor and said he resented the specious plea to unload the move for the Sunday shows on the laboring man, declaring that the seventh day was the only time the laboring man had for recreation and that Sunday shows meant more work. This point had previously been argued in various quarters, and clearly showed that the few employees who would be forced to work on Sunday to entertain thousands would do so cheerfully, and would be well repaid for their efforts. The Rev. Mr. Allen seems to have gained little through taking this stand.

Ballots in the newspaper contest were passed around in various churches, and the various congregations voted on the question. The pastor of McKendree Church, in presenting his side of the case, declared that the mayor and two other city commissioners voted against Sunday pictures at a recent service.

Many men when casting their votes remarked that they had little time for moving pictures, but favored seven-day pictures for the betterment of their employees.

At the Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 2 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

The RIVOLI.—Marion Davies in "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" was the screen feature at the Rivoli the week of June 2. The photoplay was taken from Katherine Haviland Taylor's novel, and was directed by Julius Steger. The story deals with a girl of the tenement house district, whose father becomes wealthy and sends her to a finishing school. The Animated Pictorial, a scenic and a comedy were included on the program.

The RIALTO.—"Believe Me, Xantippe," with Wallace Reid and Ann Little in the leads, was shown at the Rialto. The picture is one of the most entertaining comedies ever made from a stage success, and is excellently played. The Animated Magazine, a scenic and a comedy completed the screen numbers. Greek Evans and Miss Greta Torpadie were the soloists.

The STRAND.—Marguerite Clark, in a screen version of "Prunella," a stage play in which she has already scored a success, was the principal attraction at the Strand. The work is a delightful fantasy, and has been charmingly produced by Maurice Tourneur. Jules Raucourt heads the supporting company. The sixth of the Chester-Outing scenics, a Bob Bakker animal picture, James Montgomery Flagg's "The Spoiled Girl," another chapter of Raymond L. Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" and the Topical Review completed the picture program. Mery Zentay was the soloist.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—Bessie Barriscale in "Rose o' Paradise" and a chapter of "The Eagle's Nest," first half. Louise Glaum in "Shackled," last half.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Ninth week of "Hearts of the World."

LYRIC.—Second week "Pershing's Crusaders."

BROADWAY.—"The Model's Confession."

A CORRECTION AS TO BUFFALO.

Upon my return to New York from my recent trip west I was confronted by a telegram from the Palace theater, Buffalo, setting forth the fact that my criticism of the Palace theater, as published in the May 11 issue, did not fit the Palace theater of that city at all. The Palace cited several excellent reasons why this was so. I was considerably puzzled until reference to my Buffalo notes and some thinking proved that I was in error. An apology is due the Palace theater. It is hereby tendered, with the note that in fully 25,000 miles of travel, during which I have visited theaters literally by the hundreds, this is the first time I have been called upon to admit error in theater description or criticism. But I am sorry than even one error has occurred.

The United Film Service also wrote, directing my attention to the very evident error.

FLAHERTY OF DE LUXE GOES TO UPTON.

De Luxe Pictures, Inc., has its first star in its service flag. John Flaherty, who has been assistant cameraman of the organization since its inception, was summoned before his local draft board in Brooklyn last week, passed the examination, and left the following day for Camp Upton. On the day of his departure Doris Kenyon, star of De Luxe, presented Mr. Flaherty with a purse from herself and associates in the organization, with all of whom Mr. Flaherty was extremely popular.

MISS COURTOT MAKES APPEARANCE IN RIDGEWOOD

At the Play House, Ridgewood, N. J., on Tuesday, May 28, Marguerite Courtot made a personal appearance in Connection with "The Unbeliever," in which she is featured. She was introduced to the audience at both the evening performances by W. W. Young, the manager. The Play House seats 800 and is one of the most up-to-date theaters in New Jersey.

shers Must Be Girls, Decrees Crowder

If Men Are Employed They Must Be Outside of Draft Age —Clause Regarding Clerks May Hit Exchanges.

EXHIBITORS will be compelled to resort to the use of girl ushers and attendants or employ men not subject to draft, under the terms of the new regulations, aimed at idlers but affecting workers in many lines, just announced by the office of the Provost Marshal General. The intention is "of compelling men not engaged in a useful occupation immediately to apply themselves to some form of labor contributing to the general good. The idler, too, will find himself confronted with the alternative of finding suitable employment or entering the Army."

This regulation provides that after July 1 any registrant who is found by a local board to be a habitual idler or not engaged in some useful occupation shall be summoned before the board, given a chance to explain, and, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, to be inducted into the military service of the United States.

Motion picture and other actors are specifically exempted from the working of this regulation, but it will affect among others:

"Persons, including ushers and other attendants, engaged and occupied in and in connection with games, sports and amusements, excepting actual performers in legitimate concerts, operas or theatrical performances.

"Sales clerks and other clerks employed in stores and other mercantile establishments."

While the theaters stand to lose ushers, ticket takers, doormen, etc., etc., the exchanges face a similar problem—it may be that they will be included and therefore lose the services of bookers, bookkeepers, shipping clerks, and others. And the regulations further state that "Men who are engaged as above will not be permitted to seek relief because of the fact that they have drawn a late order number or because they have been placed in Class 2, 3 or 4 on the grounds of dependency. The fact that he is not usefully employed will outweigh both of the above conditions."

There is a proviso, however, that local boards may give consideration to special circumstances governing the employment of men in the classes referred to, where there are compelling domestic circumstances that would not permit a change of employment by the registrant without disproportionate hardship to his dependents, or where a change from non-useful to useful employment would necessitate a removal of the registrant or his family.

Stanley Company Under Charges

Federal Trade Commission Alleges Philadelphia Organization's Methods Have Been Unfair.

A NUMBER of charges involving unfair methods of competition have been made by the Federal Trade Commission against the Stanley Booking Corporation, of Philadelphia. It is alleged that "with the purpose and effect of stifling and suppressing competition in the sale and leasing of moving picture films, the Stanley Booking Corporation" resorted to the methods complained of. The defendants will be given an opportunity to meet the following allegations that it has

(a) By divers means and methods caused contracts for the exhibition of films entered into by its competitors to be broken and canceled, which was designed to and did embarrass, harass, and hinder these competitors in the conduct of their business.

(b) Procured films advertised for exhibition by competitors, and displayed them in advance of the dates advertised by these competitors, the displays occurring in theaters near those of such competitors, and the price of admission being less than was advertised by the competitors.

(c) Leased, sold, and made contracts for the leasing and sale of films on the condition that the purchaser or lessee shall not use or exhibit the films dealt in by competitors of the Stanley Booking Corporation.

(d) By threats and various methods of intimidations compelled owners and operators of numerous moving picture theaters to pay the Stanley Booking Corporation 10 per cent. of the cost of films booked directly from producers.

(e) Compelled owners and operators of numerous moving picture theaters in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware to book films through the Stanley Booking Corporation through threats to cut off their supply of films.

(f) By threats of withdrawal of its patronage and divers methods of intimidation compelled producers of films and exchanges handling films to cease supplying certain of its competitors.

Brooklyn to Have Novel Screen Theater

Ice Palace to Be Transferred for Pictures and to Have Seating Capacity of 2,500.

TO bridge over the summer months, when the ice skating craze is at its lowest ebb, the management of the Brooklyn Ice Skating Palace, Bedford and Atlantic avenues, announces that the policy of the big amphitheater will be changed to that of high-class picture presentation for the period of the summer months. Whether this policy will continue next season or not has as yet been undecided, but it was said that very likely pictures would be the future policy of the house.

In refitting the house for picture offerings plans have been drawn for the rebuilding of the entire interior. Architecturely the management is ambitious to make the Ice Palace one of the finest theater properties in Brooklyn and particular attention will be directed to the seating, lighting and to the general convenience and comfort of the patrons. Work on the remodeling has been underway for some weeks, with the contractors pledged to deliver the house complete in the early days of June.

The plans call for a seating capacity of 2,500, every seat having a perfect view of the stage and screen and being roomy.

A feature of the house will be a symphony orchestra of twenty-five members, with a huge pipe organ as a background. At every performance it is the intention of the management to devote a half to three-quarters of an hour to operatic concerts before the regular show.

The monster ice plant that was used to make the ice for skating will now be used to refrigerate the theater. For the ladies the management will fit up a large room with wicker furniture of the cottage type, including the most comfortable chairs, divans and rockers of this particular ware. The hanging and coverings will be of a delicate chintz. For the men a room will be fitted up along club lines, giving the "tired business man" all the comforts common in the first class clubs.

Although the opening program has not been selected, it will be the policy of the house to offer the biggest pictures in the market, at the box office price of 10 cents in the afternoon and 15 cents at night.

May Export Film to Denmark

War Trade Board Announces Method to Follow in Applying for License to Ship on Vessels Flying Danish Flag.

THE War Trade Board at Washington, D. C., announces that hereafter applications for licenses to export moving picture films now being considered for exportation to Sweden and European Holland will be considered also for exportation to Denmark proper.

In the case of proposed shipment to Denmark the prospective importer abroad must first obtain an import certificate from the Danish Merchants' Guild. When this certificate is received, the prospective importer will advise the exporter in the United States of the serial number. Applications for export licenses must be made on application form X, and the applicant must attach thereto the appropriate supplemental information sheets, and also supplemental information sheet X-105, upon which must be noted the Danish Merchants' Guild import certificate serial number. Such shipments need not be consigned to the Danish Merchants' Guild, but may be consigned to an individual. Licenses will be valid for shipment only on vessels flying the Danish flag.

"Revelation" Is Issued in Book Form

Funk & Wagnalls Issue "The Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," with Illustrations from the Film.

FUNK & WAGNALLS have just issued in an attractive volume "The Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," by Mabel Wagnalls, which originally appeared in Snappy Stories and which forms the basis of the Metro production of "Revelation," with Mme. Nazimova as the star. The book is illustrated with eight well-chosen half-tone full pages from the film production and the cover reproduces in colors the rose bush in the monastery garden of Hildensheim, on which the legend, woven into the story by Miss Wagnalls, is founded. The book is published at 75 cents, net. Postage 8 cents additional.

Exhibitors who have not yet played this film can work with their local booksellers to advertise both book and film, and where the play has already been seen the volume might be used to advantage as the prize in some contest or offered for sale. The story is a gripping one and the changes in its transfer to the screen do not materially alter the tale.

Western Photoplays Open Offices

Company Is Now Producing a Serial Under Direction of Joseph A. Golden and Featuring Leah Baird.

THE Western Photoplays, Inc., offices are situated with the Triumph Film Corporation and the Crystal Film Corporation, in a new suite of offices overlooking Times Square, on the eighth floor of the Longacre Building. Included among the executives of all three corporations are the names of Joseph A. Golden and A. Alperstein. It is therefore to be presumed that the incorporating of the company means new activities by the same men responsible for such big successes as "The Libertine," with John Mason and Alma Hanlon, "Redemption," with Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and son; "Law of Compensation," with Norma Talmadge; "Would You Forgive?" with Holbrook Blinn, etc.

Joseph A. Golden.

Inquiry for Mr. Golden developed the fact that he will not be prominent around the executive offices for at least four or five months. The reason is that he is personally directing the first of the motion picture enterprises included among the plans of Western Photoplays, Inc. It is characteristic of the above mentioned officials of this company to first do things and talk about them afterward. Mr. Alperstein, however, briefly outlined some of the facts connected with the new corporation, as follows:

"First, we have firm belief in the motion picture industry not only of the past, but the present and future. The only change in our producing plans as conducted in the past twelve years is that we are going to become more active than ever before—that our productions will be more lavish and that each photoplay will be turned out directly from the hand of our president, Jospeh A. Golden. By that we mean, that he will personally take over the direction and every detail of actual production on all future releases. Only the best known artists of the cinema world will be featured in our productions, and they will each be surrounded by a cast capable of not only finished support, but of capable box-office attraction and worth." He added enthusiastically: "We submarined several big producing companies when we obtained the signature to a long-time contract of our first screen star, Miss Leah Baird. Under the direction of Mr. Golden she has been busily at work for some time in the Crystal studios on the opening episodes of a serial in which she is to be starred."

A. Alperstein.

Regarding this particular serial production it is stated important announcements of interest to the trade will shortly be made.

Miss Baird is to be starred in productions especially obtained for her. The particular talents of the artist are to be exploited in a lavish manner. The first important production in which she will be starred will be released as a serial consisting of sixteen episodes.

William N. Bailey

Actor of Marked Ability Has Seen Many Changes in the Film Business.

IF eight years in the film business following as many of experience on the legitimate stage makes a veteran film player, then William N. Bailey, though still a young man, has already attained the desired landmark stage that makes him one of the outstanding figures of the profession. When he started in the film making part of his career with the Essanay company at Chicago the average picture was a one-reel film, and the actor was called on to take on a new part so often that it must have been a perplexing factor in his dreams if he happened to be temperamental. Mr. Bailey is not one of the unbalanced kind, and a thousand roles have no effect at all on his even way. An engineer might design a thousand bridges and each would make him the more fresh for a new one as an intellectual enterprise in his profession—so it is with Mr. Bailey taking on a new character.

William N. Bailey.

With Essanay he played in pictures with Ruth Stonehouse and with Beverly Bayne for two years. Then he had a role in a Fox picture, "The Valley of the Missing." His most recent part with the Fox company was in "The Pride of New York," a masterpiece, in which he played the villain role. Another noted picture in which he played, supporting Alla Nazimova, was "War Brides." He has had parts with Mrs. Vernon Castle, with Edna Goodrich and with Anna Q. Neilson, and has been in several pictures for World, Vitagraph and Famous Players. He has just finished work on the big serial, "The Eagle's Eye," for the Whartons. In this he had the part Heinrich von Lertz, the German spy. This gave him a splendid chance, and it introduced to the public a different kind of heavy role.

He is an all-around athlete, a swimmer, a horse rider, a lover of tennis, of polo and other outdoor sports. Meeting him on the street you get the impression of bigness physically and strength, the more pleasing, as it is backed up with a smiling expression.

DORIS KENYON TREASURER OF DE LUXE.

Doris Kenyon's name, which is so familiar to motion picture patrons, will soon be equally well known in the financial world. At a special meeting of the board of directors of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., held last week, Miss Kenyon was elected treasurer of the organization, and hereafter all checks of the company signed by Theodore C. Deitrich, its president and general manager, will be countersigned by Miss Kenyon.

Miss Kenyon succeeds E. V. Goerz, who left last week for South America, where he will look after the financial interests of a large American packing concern.

FALLET AGAIN RESPONDS TO WAR'S CALL.

Maurice Fallet, a French war hero, who upon being honorably discharged from the French army came to this country and was signed by World Pictures, has felt the lure of the war again and has enlisted with the Canadian army. Mr. Fallet is now with the Second Battery, Light Artillery, stationed at Ontario, Canada. Mr. Fallet appeared with success with Kitty Gordon in World Pictures. Not only was he gassed at Verdun, but he was wounded in other battles and was given the Croix du Guerre for bravery under fire. He is but seventeen years old.

Buhler Is Managing Director of Stanley

Well-Known Showman Will Have Supervision of All Theaters Controlled by Company in Various Cities.

JULES E. MASTBAUM, president of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, has announced that Frank W. Buhler, one of the most widely known theatrical men in the east, has been appointed managing director of all the theaters under the control and direction of the Stanley company and its affiliated enterprises.

Mr. Buhler was born in Savannah, Mo., thirty-seven years ago. In early manhood he was at the head of a dramatic stock company. Later he became engaged in the motion picture business with Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, and in 1908 was transferred by Mr. Davis to Buffalo as manager of the Davis' house in that city. In December of the same year Mr. Buhler came to Philadelphia and was associated with Alexander R. Boyd in the Bijou Dream and later the Regent theater. From here he became managing director of the Central Market Street Company, operating a chain of houses on Market street. Under his supervision every one of these became successful motion picture enterprises.

Frank W. Buhler.

In his new position as managing director of the Stanley Company Mr. Buhler's ability as an executive and organizer will have a wider scope. And there are but few men besides himself possessed of the very necessary requisites to handle the work of this corporation, which includes in its lists many theaters in Philadelphia, New York, Atlantic City, and other cities and towns in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and other states. That he is equipped mentally to undertake the task is conceded by all who know him. In popular parlance Mr. Buhler is "on the job" early and late, working and planning. He is one of the best judges of pictures the industry knows.

The case of the Victoria theater is but one illustration of his discernment in the matter of pictures, and it also shows his remarkable knowledge of just what the public wants. It was predicted that when he put on big feature films at the Victoria he had not sized up the public right. Mr. Buhler, however, had the conviction that the public wanted to see these big pictures, that they were willing to see them at popular prices and he, believing in a liberal use of printer's ink, after advertising these various films, put them on. The result was that every week at the Victoria it is almost impossible at any hour to obtain admittance. In a less degree, the same condition now prevails at all the other Central Market street houses, every one of which Mr. Buhler books personally and sees the pictures before they are shown to the public.

The Stanley standard of music will be fully maintained by Mr. Buhler, who is himself a student of musical harmony. Another feature of theater buildings in which he is considered an expert is the ventilation. He studied this under the best men in the country in this line, and it is safe to conclude that every theater that is under his supervision will have the proper ventilating system installed if it is not already there.

WORLD PICTURES GETS "BUCHANAN'S WIFE."

World Pictures has acquired the motion picture rights to the late Justus Miles Forman's novel "Buchanan's Wife," and under the supervision of Charles Sarver, the World scenario chief, the continuity is being prepared for filming. "Buchanan's Wife" was written in 1906 and deals with the developments arising from peculiar disappearance of a famous figure in business leaving no trace behind and the manner in which his ambitious wife solves the way out of the predicament.

Sherry Service Acquiring Exchanges

Offices Will Be Opened in Fifteen Cities Before Release Date of First Subject Is Announced.

RAPID and effective steps are being taken in the organization of the William L. Sherry Service which is to distribute the pictures of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation and certain productions Mr. Sherry has acquired. The New York exchange is already open and ready for business, with John S. Clark, formerly in charge of the exchange department of the New York office of Famous Players-Lasky, as manager. Mr. Sherry announces that he will give direct personal attention to this exchange. It is on the twelfth floor of the Godfrey Building, Seventh avenue and Forty-ninth street, New York, where the headquarters of the William L. Sherry Service is also located.

Mr. Sherry intends to open exchanges in about fifteen cities in the very near future. Some of these are already manned. Aaron Corn, for many years connected with Paramount's New York exchange and for the last two months with the United Picture Theaters of America, left New York last week to become manager of the Boston offices. He carried with him the godspeed of Manhattan and Brooklyn exhibitors, with whom he has been popular for many years.

George Wright, of Albany, has been placed in charge of the Philadelphia offices. The Chicago exchange is under the management of Howard Brink, formerly salesman for the First National in the Western New York territory. B. F. Lyon, recently district manager for the General Film Company and the International Film Service at Chicago, is in charge of the exchange at Cleveland. In the next week or so exchanges will also be opened at Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Atlanta, Dallas, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle.

N. J. Sennott, Mr. Sherry's general manager, is touring in the eastern part of the country, opening up exchanges. Daniel J. Savage, formerly in charge of the First National's Buffalo exchange and now Mr. Sherry's general sales manager, is on a similar mission in the territory west of Chicago. Frank A. Lappan will be in charge of one of the exchanges. Miss Irene Mulcay, secretary to Mr. Sennott when he was with Paramount, is now Mr. Sherry's secretary. A. C. Novotny, formerly auditor of the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky, has been employed in a similar capacity in Mr. Sherry's New York exchange.

The only thing which has been delaying the release of the first Keeney picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," is the desire to perfect the distributing organization before going ahead. It is expected that a release date will be announced in the course of a week or so. This will be followed by "Marriage" and a picture tentatively titled "Out of the Night."

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES.

The Pacific Amusement Supply Company, Los Angeles, report the installation of two Power's 6B projectors for the Kinema theater. The company also has been awarded a contract for two Power's 6B machines with motor drive for the Lasky Studios.

Arthur Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has left New York on an extensive business trip. He will be away for several months. During his absence publicity matters will be handled by G. W. Landon.

DR. LAMBERGER TO RETIRE FROM IVAN.

Dr. O. I. Lamberger, vice-president of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., is arranging to sever his connection with that company to take effect about June 15. His retirement from the firm is due to the fact that he is going in business for himself. Several persons who will be identified with him in his new undertaking have been engaged, and it is stated that while the scenario for the first production has been prepared no title for it has yet been selected.

BESSIE EYTON TO SUPPORT LOCKWOOD.

Bessie Eyton, who appeared prominently in support of Harold Lockwood in Metro's production of "Lend Me Your Name," has been re-engaged for the leading feminine role in support of Mr. Lockwood in Metro's film version of Henry Kitchell Webster's novel, "A King in Khaki," now in course of production under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer. Miss Eyton achieved popularity as a film actress for her fine work as a featured player in many Selig productions. Among the biggest Selig pictures in which she appeared are "The Spoilers" and "The Crisis."

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

UNLESS the E Pluribus Fillum Company (credit Terry Ramsaye) throws a shoe it will soon become a dominating factor in the Fifth and Well Known Industry. Going about matters in business fashion quarters have been leased, office furniture has been assembled and just as soon as the concrete foundation for its mimeograph is prepared the Press Department will issue "statements" AND EVERYTHING just like the Old Line Policy organizations have been about it for some considerable space of time.

The Rambler discovered the E Pluribus Fillum Company by accident. The delivery lorry of an auction furniture house was backed against the curb in one of the "Forties" and was disgorging its load of desks and chairs, rolls of linoleum and strips of knee-deep carpet. Following the herd of a man bearing a mammoth safe on his shoulder, The Rambler climbed three flights of stairs and, through an open door, stepped into a scene of activity that indicated a busy day in the Something Doing Department.

Erasmus Pluribus, President, General Manager, Chief of the Inspection Department, Art Director, Superintendent of Publicity, Sales Manager, Purchasing Agent, Efficiency Expert, Vice-President and Treasurer, Commissioner of Accounts, Notary Public, Chief of Foreign Department, and Executive Extraordinary, was on the job, bossing things with multiple authority. Nice chap, is Erasmus, and he gave us a Mecca out of his own collection.

"We are in the infant class just now," said the President. "I've read that this industry is in its infancy, so we will shove another infant into the perculator and make things boil for the Old Line Policy outfits. We are inaugurating the Tontine Plan—the only way to beat it being to outgame it staying awake. Understand, I'm not making a regular statement—I want to hold that to bust into print regular."

*

The Chief of the Inspection Department led the way to a dark room. Here he explained was a money saving combination—a projection room and film inspecting plant. In one corner stood a complicated pile of mechanism he called the Sprocket Hole Detective. "We will examine films by machinery," said the C of the I D. "Thus we will release a lot of good looking girls for work as conductorettes. The Old Line Policy folks have been cornering the best looking girls in town, putting them in a stuffy room and making them wear out old gloves in the foolish business of spying on sprocket holes. The result is a stoppage of street cars whenever the electricity gets one good look at the conductorettes. We will ship perfectly new and good film and shall expect exhibitors to take care of it. If they don't they will have only themselves to blame."

The Superintendent of Publicity then came swinging around the end of stack of swivel-action chairs the workmen had piled in the middle of the floor, and led the way to the Educational Department. In this branch of the outfit The Rambler was particularly interested. Entrance to the spacious, high-ceilinged, well lighted and perfectly ventilated room was gained through two swinging doors. Adopting the precaution of restauranters in separating the kitchen from the eating arrangements one door was marked "In" and the other "Out." As we halted, overcome by perplexity, the General Manager cut in with an explanation that appealed mightily to The Rambler's near-intelligence.

"This swinging door arrangement is for convenience in firing and hiring. We anticipate a goodly amount of space-stealing to result from this method. The parade of "ins" and "outs" will give this section of our Tontine System an air of great activity, and the swinging doors will prevent collisions. There have been many bad jams under the Old Line Policy as press agents struggled to get at the jobs just vacated. This we will avoid under the Tontine System of contracting and canning." Thus spoke the General Manager.

The Superintendent of Publicity pointed out other and numerous innovations once we had passed through the "In" door. Here was one typewriting machine that was equipped exclusively for UPPER CASE. The mimeograph, as we have intimated, was unmounted; the concrete foundation was just beginning to dry. Around the wall small boards of soft lumber were hung, ready to receive the clippings that should carry the picture of Erasmus Pluribus, in his many and various capacities.

"I'm thinking that we can get a lot of publicity for the Boss by describing how he holds so many jobs and gets away with it," said the S. of P. "Of course our stars and plays and policies, all being strictly Tontine, will not require any publicity. Sticking 'em on the wall (the clippings, I mean), makes 'em handy to read, easily seen and right where they can't be missed. We shall have our own printer run off these works of art and smear every one of these bulletin boards with a complete set of 'em."

Hey, Teddy! Here's a New Member!

We all know that the ex-drunkard makes the best prohibition orator (at least so I'm told; I never heard a prohibition speech). That principle probably accounts for your earnest campaign against UPPER CASING.

For I remember in the old days, when we were young and the Motion Picture Mail was flourishing weekly, the press agent that gave me most annoyance was this same Walt Hill. I used to devote every Tuesday to fixing your copy.

I didn't have time to do anything else that day. In removing your upper cases I became bent, worn, aged and bald. It was you that caused me to take to drink. After a day with your copy I wanted to forget—forget.

But you're a good preacher. Heaven help us if you ever stop drinking.

Sure, this is for publication, damn you!

Actor Claims Credit for War.

Richard Nelson has been summoned to the colors. It was Mr Nelson who played the part of Gabriel Prinzeps, the Serbian sure-shot, in Goldwyn's production of Irvin Cobb's story, "Fields of Honor." Prinzeps, you will recall, was the first of the famous "Zeps." He assassinated the Archduke of Austria and his consort, thus furnishing the Kaiser with an excuse for the world war.

Mr. Nelson hadn't been feeling tip-top over his achievement even though it was only for a motion picture, and it didn't cheer him up any to learn that Prinzeps recently died in prison. He confesses he felt he ought to do something by way of expiation, and it was with a feeling of joy that he received his summons to report at camp.

"Having had experience as an assassin of royalty," remarks Mr. Nelson, "I find myself hankering for a shot at one other bird who is much in the public prints these days. I don't care to mention names, but if a guy with a withered left arm and a fierce moustache ever gets in the way of anything shootable I've got handy I'll do more for him than I was able to do for his friend the Archduke."

Fat and Finicky but Not Forty.

"Fat? Yes. Bald? Yes. But not forty," says "Smiling Bill" Parsons. "I'll, indeed, be durned if I'm forty," he adds by way of emphasis. No count of forty is going to stand against the star of Capitol comedies so long as he can stand at the bar—of public favor—and plead, sez he.

Just now Bill is pretty mad at Lottie Lee, who writes pieces about the movies for the Cleveland News. Lottie doesn't know him, mind you—she's only heard about him—but she comes right out in print to accuse the millionaire comedian of being forty years old—maybe more. Enough to peeve any insurance-made millionaire, not to say a temperamental screen star.

"I don't like to say cruel things about a lady," observes Bill, "but if this Lottie person thinks she's going to damn me in the eyes of the public I'm just in the midst of getting she's got another think coming. I'm a romantic feller, I am, and whoever heard of romance at forty?

"Woman will tell you that's possible, but I'll answer that it isn't. At forty the plating of life wears off, and the brass begins to show through; at forty a man can't live in peaceful enjoyment for thinking of all the things he hasn't done that he should have done or those that he should have done that he hasn't."

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

Aftermath of Red Cross Drive.

Over at William Brandt's Carlton theater, in Brooklyn, the Four Minute Man concluded his appeal for funds with a request that "all those who will contribute a dollar for this patriotic cause—please stand up." One at a time, some few arose from their seats and stood up to be counted. Manager Harry Brandt inspired with an idea hurried down to the orchestra pit.

"Play the 'Star Spangled Banner,'" was the manager's whispered instructions.

The audience caught the joke instanter and amid roars of laughter—$405 was collected in a house that seats 450.

G. Warren Landon, publicist for Nicholas Power, devoted all of his spare time to addressing audiences in Greater New York theaters. His best "selling argument" was this poem:

"Can the Kaiser do what none,
Neither Attila nor Hun,
Alexander, Genghis Khan,
Bonaparte or any man
Finished, however well begun?

Can he corner every one
Of the places 'in the sun'
As established in his plan,
Can the Kaiser?

Can he hold what he has won,
Retribution can he shun?
All the world has placed its ban
On the Hohenzollern plan.
Brothers, what is to be done?
CAN the Kaiser."

At the New York Colonial, he supplemented the recitation with a brief speech. Suddenly he stopped, and addressing nobody in particular, said:

"If anybody will give me a dollar I'll stop talking."

He collected $60 before the police interfered and quieted the rush.

Q. Are there such things as glass "wind" instruments? I should think glass would produce much sweeter tones than brass. And, too, the player would always be able to see the notes he was making, provided the instrument was of transparent glass. Cut glass should produce clean-cut tones.

Anna Q. Nilsson is telling her friends in Hollywood a tale of woe. She is the proud possessor of a nifty roadster, which she has owned for three weeks. And in the period of time made famous by Elinor Glyn, Miss Nilsson's auto has sustained the following casualties:

Front fender ripped off.
Two rear fenders badly bent.
Self-starter turned into a self-stopper.
Carburetor fractured.
Steering post afflicted with the rattles.

These are in addition to the loss of many square inches of enamel. And the reason is that Miss Nilsson, against all warnings, has three times essayed to drive her new benzine buggy through traffic in the downtown streets of Los Angeles.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Griffith's First Artcraft Will Be Released in July

THE first D. W. Griffith-Artcraft picture has been given the title of "The Great Love," and will be released in the middle of July. This is the subject on which the producer has been engaged since his return from Europe, where some of the scenes were taken, and it will be the first time in several years that a D. W. Griffith picture will be available to motion picture theaters immediately on release instead of being presented at high prices.

The underlying theme of "The Great Love" is the awakening of the social butterflies of England after the declaration of war, the loss of the young manhood in the early days of the struggle, and the consequent marshalling of the nation's forces in the gigantic struggle in which all ranks were leveled and the aroused country worked with a unity of purpose.

In his undertaking, Mr. Griffith had the support of the British Government and the personal assistance of Queen Alexandria, Sir Frederick Treeves, head of the British Red Cross; the Baroness Rothschild, Sir Henry Stanley, especially assigned by the British War Office to assist the producer.

In addition to these and other celebrities the subject offers a most notable cast, including practically all of the important players who appeared in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World," prominent parts being portrayed by Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, George Fawcett, Robert Harron, George Siegmann, Mansfield Stanley, Rosemary Theby.

The story should prove of absorbing interest to Americans who find themselves in the same conditions and frame of mind as the characters in the drama Griffith has produced. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is putting into effect a tremendous publicity and advertising campaign.

Mix Is Lone Male in Fox's July Quartette of Releases

PLAYS to be released by William Fox during July are four in number, and are as follows: Peggy Hyland in Other Men's Daughters," a drama in which the golden rule strikes back home.

Virginia Pearson in "Her Price," the story of an opera singer's ambitions and sacrifice.

June Caprice in "Miss Innocence," in which the daughter of gay Parisians struggles against the desires that she has within her as her only inheritance.

Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune," a swift melodrama of a man who was robbed of his birthright, but who won it back after a tremendous struggle.

"Other Men's Daughters," which is said to be particularly suited to Peggy Hyland's beauty and personality, was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and staged by Carl Harbaugh. It is the story of a girl who seeks to save her father from social parasites, and who in turn is endangered by the father of a girl who has gone the easiest way.

Virginia Pearson's play, "Her Price," was written by George Scarborough, author of "Under the Yoke," and other screen successes, as well as stage triumphs.

The urge to pleasure is the basis for "Miss Innocence," which is declared to be a vehicle which affords June Caprice unusual opportunities for vivid acting.

Opportunities for hard riding and quick shooting are given in plenty in "Fame and Fortune," in which Tox Mix will be the star. The scenes are in the West, and the play is said to be crowded with action.

Strong Role for Salisbury in Bluebird.

Monroe Salisbury, whose following in photoplay circles is becoming larger with each successive release, will be seen next in "The Eagle," the Bluebird release scheduled for June 17, a picture that gives him every opportunity for the sort of work he prefers. Salisbury portrays the role of a man who is a law unto himself. His mother, who had died in poverty, had invested her last cent in a corporation formed to swindle the stockholders rather than for the purpose of creating a solid business.

Salisbury determined not only to revenge the death of his mother, but also to obtain the return of the money out of which she was swindled. In order to accomplish his purpose he assumes the role of "The Eagle," under the guise of which he terrorizes the entire country. The corporation which had robbed his mother was his especial prey. He had made up his mind to continue robbing it until he had obtained the amount of which his mother had been swindled.

Universal Revives "One Round" Laugh.

"The Knockout," a one-reel comedy featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, is said by Universal to be among the best work done by the comedians. It is released during the week of June 17. Eddie Lyons appears in the role of the heavyweight champion meeting all comers. He is successful through the fact that he manages to back his opponents against the scenery at the back of the stage ring. From a vantage point behind the scenes Le Moran whacks the opponent on the hea with a club invariably causing th "knockout." The end comes when th "heavyweight" is pushed against th scenery by one of his opponents. Mora knocks out the wrong man.

Other comedy releases for the week in clude the L-Ko entitled "A Blind Pig, two reels of the L-Ko beauties, who per form under the direction of Eva Nova and Eddie Barry.

The Nestor release features Eileen Sedg wick, and is entitled "Passing the Bomb.

Pathe's Double-Header Makes a Broadway Hi

THE success of two Pathe feature making twin premieres at the Rialt and Rivoli theaters last week was n half-hearted affair. Both plays went ove with a bang, and reviewers of all im portant New York newspapers gave ther lavish praise.

"The Yellow Ticket" and "Mor Trouble," starring Fannie Ward an Frank Keenan, were staged and presente with the usual perfection of detail tha Managing Director Rothapfel gives all h features.

At the Rialto there were capacity aud ences, and warm applause and other in dications of high favor were bestowe upon the Fannie Ward play from sta to finish. One novelty was the music prelude in which the Rialto orchestr participated.

Frank Keenan in "More Trouble registered the hit of his screen career a the Rivoli. In this unique comedy ther is not a single comedy character; all ar dead serious, yet there was a gale o laughter in every reel, and the audienc "just ate it up" right down to the las scene.

Morning and Evening newspapers o New York gave both productions enthusi astic reviews on the day following th double premiere.

"Hands Up" Designed to Pack 'Em In in Summer

"HANDS UP," announced last week as the next Pathe serial to follow "The House of Hate," is looked upon as something new in Western adventure and romance picture.

"Hands Up," the nickname of a dashing cowboy who is the hero of the serial, is a picture specially designed for summer business. It is a continued photoplay of fifteen two-reel weekly installments, a dramatic story of the West—cowboys, cowgirls, Inca Indians, hidden treasure, adventures of a girl reporter, and a phantom rider whose identity remains a mystery till the last chapter.

Great stress is laid upon the strong element of suspense and mystery that is incorporated in "Hands Up" without stretching the plausibilities.

Ruth Roland appears to better advantage than ever before. George Chesebro, the hero, indulges in horsemanship of high order in the very start.

The story has novelty to commend it. There is a mystery character in the form of the Phantom Rider, but he is a mystery character of a new sort. His identity remains a mystery by the employment of lighting effects very cleverly handled by Director James Horne and his cameraman.

O. Henry's Name a Real Asset.

A new popularity mark for the O. Henry stories is being established by "The Purple Dress," a recent release featuring Agnes Ayres and Evart Overton. Several prints of this subject have been booked solidly for a period of six weeks by the New York exchange of General Film. Many sections of the country are reporting that the name of O. Henry itself is a big drawing card, and is an asset which is being generally appreciated by showmen.

The name of O. Henry, they say, lends distinction to any program, and is widely accepted by the public as the guarantee of a good show backed up as it has been with meritorious productions. It is declared the drawing power of O. Henry stories has been increased cumulatively.

Ebony Is Piling Up Comedies.

Although but two weeks old, the new Ebony comedies have scored an even greater hit than the preceding block of these fast-stepping comedies, according to General Film. Exhibitors are said to be making arrangements to show the entire series on the strength of the popularity record established by the first six Ebony comedies.

Subjects in the second series which have been completed are "The Bully," "The Janitor," "Mercy, the Mummy Mumbled" and "The Reckless Rover." Additional comedies are being finished at Chicago.

Bolo Knives in Fox-Bara Play Have Topical Interest

WHEN "Under the Yoke," the Theda Bara super-production to be released in June by William Fox, was being filmed in California, considerable difficulty was experienced in procuring bolo knives for the players who were to represent Filipino troops in the battle scenes. Army officers at Camp Kearney, however, went to the assistance of J. Gordon Edwards, the director, and supplied a sufficient number.

It was with the same kind of bolo knives, adapted from the Filipinos that Privates Roberts and Johnson, the two colored American soldiers, repelled an attack of twenty-four German soldiers who surprised them during the night recently. The bolos were found to be of murderous efficiency, as they had been when used in the Philippines by the natives during the early days of the American occupation as shown in scenes of "Under the Yoke."

Japanese Babies in Hayakawa Support.

A notable cast supports Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, in his Paramount picture, "The Bravest Way." Tsuru Aoki, wife of Hayakawa, and Florence Vidor have the leading feminine roles—the latter as a Japanese-American girl, and the former as a real Oriental. Winter Hall, a talented character actor, has a heavy role, as does Tom Kurahara. Jane Wolff, Clarence Geldart, Guy Oliver, Goro Kino, U. Aoyama, Josephine Crowell, and others appear in the supporting cast, and some half a dozen tiny Nipponese babies contribute to the charm of the picture.

Universal's "The Yellow Dog" Aims to Rout Half-Huns

SCREEN rights to "The Yellow Dog" have been purchased by Jewel Productions to be used as a companion picture to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." It also will be a sequel to "The Kaiser" picture for the purpose of shutting the mouths of the war calamity howlers in the Allied countries. The rights to the story were purchased by President Carl Laemmle, of Universal, against strong competition.

The story first appeared in the issue of the Saturday Evening Post of May 4. It is the work of Henry Irving Dodge, and is to appear shortly in book form.

Harnessing the boy power of the United States so that the millions of youngsters in forty-eight states will be a compelling force in the stamping out of the German propaganda is one of the chief reasons for the screening of "The Yellow Dog." It is to be done in such a manner that every boy in the country will be a semi-official member of Uncle Sam's detective force. All the force of the Federal government will be placed behind the picture to insure the accomplishment of its purpose.

The first object of the picture will be to cause the establishment in every municipality of "Yellow Dog Clubs," which also may be known as the "Government Boy Detective Clubs." It will be the duty of the members of these clubs to ferret out the men and women who disparage the war efforts of the United States or unjustly criticize the Government or show a sympathy for Germany or spread false rumors regarding war losses and label them as "Yellow Dogs."

Another object is the production of a photoplay that every person will want to see not for its propaganda value alone, but for pleasing entertainment.

Henry Irving Dodge has written not only propaganda, but he has interwoven a tale of tragedy and comedy that travels from an eager fighting tenseness to a gay hilarity. And he has given to it that touch of nature that "makes the whole world kin" by making it a story of the kids, one that takes every man back to his boyhood days and makes the boys see themselves in the very best light.

President Laemmle, of Universal, has ordered that a large and comprehensive advertising campaign be started immediately, so that millions of persons, especially the boys and the leaders of the boys, will know when and where the picture is to be presented.

Emily Stevens to Star in "Kildare of Storm"

METRO has acquired the motion picture rights to "Kildare of Storm," by Eleanor Mercein Kelly, for the use of Emily Stevens. A screen version of "Kildare of Storm" is now being made by Jere Looney, and work on the production will be begun by Miss Stevens as soon as she completes "A Man's World," which June Mathis has adapted from the Rachel Crothers play. "Kildare of Storm" is a recent novel. It contains a superb role, Kate Kildare. The scenes are laid in the South on an ancestral estate where pride of family is the strongest asset, the tendency being to let the place run to seed. Its great possibilities are undeveloped until Kate, a young girl with a wide-awake mind, marries the "master" and comes to Storm to live. Then she sets about making it pay, using up-to-date scientific and businesslike methods. Against this background is acted a drama of power.

General Releases "Sophie Gets Strong."

"Sophie Gets Stung," is the second series of Snakeville comedy reissues, is released this week by General Film Company. The laughmaking features of this story are said to be greatly increased by the process of re-editing and retitling the film on new positive stock from the original negatives, and is expected to be one of the most popular of the series. Slippery Slim, Sophie Clutts and Mustang Pete are the leading characters in these comedies played by Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd, old favorites with the fans.

Scene from "A Square Deal" (Mutual).

Miss Fisher in "A Square Deal" Leads Mutual June 10

MARGARITA FISHER is announced by Mutual in "A Square Deal," set for release June 10. The production was made by the American Film Company, Inc. The director was Lloyd Ingraham, who has produced many of Miss Fisher's successes. The play is from a magazine story by Albert Payson Terhune and was scenariozed by Elizabeth Mahoney. The role assigned to Miss Fisher is different from anything she has done in pictures, and calls on the star's emotional ability as an actress, while utilizing her talents as a comedienne which have made her so popular.

Supporting Miss Fisher in the leading male role is Jack Mower, who plays the young husband. The cast is an excellent one, including Louis M. Wells, a noted character actor, while the photography and settings are said to be superb.

The Strand Comedy, released June 11, stars Billie Rhodes in a hilarious comedy in which a young wife is suddenly called on to prove her culinary ability by roasting a turkey for admiring husband's friends. She solves the difficulty by borrowing her neighbor's turkey, already cooked, without the neighbor's consent, and a heated scene occurs when the neighbor appears and demands her bird.

Demand Reported for Baby Marie Play.

A heavy advance demand for Baby Marie Osborne's new picture, "The Voice of Destiny," which is the most ambitious effort made by Diando with its little girl star, is revealed in letters and telegrams to the offices of the company. The general release date is June 23.

It is in "The Voice of Destiny" that the dictaphone plays so important a part, and many exhibitors are planning a novel advertising campaign to tie up to this business efficiency device.

Six Pictures Under Way At William Fox Studios

WITH the announcement that work has begun on the super-productin, "The Message f the Lilies," at the William Fox Hollywood studios, the Fox offices can now say that six pictures are under way. "The Message of the Lilies," the story for which was written by Beta Breuil and the scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon, is being directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Jewel Carmen, also in the west, is working on the adaptation of Gouverneur Morris's famous story, "You Can't Get Away With It," under the direction of Robert Thornby. Gladys Brockwell has just completed "The Bird of Prey." Tom Mix has begun "Fame and Fortune," a picture said to give plenty of opportunity for hard riding, in which the Fox star excels. The other Fox star now in the West is William Farnum, who has just completed "Riders of the Purple Sage," the film version of Zane Grey's famous novel, which will be released in June.

In the East the Fox stars are Jane and Katherine Lee, June Caprice, Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and George Walsh. Jane and Katherine, at the Biograph studios, have just finished "Doing Their Bit"; June Caprice has "Miss Innocence" in work at the Victor; Virginia Pearson, at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn, is finishing "Her Price," and George Walsh is busy at the Kalem studio under the direction of Burton George on a play which has for its tentative title, "The Sleep-Walker," Peggy Hyland has just completed "Other Men's Daughters."

Universal Interviews "The Peach."

Chauncey Depew, formerly president of the New York Central Railroad Company, and for many years noted for his after-dinner speaking, is the subject of another of the Animated Interviews which the Universal Company is releasing. This is the seventh of the series, and described as one of the most interesting. Mr. Depew is shown in a jovial mood as he sits at a desk in his office regaling the Universal's interviewer with some of his witty stories interspersed with pungent advice on how to become successful in business life. The "Interviews" are released on the Universal Screen Magazine.

Antipodes Showmen Like Goldwyn Productions

GOLDWYN pictures daily grow more popular in Australia and New Zealand. Though given their premiere in the antipodes only three months ago, four of the Goldwyn productions have met with large success in Melbourne, Auckland, Sydney, and other cities in New South Wales, and several centers in other sections. One of the reasons for Goldwyn's popularity is ascribed to the fact that its output is being exploited by the most enterprising and most widely known showmen the antipodes can boast.

Especially successful with Goldwyn pictures is the Strand theater, Auckland. Harry Hayward, manager of the Strand, who is mainly responsible for the present-day popularity of motion pictures in New Zealand, has, by his splendid methods of exploitation, scored great successes with "The Auction Block," "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine."

One of the first to realize that newspaper advertising is vital to the success of productions, Manager Hayward set the population agog for "The Auction Block," his opening Goldwyn production, by some unique advertising and intelligent copy heralding the coming of the Rex Beach picture. As a result of this "The Auction Block" played to crowded houses at every performance of the four-day engagement.

Jack Barrymore is at Work Under Paramount Banner

Jack Barrymore again occupies a star dressing room at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and is at work on his first Paramount picture, "On the Quiet," adapted by Charles E. Whittaker from the starring vehicle for William Collier, written by Augustus Thomas. Chester Withey is directing. The story is a roaring farce.

Emile Chautard is developing some particularly artistic scenes in "A Daughter of the Old South," a Paramount picture starring Pauline Frederick, the interiors of which are being made at the same studio. In the supporting cast are Pedro De Cordoba, Rex McDougall, Vera Beresford, Myra Brooks, Thelma Randolph, and Joseph Smiley.

Lina Cavalieri is working on "The Woman of Impulse" at Fort Lee under the direction of Edward Jose, and again appears in gorgeous gowns and dazzling jewels as the prima donna heroine of the play, which is to be released as a Paramount. Corene Uzzell plays the part of the octoroon.

"Heart of the Wilds," the thrilling Western picture starring Elsie Ferguson, has been completed at the Fort Lee studios by Marshall Neilan for Artcraft release. It has been a strenuous picture for Miss Ferguson, being a combination of comedy, emotional drama, and sensationalism, and she has been in the saddle a good part of the time.

In preparation at the Lasky studio in Hollywood is "The Source," by Clarence Buddington Kelland, Wallace Reid's starring vehicle, following "Less Than Kin." George Melford will direct the picture, which will be largely filmed in the mountains—a lumber camp being the locale for the most impressive scenes. Ann Little will again appear in support of Mr. Reid. Monte Katterjohn has been specially engaged to do the scenario.

Donald Crisp, who has been directing Wallace Reid in his recent productions for Paramount, will handle Fred Stone on the latter's arrival next month.

Vivian Martin's new Paramount picture has been named "Her Country First."

"We Can't Have Everything," which is from Rupert Hughes' novel, with the scenario by William C. DeMille, and directed by Cecil De Mille, will be an Artcraft special, and is nearing completion. In many ways it will be exceptional, combining numerous sensational incidents such as a studio fire and aeroplane views with hilarious comedy moments depicting the making of a "movie."

Fred Niblo, Broadway player and husband of Enid Bennett, the Ince star, is now an actor for the screen supporting his wife in a picture being produced under direction of Victor Schertzinger.

The picture in which Miss Dalton stars following "The Kaiser's Shadow" is titled "Green Eyes," and, as the name implies, has to do with jealousy. It is a story of the South.

Monkey Does Chaplin Stunt in "The House of Gold"

AN educated monkey doing a Charlie Chaplin "stunt" will be a feature of an elaborate banquet scene in "The House of Gold," a forthcoming Metro feature production starring Emmy Wehlen. The story is from the pen of Katharine Kavanaugh, and is being directed by Edwin Carewe. The "monk" in question is a famous Simian, none other than Charles the Great, and his Chaplin act is one of the best things he has done.

Egyptian dances also enliven the banquet scene. A dance of striking beauty and unusual interest is presented by two girls, Dorothy Day and Sari Arnold, experts in rhythmic posing and other developments of the art. It is an incident at the banquet which precipitates the climax of the play.

Joseph Kilgour is Douglas Martin, the rich man who indulges in Bacchanalian revels in his own home. Emmy Whelen is Pamela, his wife.

Trouble Aplenty in the Lees' "We Should Worry"

JANE and Katherine Lee's "We Should Worry" is announced from the William Fox offices as the next Special Feature —a June release. The picture is of the comedy-drama type of the famous "Baby Grands," and is said to have an appeal for every one from six to sixty. The subject was written and staged by Kenean Buel, and enlisted the aid of a large supporting company for the diminutive players. The cast includes as principals Ruby De Remer, William Pike, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young, Charles Craig, George Humbert, Henry Hallam, Sarah McVicker and Ann Egleston.

No film the children have appeared in thus far has kept them more on the screen than has "We Should Worry," according to the Fox offices. The number of plots and escapades in which Jane and Katherine are involved is responsible for this fact. This is, of course, a feature of the play that should win great favor from exhibitors. The picture is pre-eminently a Jane and Katherine Lee subject—one that is said to be brimful of laughs and excitement.

The Lees are kept busy from start to finish, putting to rout cops, snobs, burglars, kidnappers and fortune hunters, and they dispose of them all with equal ease and despatch. Some of the most amusing incidents in the feature, it is said, are those that take place in the rendezvous to which kidnappers bring the children.

Story of South and a Mystery on Triangle June 9 Card

A MYSTERY play, "Madam Sphinx," is the first release on the Triangle June 9 program, featuring Alma Rubens and Wallace MacDonald. Belle Bennett is the featured player in "The Last Rebel," a tale of three generations which is scheduled for release the latter part of the week.

"Madam Sphinx" is the story of an amateur detective who profits by her mistakes. After causing the arrest of an innocent suspect she falls in love with her victim, and through a woman's natural intuition, intensified by her love, she is finally successful in fixing the crime on the guilty one. Alma Rubens appears as Celeste-Madam Sphinx, while Wallace MacDonald has the part of Andre Du Bois, the misjudged and disinherited son of a wealthy Frenchman. The story was written by Raymond L. Shrock and scenarioized by Lanier Bartlett. Thomas N. Heffron directed and C. H. Wales photographed.

The happiness that has been denied their grandparents shall be enjoyed by the children of the second generation is the pleasant theme of the second release for the week of June 9—"The Last Rebel."

Belle Bennett is featured in this production, which opens in the South on the eve of the Civil War, appearing as Cora Batesford, and later as Cora's granddaughter, Floribel. Joe King is her leading man, portraying first Harry Apperson, a graduate of West Point who joins the North to fight for the Union, and afterwards appearing as "Lucky" Jim Apperson, who returns to the South from the West, where he was born, to restore the old Apperson mansion for his grandfather. Walt Whitman has the part of Colonel Batesford.

"The Last Rebel" was written by Hapsburg Liebe and scenarioized by G. E. Jenks. Gilbert P. Hamilton directed and Jack Mackenzie photographed.

Airdomes Like Serials, Says Universal.

Proprietors of airdomes throughout the country are running largely to serial bookings, according to Universal, the sales force of which reports heavy advance rentals of numerous Universal serials, some of which are several months old. Many of the airdome proprietors seems to be running to straight melodrama, giving their audience three and four episodes of the same serial on one night, and following with a continuation of the same serial on the second night.

The twelfth episode of "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp, is scheduled for release during the week of June 17. The episode title is "The Spy's Cave." In this episode practically every animal in the big Universal Zoo is used, making it not only a melodramatic picture, but a nature study as well.

Universal will not release its latest serial, "The Brass Bullet," until following the release of the final episode of "The Lion's Claws."

"Fatty" Lets In Simian on Real Monkey Tricks

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE'S next appearance in a Paramount-Arbuckle comedy will be a picture entitled "Good Night, Nurse," which is now being produced at Arrowhead, Hot Springs, Cal., in which the obese comedian plays the part of a man who is still celebrating the morning after the night before, and while in this ecstatic frame of mind visits various places where his welcome is more or less warm, and brings home a strange collection of people and animals to the indignation of his wife.

In addition to the fact that "Good Night, Nurse," promises to be a gloom dispeller of great effectiveness it will present scenic backgrounds of great beauty, for the country around Arrowhead Springs abounds in wild and picturesque views. Supporting "Fatty" in this latest comedy are the elastic marvels, "Buster" Keaton and Al St. John. Winsome Alice Lake supplies the beauty and feminine joy.

A scene which attracted a great deal of attention on the streets of Arrowhead Springs was that in which the comedian did some amusing stunts with a monkey. The little simian plays an important part in the picture, and "Fatty" has spent many hours in teaching it tricks.

"Yellow Ticket" Gets Wide Booking.

Pathe's version of A. H. Wood's sensational stage success, "The Yellow Ticket," is being booked by leading first run exhibitors. Like Managing Director Rothapfel, of the Rialto theater, who featured the production during the past week, they are playing up the full possibilities of this attraction.

All of the exhibitors who have been heard from to date are preparing to follow up with concerted drives in their individual districts the advance advertising campaign conducted by Pathe.

Veterans Waiting Their Call for "As the Sun Went Down."

Grizzled Veterans of '49 Days Support Edith Storey

EIGHT grizzled veterans of the California mining camps of the 'fifties who migrated toward the setting sun on the heels of the gold rush in 1849 are in the cast supporting Edith Storey in "As the Sun Went Down," the athletic star's latest picture.

The story, adapted for the screen by George D. Baker from his own drama of the same name, is a romance of early California, and these relics of the days when only the strong survived in the mad quest for the precious yellow metal are living again some of the stirring incidents of their early lives.

E. Mason Hopper, who is directing Miss Storey in this picture, rounded up the eight ancient miners. The aggregate of their years is 580, and the daddy of them all is "Pop" Taylor, one-time prospector, plainsman, and scout, who at 90 boasts that he can outride, outshoot, and outwalk any man twenty years younger.

"Pop" has been in the "movies" for several years, but most of the others were lured from civil life to lend atmosphere to the Metro production. But none of them is camera-shy. The Metro lot looks like a corner of the lawn of an old soldiers' home. The veterans, each one wearing a huge crop of whiskers, sit around the studio all day when they are not being used in the picture and swap yarns.

As a rule everything is peaceful and lovely among them. The only jarring note is when "Cal" Dugan, who is only 76, butts in while "Pop" Taylor is holding the floor. Then "Pop" gets sore, and tells Director Hopper that "these young fellers are too fresh."

"Smashing Through" Is Expose of Fake Mining

AN extra strong Western is "Smashing Through," according to the producers. It is a Universal special attraction for the week of June 17. The subject had a pre-release showing in the West, where it was received with enthusiasm by hundreds of miners who are acquainted with mining tactics. The story not only is full of Western action, but is an expose of the extent to which dishonest mine promoters will go to unload worthless stock upon an unsuspecting public.

Herbert Rawlinson is the star of the story, the scenes of which are situated in a mining town at the collapse of the boom. It opens with a wild scene on the last day of the collapse, with the bankrupt miners keeping up their spirits by consuming spirits of the liquid order.

"Smashing Through" has a happy ending. Rawlinson, in the making of "Smashing Through," has the assistance of a cast consisting of Neal Hart, Sam De Grasse, M. K. Wilson, Sally Starr, Clarissa Selwyn, and Paul Hurst.

Elmer Clifton directed it from a scenario by Walter Woods.

Alice Brady Strong for Playing Her Own Role

ALICE BRADY'S reputation for utter sincerity and dogged perseverence in her work has been put to another test in the picture upon which this star is now at work for Select Pictures.

In a production which will not be ready for some weeks following the release of "The Ordeal of Rosetta," her current production, there is a scene in which an important bit of dramatic acting takes place during the performance of a difficult character dance. This dance is performed by the star, and the ordinary procedure in pictures would be to employ an expert dancer resembling the star as much as possible in type, and have her costumed in such a manner that when the dance is given the audience could scarcely tell that the star herself was not performing the steps. This illusion would be heightened by dim lighting and clever cutting of scenes.

Alice Brady, however, would not consent to such an arrangement for her Select picture. The scene being an important one, the star insisted upon playing it herself, and when her director objected that nothing but a skilled performance of the chanacter dance called for could be accepted, Miss Brady promptly decided to acquire the technical skill which she lacked for such a performance.

A suitable teacher was procured and under her skillful direction Miss Brady is taking daily lessons in the particular character dance which she is to perform.

In her current release, too, Miss Brady did a somewhat similar stunt. In one of the several roles which she plays in "The Ordeal of Rosetta" she portrays the character of a typist who is unusually expert and who succeeds where others fail in taking on her machine dictation from a high-speed temperamental novelist. Again Miss Brady refused to stoop to subterfuge. She practiced at home on the typewriter used by her secretary until she was able to give a favorable performance of high-speed typewriting.

Pathe's Comedy "Kidder & Co." Leads Week of June 16

PATHE'S program for release the week of June 16 is headed by what is understood to be the best comedy of a series in which Bryant Washburn is starring, "Kidder & Ko." Washburn plays the part of a college lad whose father, an old-fashioned codfish packer of Kiddersport, Me., believes that his son is just one degree less than altogether worthless. He bitterly regrets the ill-omened day he ever sent him to college, and never "callates" he'll ever amount to anything.

Episode No. 15 of "The House of Hate," with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, is called "The False Signal." It was staged on the palisades of the Jersey shore of the Hudson, and there are more thrills than usual. "The House of Hate," by the way, has proved to be Pathe's greatest continued picture yet. It goes to twenty chapters.

Harold Lloyd's present comedy release is well up to the new standard set for this amiable young star's comedies. "Somewhere in Turkey" called for a pretty stiff investment if one may judge by the elaborate sets employed. There is an army of extra people, camels, pretty girls, and a harem scene that will go strong with audiences anywhere. Bebe Daniels is the favored houri of the seraglio, and looks the part right down to the ground.

An important item in Pathe's releases for June 16 is the first of the Post Film Company's travel pictures. The first number is "St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, of the U. S. A."

Part 6 of "Britain's Bulwarks," the official British war series, is "The Destroyer Raid on Zeebrugge," and includes an attack on the German naval base by English destroyers, while German seaplanes try to ward off the attack.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 50 is released Wednesday, June 19, and No. 51 on Saturday, June 22.

Bessie Love Play Released June 30.

Pathe's feature for June 30 will be Bessie Love's "A Little Sister of Everybody," in which the Pathe star has a part singularly congenial to her ingenuous talents. Charles Sarver wrote the scenario from a story by William Addison Lathrop.

In "A Little Sister of Everybody," Miss Love is a product of one of New York's Bohemian quarters. About eighteen, she is bubbling with spirits and good nature, and can't help loving and helping everybody. Her clothes and hair are never in order (till she falls in love in a really-and-truly way). Despite her youth and buoyancy she is a pretty shrewd little girl, and how she handles a great big problem that enters into her life makes the story of the play.

There is a fine flavor of patriotism in "A Little Sister of Everybody," and, aside from its romance, the interest is timely and should make a strong popular appeal.

Shea Takes on "Mutt and Jeff."

Shea's Hippodrome, of Buffalo, one of the foremost motion picture theaters of the state, is announced by the William Fox offices as one of the recent big theaters that has contracted for all of Bud Fisher's "Mutt and Jeff" animated cartoons that William Fox is releasing. The booking for Shea's was made by Manager Harold B. Franklin.

Universal Suggests Use For Two-Reel Dramas

BOOKINGS on the two-reel drama, "Play Straight or Fight," released by Universal for the week of June 10 would indicate that numerous exhibitors feel the time for a largely diversified program has arrived, according to the sales manager of the Laemmle company. Several exhibitors who will stick to the five-reel feature as the foundation of their program have booked the two-reel drama to offset their five-reel comedy-drama by this procedure, giving their audience a comedy-drama, a straight comedy, an out-and-out drama, and a news reel.

Other exhibitors are trying the experiment of running seven reels of one and two-reel dramas and comedies and the split news reels.

The second of the two-reel dramas will be released by Universal for the week of June 17. It is essentially a Western entitled "Quick Trigger," and is built around a straight shooting cowgirl, the daughter of the sheriff, and who possesses all the nerve and resourcefulness lacking in her father.

The cast is made up of hard-riding Westerners. It consists of Neal Hart, Eileen Sedgwick, Dick La Reno, Gypsy Hart, Joe Rickson, and Buck Connors.

"The Bravest Way" Has Strong Theme.

Love, loyalty, self-immolation, and true friendship are the motivating influences in the Paramount picture starring Sessue Hayakawa entitled "The Bravest Way." In this story by Edith Kennedy, directed by George H. Melford, the Oriental star is seen as a poor and humble worker and student in a Western city. The picture is said to abound in touching and also humorous moments, and affords good acting opportunities for all.

Norma Talmadge Working on "The Safety Curtain"

THE production upon which Norma Talmadge has been so hard at work ever since the completion of her recently released Select Picture, "De Luxe Annie," is a screen version of the novel by Ethel M. Dell, entitled "The Safety Curtain."

Published simultaneously in London and in this country, "The Safety Curtain" ran into large editions in a short time. It has scored one of the real commercial successes among "best sellers" of recent years. The central character of "The Safety Curtain" is a clever specialty dancer who, when the story opens, is one of the star performers in a London music hall. She proves her mettle by quelling a panic in the audience when the theater catches fire, but is herself overcome by the smoke.

S. A. Franklin, who is directing Miss Talmadge in the new production, prepared its scenario with the assistance of Paul West, who put in on this photoplay the last work he did before he left for France.

Eugene O'Brien is again seen as leading man.

Cohan Hits Screen Trail Hard in Billy Sunday Role

APPEARING for the first time in motion pictures in many months, George M. Cohan will be seen in a picturization of his own Broadway success, "Hit the Trail Holliday," released as an Artcraft picture on June 16.

To all who have seen Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, in action it will be quite apparent, and no secret is made of the fact, that this is a "take-off" of the famous baseball revivalist, and it is an excellent reintroduction to picturedom for the energetic comedian.

As Billy Holliday, Cohan plays the part of a bartender whose characteristics have won him enviable celebrity. He plays the bartending game on the square, and, refusing to supply liquor to some minors at the behest of his employer, finds himself separated from his job, and is offered work in a small town. He becomes converted through his love for the daughter of the prohibition leader, and, after a desperate battle with the German brewery interests, his eloquence and magnetism succeed in making the town go dry.

Elsie Ferguson Dances in "A Doll's House"

REMINISCENT of her musical comedy days is the remarkable dance performed by Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," her Artcraft picture leased June 2, for the star started her career as a chorus girl. Possessed of an exceptional voice, blessed by nature with beauty of face and symmetry of figure, and displaying unusual grace as a dancer, Miss Ferguson might today be known as a queen of musical comedy if the call of her ambition had not led her into emotional dramatic channels.

Thus equipped by her experiences of the past, Miss Ferguson gives a most distinctive and individual interpretation of the character of Nora Helmar.

The quick transition from the assumed character of the light-footed, smiling doll-wife without a care in the world to the woman enduring the strain of terrible fear makes heavy demands upon the dramitic ability of Miss Ferguson.

"A Doll's House" is an adaptation from the famous Ibsen drama, and was directed by Maurice Tourneur.

Ed. Piel Is Introduced to Triangle's Patrons

A FASHIONABLE summer colony forms the background of "You Can't Believe Everything," a Triangle drama to be released June 23. The production is a picturization of Norman Sherbrook's magazine story, "Smoke," featuring Gloria Swanson, and will serve to introduce Triangle's new leading man, Edward Piel.

Gloria Swanson, who appears as Patria Reynolds, a young girl who is initiated into the ultra-smart set, will appear in attractive bathing costume and a number of smart frocks. In fact, it is said that many of the summer costumes and evening gowns worn by the actress in this picture are a revelation of up-to-date fashions.

Much of the action takes place on the veranda of a luxurious yacht club, an elaborate set constructed on one end of the big open stage by Director Jack Conway at the Culver City studios.

Judge Brown Stories Holding Up.

Judge Brown Stories continue to prove entertaining features. "Bud's Recruit," the initial release, shows no signs of losing its early popularity as a patriotic story, while 'I'm a Man," another more recent patriotic subject in the series, has more than duplicated the record established by "Bud's Recruit." The other stories are boy adventures. The Judge Brown Stories have seized audiences composed largely of the older classes of patrons.

Norma Talmadge as Puck in scene from "The Safety Curtain" (Select).

Scene from "A Woman of Redemption" (World).

"A Woman of Redemption" (World).

Beautiful scenes filmed at Bat Cave, N. C., are a feature in the new World picture, "A Woman of Redemption," in which June Elvidge is starred. This production will be published by World Pictures on June 24.

"A Woman of Redemption" is a striking story of the redemptive power of a good woman's love. The story is laid in the Southern mountains. The main character is an unsophisticated mountain girl who lives with her father in a tiny cabin in the hills. The picture ends with an unexpected punch that is said to be grippingly interesting.

Strong Cast for Fox's Morris Story.

What the William Fox offices term "one of the finest companies that has been seen in any Special Feature this organization has made" is that which will interpret for the screen the Gouverneur Morris story of the hurly-burly of metropolitan life, "You Can't Get Away With It."

Robert Thornby, the most recent addition to the staff of Fox directors in Hollywood, Cal., is filming the drama with Jewel Carmen as the star. The other principals in the picture include Charles Clary, L. C. Shumway, Herbert Heyes, Lavina Monsch and Daisy Robinson. Bennett Cohen wrote the scenario.

"Caillaux Case" Coming Soon.

Cable dispatches from France to the effect that former Premier Joseph Caillaux will probably be placed on trial for treason either in June or early July is taken as an indication that William Fox will release his film, "The Caillaux Case," at about the time that the "evil genius of France" begins his fight for life.

The picture, which was made by an all-star cast, is declared to show in amazing detail the spread and aims of the "defeatist" propaganda, which resulted in the execution of Bolo Pasha, the arrest and conviction of men connected with the newspaper Bonnet Rouge, and the arrest and incarceration on a charge of treason of Caillaux, the ex-premier. America's part in uncovering the vast plot for a German peace is also portrayed, it is said.

Thrills Promised in Finley Drama.

Thrills are promised by General Film in "The Man from Nowhere," the current Blue Ridge drama with Ned Finley and Marion Henry. Numerous tense dramatic situations are found throughout this L. Case Russell story, the big climax coming in the fight in which Ned Finley, as Jud Lindsey, narrowly escapes death in a sawmill. There are a number of other scenes in which the action of the story is said to strike a high dramatic pitch, making this, the fifth of the Blue Ridge dramas, the most interesting of the series.

Edward Jose in Cast of Fox's "A Fool There Was"

THE Theda Bara super-production that heads the list of the new versions of big William Fox successes that are soon to be reissued, "A Fool There Was." has been the occasion of such wide comment, says a Fox official, because of the story and Miss Bara's remarkable portrayal of the vampire woman, that exhibitors perhaps have not noted the supporting company.

Edward Jose, who is seen as the fool, is a distinguished director and actor with a brilliant record on both screen and stage. Mr. Jose was for twenty years a figure before the footlights in France, Belgium, South America and England. He was stage director for Antoine and Sarah Bernhardt, and, in fact, began his career with the "Divine Sarah." He appeared in practically every classical part in her repertoire.

Clifford Bruce, leading man for Charles Frohman companies and equally well known on the screen; May Allison, a favorite of picturegoers, and Victor Benoit, who has achieved a reputation for his characterizations in musical comedy with Lillian Russell and Eddie Foy, are others who have important roles in "A Fool There Was."

Pathe to Release "The Woman Eternal."

Pathe announces the impending release of "The Woman Eternal," featuring Elaine Hammerstein. The subject will have the advantage of Pathe publicity, and is expected to have a Broadway premiere. The title insures a box office draw, and the picture is one that will stand up, it is said by those who have seen the advance showing.

Ralph W. Ince directed the picture, which was adapted by John E. Ince from the novel, "The Battle Cry," by Charles Neville Buck.

Madge Kennedy Has Luck When Out on Location

MADGE KENNEDY'S work in her recently completed Goldwyn production, "The Service Star," soon to be released, not only afforded her unusual dramatic opportunities, but enabled her to do what is a commonplace to most stars —act on location. Unusual as it seems, Madge Kennedy in her short year as a star in motion pictures has hardly ever left the Goldwyn studios for scenes in "Baby Mine," "Our Little Wife," "The Danger Game," and other productions.

In "The Service Star," however, she spent most of her time away from Fort Lee, returning only when it became necessary to play in some needed interiors.

Meanwhile she and her company journeyed throughout northern New Jersey, far out into Long Island and down to Washington for scenes around the Capitol and Treasury buildings.

As Marilyn March, the part she plays in "The Service Star," Madge Kennedy is supposed to be a downtrodden librarian in a small town, thrilled by the part everyone around her is playing in war work and burning with envy of those girls who have soldier or sailor sweethearts. She sees a trainload of drafted men leaving the station and is heartbroken because she has no man among them.

Fortunately, a crowd of drafted men on their way to Camp Upton paused at a way station on Long Island, and, with the help of the extras quickly obtained, Miss Kennedy found herself in precisely the scene written in the scenario.

So it is with a parade of Grand Army veterans at Center Moriches, L. I. By a streak of luck the director got wind of the happening and rushes Miss Kennedy and the company to the spot, thereby getting fine old types in full army regalia which could not be got at the studio.

Luck attended every move Miss Kennedy made. Unexpected opportunities for convincing environment and atmosphere greeted her wherever she went. Altogether she is enthusiastic about working on location and believes that if it were possible to move around constantly in the course of a production results would warrant the expenditure of time and energy.

One Cast Presents All of the Wolfville Tales

THE Coming of Faro Nell" is a picturized Wolfville Tale which abounds in the keen and incisive humor of the Western plans that flowed from the pen of Alfred Henry Lewis. It is the current release in the Broadway Star Features series of Wolfville Tales. Patricia Palmer, Robert Burns, Hattie Buskirk, George Holt and William Lester appear again in their favorite characterizations of the famous Wolfville characters. This plan of keeping the same group of players in the series insures a growing intimate interest among audiences, as it goes along, and General Film reports great public response to these high-class Western subjects already in evidence.

"Faro Nell" was one of the favorite feminine characters evolved by Alfred Henry Lewis, and her introduction into Wolfville is accomplished in this story.

Following "The Coming of Faro Nell" General Film will present another O. Henry story, "Sisters of the Golden Circle," featuring a well known trio of players—Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres and Alice Terry. Almost the entire action of this story is laid on the top of a Fifth avenue bus, and presents one of the film novelties of the year.

Universal Animates the War Map.

A brand new idea in animated war maps is about to be released by the Universal Company through its animated department. A part of the recent great drive on the Western front by the Germans is included in the feature.

Robert Burns.

Bob Burns Has Good Lead in the Wolfville Tales

ONE of the most picturesque leads in the Wolfville Tales of Alfred Henry Lewis now being interpreted on the screen for General Film release is Robert E. Burns, who takes the Cherokee Hall role throughout the series. As the gentleman gambler type of the Western settlement, Burns has made a distinct and pleasing impression. He has been seen so far in "The Coming of Faro Nell," "Tucson Jennie's Heart," and "The Dismissal of Silver Phil" in the Cherokee Hall role.

"Bob" Burns, with his brothers, Fred and Edward, was graduated from Wild West performances into pictures about eight years ago, and has seen service with Buffalo Bill, Pawnee Bill, and "101 Ranch." He played a leading part in the first Western picture Vitagraph put on, the star being Edith Storey. His other picture work includes engagements with D. W. Griffith in "The Birth of a Nation," "The Massacre," "The Battle of Elder Bush Gulch," "Primitive Man," "Judith of Bethulia," and "The Great Leap." He was severely injured in one of his daring stunts while with Griffith, and has only been back in pictures since last January, after one year in a hospital. He was nursed during his illness by the present Mrs. Burns, whom he married after leaving the hospital.

With all his riding and roping ability, Bob Burns is an accomplished actor, and a good musician and singer as well.

Two Educational Films Commissioners at Work Abroad

WHILE "The Heart of Mexico," the first of George D. Wright's series of "Mexico Today," was being presented at the New York Rivoli the last week in May, Mr. Wright, the Educational Films Corporation's commissioner to our Aztec neighbor, had arrived in Mexico City to begin another series of pictures on the same theme. During Mr. Wright's absence his interests are being looked after by Wallace Thompson. The latter was formerly connected with Paramount Pictograph, and edited the titles of "Mexico Today." The series has attracted unusual attention on account of its novelty.

News also has been received of the safe arrival of the Educational's other foreign commissioner, E. M. Newman, in Great Britain. Mr. Newman is now hard at work filming war conditions throughout the United Kingdom. In about six weeks he will go to France, where he will spend an equal length of time studying the novel aspects of life behind the lines, picturizing many of the characteristic American activities "over there," as well as the life of the people. His next and last visit will be paid to Italy, where he will tour the peninsula and bring back in pictorial form a record of how the war has affected the Italians. Releases of these new pictures are promised for next winter. In the meantime, the E. M. Newman Travel Series will be shown frequently in prerelease at New York's Broadway theaters beginning with "Nature's Curios," a motion picture of the great natural curiosity shop of the Yellowstone Geysers and other wonders of the American National Parks. Throughout the summer and fall the Newman Travels will alternate with the Robert C. Bruce Scenics in the Educational's regular scenic releases.

Broadway pre-releases the first week in June are "Nature's Curios" at one of the Rothapfel houses and "Wild Goats and Sheep," from the Ditmars' Living Book of Nature, at the Strand. There also will be a cartoon comedy from the International Film Service, which is releasing all its Katzenjammers and Happy Hooligans through the Educational.

Camera Enters Chinese Mission.

The first views in a motion picture feature of the famous Chinatown Mission in the old Chinese theater at 10 Mott street will appear in the World picture, "Hitting the Trail," which is now in process of filming under the direction of Dell Henderson, with Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley.

Several of the important scenes in the picture occur in this mission. The officers of the mission, when informed of the nature of the picture, gladly permitted the use of the institution for the taking of the scenes, and co-operated in every possible way.

The Chinese mission is located in the heart of Chinatown, and the purposes of the mission is to reclaim girls and secure positions for them, to give temporary shelter to the unfortunates breaking away from the drug habit, and also those who are broken in physical, moral and spiritual health.

Novelty and Punch Found in Pathe-Post Travels

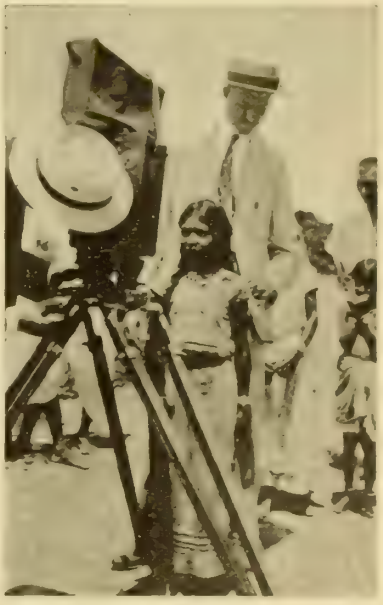
NOWADAYS a newly introduced series of feature films must have novelty, as well as purely pictorial punch.

In the Post Travel series, the first issue of which is to be released by Pathe on June 16, there is a lot of novelty both in the subject matter and in the manner in which the film has been edited. There is 1,000 feet in each subject, released weekly, and presented by big newspapers. Each picture deals with some remote corner of the world where dwell people whose characteristics, customs, clothes, manners, ethnology and habits are almost entirely unknown to the average American.

In presenting these scenes, Clyde E. Elliott, of the Post Film Company, has seen to it that fitting subtitles have been made, and they lend a great deal of intelligent interest and entertainment to the series.

It is, as Mr. Elliott points out, as if you had gone along on the long trek around the world with him, for he wrote the subtitles, and they fit in smoothly and are in just the proper spirit for the picture.

The Post series is to be shown under the auspices of forty of the most important daily newspapers in the country.



Clyde E. Elliott of the Post Film Company, Taking Pictures for the Big New Travel Series Distributed by Pathe.

"The Voice of Destiny" (Diando).

"The Voice of Destiny" is the title finally selected by Pathe for the Baby Marie Osborne picture, made by Diando, soon to be released. There is every element of a strong screen drama in the piece and the emotional work of the juvenile star is surprisingly clever in spite of her already bright record of past performances. The little colored boy, now an integral part of all Baby Marie Osborne's pictures, is on deck again.

Big Westchester Estate Is Background for Metro Story

ONE of the handsomest old estates in Westchester County, New York, will be used as the background for May Allison's forthcoming Metro feature photodrama, "A Successful Adventure," written by June Mathis. This is the Ruland estate on the old White Plains road at Mamaroneck.

The sunken gardens of this place will figure prominently. Harry Franklin is directing, assisted by P. Thad Volkman. Arthur Martinelli is the "boss" cameraman to whom has been entrusted the task of securing the most artistic "shots" of this handsome estate.

Cross country riding is one of the sports called for in the picture, and some good horsemanship is displayed by Miss Allison, Christine Mayo, and Fred Jones on the broad acres of the Westchester property. The Ruland estate was chosen as being ideal to represent the home in the North to which Virginia Houston, a southern girl, played by Miss Allison, comes for the purpose of trying the "adventure" which finally turns out to be "successful," and the action of the play requires the photographing of all parts of this delightful home.

As a final touch of beauty a masked ball is given at the yacht club. This Miss Allison as Virginia attends in an adaptation of a Yama Yama costume. Harry Hilliard as Perry Arnold, the part opposite Miss Allison, attends in a Pierrot garb. The two hundred dancers appear in a variety of beautiful and bewildering costumes.

Miss Allison's role in "A Successful Adventure" combines dash and whimsicality, and is perhaps the most winsome in which she has appeared for Metro.

Pathe Issues Final Serial Book.

As the final episode of the big Pathe serial "The House of Hate" are now being made by Pearl White and Antonio Moreno in the Astra studio in Jersey City, Pathe is issuing the third and final campaign book for the use of exhibitors. The helpful volume is full of pep and punch.

State Rights Department

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Dispose of Rights for Many States on Griffith Film

"Hearts of the World" to Be Presented as Theatrical Attraction by Sol Lesser in Eleven Western States, Dawn Masterplays in Michigan and Doll-Van Company in Indiana and Kentucky.

DURING the past week arrangements were consummated by A. L. Gray, who has succeeded Elliott, Comstock & Gest in the handling of D. W. Griffith's great war spectacle "Hearts of the World," by which it will be handled as a theatrical attraction at advanced prices by certain prominent state right men in their respective territories. Sol. L. Lesser, president of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, secured rights for the eleven Pacific coast and mountain states, including California, at what is possibly the highest price ever paid for territorial rights on a film production, $200,000. Mr. Lesser announces that arrangements are being made for the immediate presentation of this picture in all the important coast cities.

Rights to the state of Michigan were secured by the Dawn Masterplay Company of Detroit, negotiation in behalf of this concern being conducted by Arthur S. Hyman, vice president and general manager, together with Charles E. Seaman, treasurer and general manager of the Consolidated Theaters, Inc., of Grand Rapids. Mr. Hyman announces that this picture will be put on for indefinite runs at several of the principal theaters in his territory, beginning with the Washington, in Detroit, about June 23.

Rights for Indiana and Kentucky were secured by the Doll-Van Company of Indianapolis, negotiations being conducted by H. Dollman, and record breaking prices are said to have been paid for this as well as for the Michigan territory secured by Dawn Masterplays.

Lesser Spends $250,000 for Territorial Rights

Prominent Western Buyer Makes What Is Possibly Record Breaking Investment in Several Big Productions.

IN addition to having secured rights to "Hearts of the World" for eleven Western states for $200,000 as referred to in the preceding article, Sol. L. Lesser on his recent trip to this city also purchased rights for his territory to several other productions, including "The Still Alarm," "Nine-Tenths of the Law," "The Crucible of Life," "Just a Woman," and "The Grain of Dust" at an outlay of $50,000, or a total of a quarter of a million, which is claimed to be the geatest sum ever invested at one time by a single state rights buyer.

Mr. Lesser is president of the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, operating principally in California, Arizona, and Nevada, and, as this unusual financial outlay would indicate, he is of the opinion that the state rights market is in a very wholesome condition, and is optimistic regarding its future.

Besides being one of the most prominent of the independent distributors, Mr. Lesser is also president of the State Right Distributors, Inc., an organization composed of representative buyers from practically every section of the United States, which has been marketing "Carmen of the Klondike," starring Clara Williams, having purchased this film outright.

Sol L. Lesser.

In conversation with a representative of this paper, Mr. Lesser said regarding the state rights market: "This branch of the industry is now getting down to a firmer business basis. The sellers have a better understanding of territorial conditions than in the early days, and in the distribution of territory the percentages are being figured on a basis which enables the buyers as well as the exhibitors to make the profits to which they are entitled.

"The yell that has been raised in the past that 'the state rights business is all shot to pieces' has been from men who were marketing pictures that due to the ignorance of the producers along certain vital lines are really fifty per cent. productions; that is, the story might be strong, or founded on a well known play or book, but the direction, acting or some other feature is not up to the standard desired, consequently the producers were only able to dispose of a portion of the territory, and therefore did not make the profit on their investment that they had hoped to make.

"There are now responsible buyers in all territories, men who command the confidence of the producers, and who are experienced in their particular line and are, or at least believe that they are, good judges of picture values and what the public in their territory want and will patronize, and any picture that has real box office value can be marketed successfully on a state rights basis."

Good Business Outlook for Foursquare.

According to Sales Manager Key of Foursquare Pictures, reports received from their various exchanges indicate very satisfactory business for June and July on the productions they are handling and that exhibitors are satisfied with the class of product and service of this organization.

Jerome Abrams, who is now stopping off at the various exchanges on his way to the Pacific coast, reports that he found exhibitors to be most cordial toward Foursquare. Mr. Abrams expects to visit most of the offices between Cleveland and the west within the next two weeks.

Chester Beecroft to Exploit "Reclaimed."

Harry McRae Webster, president and director general of the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., has turned over to Chester Beecroft rights to market the big seven-reel feature "Reclaimed; the Struggle for a Soul Between Love and Hate," written by Richard Field Carroll and co-starring Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch, which had a private showing a few days ago.

Mr. Webster announces that the second of his features, which is as yet unnamed, will be a distinctive novelty in theme and treatment. He is now putting the finishing touches to the scenario, written by himself and by the author of "Reclaimed."

Heavy Bookings on "The Still Alarm."

Pioneer Film Corporation announces that "The Still Alarm," founded on the stage melodrama of the same title, has been booked for the Marcus Loew circuit of theaters and also for houses on the U. B. O. circuit in New York City, including the Keith and Proctor houses; also that bookings throughout New York State and northern New Jersey, where they are handling the production, have been heavy, and that arrangements have been made for showing this picture at Coney Island for the entire summer.

Quite a large section of territory has been sold on this picture, including Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and Alaska, to the First National Exchange, of Seattle, and Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and New Mexico to the First National Exchange, of Denver, in addition to sales previously reported, and it is expected that negotiations covering additional territory will be closed within the next few days.

Recent Bee Hive Bookings.

Last week the New York Bee Hive exchange handling "King Bees" closed the following contracts on the Billy West Comedies: Regent theater, Albany, two days for each release, starting with "The Orderly"; Parkway, at Albany; Hasbrouck, at Hasbrouck, N. J.; Unique, at Whitestone, L. I.; Unique, at Patchogue, L. I.; the Unqua, at Farmingdale, L. I., and City, at Carlstadt, N. J.

The following Brooklyn theaters are now releasing the Billy West Comedies: Kenmore, Margaret, New Liberty, Strand, Saratoga, Chester and T. N. F. theater.

Many Novel Camera Effects Achieved in Petrova Picture

Photographer Henry Harris Responsible for Several Innovations Employed in "Tempered Steel."

THE fourth special vehicle in which Madame Olga Petrova will shortly be seen is said to contain several innovations in the matter of photographic effects, serving as an excellent example of the most approved methods of camera technique.

"Tempered Steel," the vehicle in question, was written especially for the Polish actress by George Middleton, author of the Broadway play, "Polly With a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince. The picture is a melodrama, dealing with theatrical life in New York. Some of the "punch" scenes required an extraordinary display of skill on the part of the cameraman, and it is claimed that Harry Harris, the photographer, has succeeded in achieving remarkable results in the carrying out of the melodramatic effects desired.

The climax of the fourth reel calls for a terrific thunder and lightning storm and the death of one of the leading characters as a result of a lightning stroke. The electrical display is vivid and impressive. Lightning is seen to play up and down the woodwork of a window, finally striking. The alternate periods of light and darkness have been very cleverly managed so as to bring out a startling clearness in every detail of the scene and its tragic episode.

Following the storm the moon is seen to rise above the clouds. The effect of having the moonlight creep inch by inch across the floor, lighting up the darkened apartment, has been vividly recorded.

In addition to the scenes mentioned, a most realistic rain storm, which plays an important part in the drama, has been cleverly photographed by Mr. Harris. The gleaming street pavement is seen in the lamplight as the various characters pass through the storm.

"Tempered Steel" will be released through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and is the first Petrova production directed by Ralph Ince.

King-Bee Salesman Joins Army.

M. Schonberger, one of the Bee Hive salesmen, will be into the service in less than two weeks. After being rejected three times he has succeeded in getting into the army as a non-commissioned officer.

Francis Ford Will Produce Six Features Each Year

Has Contracted for Several Stories of Elsie Van Name—Second Picture, "Man of Today," About Completed and Will Be Released Soon.

IN VIEW of the successful marketing of Francis Ford's first independent feature, "Berlin Via America," T. E. Larson, of Oklahoma, having contracted for eighteen states, and the remaining territory being practically disposed of, the organization with which Mr. Ford is associated has decided upon a policy under which there will be six feature pictures yearly under Mr. Ford's personal direction, in addition to his appearance in the stellar role in each production. These pictures will be made on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Ford announces that he is so satisfied with the story value of his first production that he has secured the exclusive production rights to several stories from the pen of its author, Miss Elsie Van Name, and that the title selected for the second release is "A Man of To-Day." Ernest Shipman, who is marketing the Francis Ford productions on state right basis, announces that "A Man of To-Day" is about completed and its release date will be announced shortly.

Scenes of Red Cross Drive in Gaumont News

AMONG the interesting subjects in Gaumont News, No. 10, is one showing President Wilson attending a big league ball game in Washington for the benefit of the Red Cross. The first ball put into play was autographed by the President and immediately auctioned for $3,500. Another Red Cross subject shows Governor Whitman of New York bidding godspeed to a large number of nurses ready for departure for the fighting front.

Among the other happenings depicted are a fire which destroyed several aeroplanes, the workingmen, however, saving much valuable spruce lumber used in the construction of these machines; a train load of wheat wrecked but fortunately saved; a Spanish steamer captured by a German raider and wrecked off the Jutland coast.

Portable laundries mounted on motor trucks for army use; the blind doing work for Uncle Sam; a ranch which has turned over its entire wool production to the government; a factory working night and day to furnish sporting goods for the benefit and amusement of our Boys in France, an old fashioned barbecue in honor of soldiers guarding a southern ship-yard, and the visit to the White House of Prince Arthur of Connaught on his way to Japan, complete the reel.

"Mickey" Embodies Ideas Developed at Showings

Constructive Suggestions Made by Representatives of Various Angles of Public Temperament Adopted.

"THERE has been so much said about 'the star's the thing,' or 'the play's the thing,' etc., till it is becoming difficult to discover what is 'the thing' for the perfect motion picture, and this is the predicament in which many producers find themselves," says a representative of The Western Import Company.

"How can one really find the answer to just what is needed to make the perfect masterpiece, a motion picture pattern for any style of production? In making 'Mickey,' Mack Sennett went in quest of that evasive quality. He knew of hundreds of books and articles and lectures, etc., on how to make the perfect moving picture by laying emphasis on this or that particular point. And it was amazing how correct each contention was—so far as it went. The simplest and most obvious answers are oftentimes the most easily overlooked. Yet the infallible answer is from the public itself, and Sennett secured an opinion and criticism from the public without jeopardizing the finished picture.

"A carefully laid out plan was sketched. There was a private showing for some of the best laboratory men in the country, at which were present such authorities as George Dobbs, formerly superintendent of the Triangle laboratories, and now general manager of the Palisades laboratories; Herman Breuner, of the Biograph Company, and many others, who had no pecuniary interest in the picture. Their remarks were carefully collected. There was also a screening for several prominent showmen such as A. H. Woods, Alfred E. Aarons, general manager of Klaw & Erlanger's theaters, and others. Then the office force constituted another cog, and after the screening of the picture a prize was given to the one who gave the best criticism of 'Mickey.' In the end the suggestions gathered from every angle of the public temperament were analyzed and adopted where necessary, so that 'Mickey' possesses universal appeal and is a picture which will interest everyone, everywhere."

Harry Rapf Reports Several Sales.

During the past week negotiations have been closed by the Arrow Film Company for Harry Rapf productions, for the sale of the following territorial rights on "The Struggle Everlasting," starring Florence Reed, and "The Accidental Honeymoon," with Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein; Pioneer Film Company, for Upper New York State, to Frank Gersten, Inc., for Northern New Jersey; to Keystone Distributing Company, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; to Supreme Photoplay Company, for Western Pennsylvania and Western Virginia; to V. H. Hodupp, for Indiana; to Big Feature Film Company, for Tennessee and Kentucky.

Mr. Rapf leaves Thursday for Chicago to meet several Western buyers in Chicago, and attributes the demand for the pictures throughout the United States to the success they have met with in New York.

Gaumont Serial Title Now "The Hand of Vengeance"

Thrilling Twenty-Reel Production in Ten Episodes With Suspense Carried Over From Each Installment To the Next

AFTER carefully considering names submitted for its new serial, the Gaumont Company has decided to call it by the descriptive title "The Hand of Vengeance."

In many ways this serial is said to differ from others. The principal character is wounded and deserted on a desert by a trusted friend who appropriates his wealth. Returning, the hero becomes "The Hand of Vengeance," and, impatient of the slowness of the law, begins, bit by bit, to take back the property of which he had been defrauded.

So far the story is not unusual. But then comes the many contests of wit between the hero and the officers of the law. The ingenious methods by which he escapes from many thrilling and sensational dangers are shown, and startling and surprising but at all times probable situations are introduced.

"The Hand of Vengeance" has been constructed with the idea of carrying the suspense from one episode to another, so that no one who sees one episode will want to miss the others. And the episodes are said to get better and better as the story progresses. Each time the hero makes a startling escape the theater-goers will wonder if it is possible for him to surpass his feat in the next episode.

Katzenjammer Kids Make Captain Forget Trouble

THE International Film Service black and white comedy release of the Educational Films Corporation of America this week is entitled "Up in the Air," and the Katzenjammer family occupy the star roles.

The story has to do with the suffering of Captain Katzenjammer from a toothache, and the means employed by the Kids to "relieve" the pain. They succeed beyond their fondest expectations, but it is through the channels of forgetfulness, events happening so thick and fast that the Captain hasn't time to think of any one thing for any length of time, not even a toothache.

"Night Animals" is the title of the Ditmars' animal picture appearing on this same reel. The long-tailed tropical opossum is shown. It is a slow creature that depends largely upon the use of its phehensile tail. Another interesting specimen of the night animals is the ant eater of South America. The sloth, a very unprepossessing animal in appearance, is shown.

Painting of Mme. Petrova for Rialto.

During one week recently Madame Olga Petrova achieved the distinction of having her portrait on the cover of four photoplay magazines. In addition the June issue of two other motion picture magazines are carrying several poses of Petrova executed by several well known "Greenwich Village" artists. She is also at present sitting for a portrait to be made by the New York artist Lou Mayer, which on completion will be given a prominent place in the lobby of the Rialto theater, New York.

Gaumont Shows Americans Brigaded with Our Allies

GAUMONT GRAPHIC NO. 9 shows American troops in accordance with General Fershing's promise to General Foch, fighting shoulder to shoulder with French and British soldiers in the same divisions. Other war scenes include reserves being moved to the front during the Flanders fighting, handling of heavy artillery in seas of mud, capture of a German aeroplane uninjured and dozens of captured Prussian aviators.

Pictures taken in the United States show recruits in a northern cantonment fighting dummy teutons and storming trenches above which German flags have been placed; Benny Leonard, light-weight champion, teaching Jackies at Mare Island the similarity of bayonet exercise and boxing. Engineers, in the presence of French, English and American officers, constructing a 330-foot pontoon bridge in 42 minutes are also shown. There are also views of the new $5,000,000 market just opened in Los Angeles, together with opening of the campaign in Washington to save the lives of 100,000 babies this year, the wives of the Vice-President, Secretary of War and Secretary of Agriculture weighing "the babies of the cabinet," who are said to be perfect specimens of "young America."

First Cinema-Symphony Tells a Romantic Stor

Love Drama of Organist-Hero Combine With Musical Accompaniment Produces Thrilling Climaxes

NOT only has Hopp Hadley's announcement of a Cinema-Symphony bas on "The Lost Chord" caused inte est in picture circles, but it is also said have aroused interest in musical circ and through error in a comment in musical magazine, Mr. Hadley was c fused with the well known American co poser, Henry Hadley.

Hopp Hadley has been in the theatri and motion picture business since t summer of 1898, when he exhibited m tion pictures in a tent, and does not cl any distinction as a musician. He sta that "The Lost Chord," although intr ducing several novel effects and allowi for a closer combination of music a drama is essentially a motion pict proposition, the backbone being the stor an interesting love drama written arou the organist hero of the song.

The organist, the victim of a hopele love, seeks forgetfulness in his work a becomes famous. At a musicale he mee the girl, now unhappily married. His a tempts to aid her, the stealing of her chi by her husband, his death in a duel wi the organist, the disappearance of the g a second time, and her return and promi to marry him, as he sits dreaming at t organ, all lead up to the climax where l strikes "one chord of music like the sou of the great amen." A tragedy inte rupts this moment, the chord is lost a found again by an act of self-sacrifi which is said to bring the picture to unusual dramatic and musical finish.

Mr. Hadley says that the cinema-sy phony idea makes possible the buildi up of powerful climaxes at four points the story, the organist at the organ wor ing up each climax, the action of the stor the playing of orchestra, piano or org visualizing the music, and that the su cess of the production does not depe upon the skill of the musicians; rath that it tends to overcome the handic of poor music by the simplicity of t musical arrangement and ease with whi the action can be followed.

"I am confident that Cinema-Symphor will have a definite influence upon the r lations of music and pictures, calling a tention of the public to the large pa that music plays in the presentation photo dramas and causing musicians a producers to work in closer accor Further," stated Mr. Hadley, "'The Lo Chord' has been worked out from t popular music standpoint with the sho man's idea of appealing to everybody a not shooting over the heads of the mass while appealing to the classes."

As previously announced, this "cinem symphony" is now ready for the scre and will soon be released by Foursqua Pictures.

Billy Minus Mustache in "Playmates

In the forthcoming King Bee comed "Playmates," which will be released Ju 1, Billy West will be seen without h mustache and in a different charact from his previous productions. He an "Babe" Hardy portray two kids dressed i rompers.

Among the new members of the Kin Bee company is Fay Holderness, who r cently appeared in "Hearts of the World

King-Bee Making "Billy West" Dolls

King-Bee Films Corporation announc that they are preparing a special adverti ing novelty, a doll modeled from th character now being played by Billy Wes and these dolls will be furnished to ex hibitors at a reasonable price so that the may give them away as an advertisin feature to their patrons.

Steiner is Optimistic

ays Conditions Are Good and Exhibitors Clamoring for High Class Pictures.

WILLIAM STEINER, of the Jester Comedy Company, who has just returned from his third trip across e country, embracing territory as far st as Omaha, makes an interesting re- rt on conditions, particularly in the in- pendent field. "In the various centers at I visited I found conditions in top- tch shape," says Mr. Steiner. "There e a few calamity howlers who say the siness has gone to the dogs and claim e picture game is on the toboggan. If ese men would only look over the class goods they offer exhibitors they would t the answer as to why they are not ng any business. I found a number places trying to sell pictures that were tde five or ten years ago and asking ney prices for them.

"The exhibitor of to-day is after real ctures and is willing to pay a good price r them. This is proved by the class of atures that he is picking. The exhibitor putting up a good program and educat- g his patrons to look for pictures that can something and are of the highest andard. If the fly by night manufac- rers and exchanges think that they can t by with a lot of junk then they must ant to throw their money away. Instead being on the decline the business is on e ascent, and it is up to the manufac- rers to keep up the good work of turn- g out pictures that are worth while. I ve talked to many exhibitors on this ip. They all claim that they are willing pay for the right kind of pictures as ey know that they can get the box- fice play to warrant paying right prices. hat the day is here for better pictures is surety and the man with the inferior ms is doomed in the majority of the- ers. Before you can sell pictures you ve to show the goods. While this is a ardship on the manufacturer and ex- ange, it is fast bringing about a condi- on that will place those who turn out e worth while subjects back into the nfidence of the exhibitors and if a little ore intelligent salesmanship would be troduced the problems of the manufac- rer would be greatly lightened."

Hold Showing of New Graphic Film.

WITH a cast including Gail Kane, Stuart Holmes, Robert Elliot, Sally Crute, Jack McLean, Reed amilton, Tallulah Bankhead, Gertrude raun, Dora Mills Adams, Hazel Wash- urn, Juliette Moore and Lillian Berse, When Men Betray," the latest effort of van Abramson as a director and author, vill soon be released by the Graphic Film orporation. This picture is said to com- ne with romance and realism, tragedy nd comedy, pathos and joy, and to abound n tremendous situations and smashing limaxes. The thrills, it is claimed, are ot the result of spectacular effects, but re the outcome of the actions of the haracters delineated in a life-like man- er.

In addition to the elaborate sets, the exteriors are said to be exceptionally fine. The initial showing of this picture took place on the New York theater roof, Broadway and Forty-fifth street, on Tues- lay, May 28, at 2.30 p. m.

"Zongar" Has Timely Appeal.

"Zongar, the Dare-Devil of Romance," which is being distributed on state right basis by Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., is said to have particular appeal just at this time, when the question of physical preparedness is so much in evidence, and its needs emphasized by the war.

This production, the work of Bernarr MacFadden, the well known exponent of physical culture, features George Larkin, an athlete known to motion picture audi- ences for his thrilling stunts, and, to- gether with the series of screen magazine photoplays which are also being made by Mr. MacFadden, illustrating general athletic, medical and physical culture events, are said to have stimulated interest in the health and physical development of the nation.

The most recent sale of territory announced on "Zongar, the Dare-Devil of Romance," is to the Supreme Photoplay Company, of Denver, for Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Southern Idaho and Utah.

Pathe Managers Reorganizes His Sales Staff—Many Interesting Changes Among Managers of Exchanges and Theaters.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—The Pathe exchange reports very good business under the management of Stanley Hand. "The Yellow Ticket" is booked in the following New England houses for the week of May 7: Keith's, Boston; Modern, Providence, R. I.; Fox's, Springfield, Mass.; Poli, Hartford, Conn.; New Bristol, Bristol, Conn.; Grand, Middletown, Conn.; Auditorium, Norwich, Conn.; Kincaide, Quincy, Mass.; Orpheum, Brockton, Mass.; Park, Taunton, Mass.; Colonial, Newport, R. I.; Strand, Holyoke, Mass.; Hurst Broadway, Somerville, Mass.; Union Sq., Olympia, Somerville, Mass.; Day Sq. Olympia, Somerville, Mass.; Olympia, Cambridge, Mass.

The sales force of the Pathe has been considerably enlarged during the last two or three weeks, and under the leadership of Manager Hand are doing a record-breaking business. Harry Aken, who was recently manager of the Castle Square, one of Boston's large vaudeville and moving picture houses, has joined the sales force of the New England Pathe exchange. Manager Hand now considers he has one of the livest sales forces in New England territory. The picture below was taken in front of the New England exchange in Boston. From left to right are: Louis Meas, A. F. Walters, Harry Aken, G. J. Corbett, Harry Buxban, Exchange Manager Stanley Hand, George A. Rogers, S. Plame, Hovey Dodge, Walter Goodwin and J. J. Jannings.

S. G. Gibson Gets New England Job.

Trade Doings of the Week in Pittsburgh

Big War Films Hold Attention—Film Great Help in Red Cross Drive—Operators Will Be at a Premium—Notes of the Theaters.

By Edward J. McCurty, 455 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Big War Films Hold Attention.

PITTSBURGH, PA. — Griffith's "The Hearts of the World" is now in its third week at the Pitt theater, and is playing to more than capacity business at each evening performance. The price of admission is $1.50 top. The picture has made a deep impression on the people of Pittsburgh. At the Nixon theater, commencing Monday, May 27, the official U. S. War Films, better known as "Pershing's Crusaders," appealed for business at 25 and 50 cents. So far the business done has not been comparable to that at the Pitt, although improvement may be noticeable next week, when the publicity begins to seep through. The pictures at the Nixon have pleased those who have seen them immensely, especially for their informative value. "A Dog's Life" has been the attraction for the third repeat at 20 cents at the Columbia downtown, which bought the exclusive downtown franchise on this release. It has played to good business. The regular admission fee at this theater is 15 cents.

Movies Played a Big Part in Drive.

The movies have played a large part in the Red Cross campaign during the big drive, outside movies having been used at several locations in the city to arouse interest in the drive. The work was under the direction of Mr. Sivitz, of the Rowland-Clark theaters.

Silveus Gets Competing Theater.

The elimination of competition goes rapidly forward, the latest instance of one exhibitor taking over both houses in a town is that of the Opera House in Waynesburg being taken over by Mr. Silveus, who formerly had only the Eclipse theater. Business ought to be good for Mr. Silveus now. He is remodelling the Opera House, and while he will continue both theaters for pictures, he will use the Opera House during the season for legitimate attractions.

Operator Convicted.

One of the unfortunate incidents which it is necessary to report is that of a moving picture operator in a suburb of Pittsburgh, who was convicted on three counts in Judge Wasson's Court recently on a charge of having drugged and kept a girl who was employed as a ticket-seller in a movie show in the same town at his home while his wife was away. Instances of this kind are exceptions which prove the rule that this business is clean despite the unreasonable clamors of the self-righteous.

Operators Will Be at a Premium.

A dearth of motion-picture operators is already noticeable as a result of the draft, and it is understood that they will be at a premium here by Fall. It is said that the scale for the Local will be increased to take advantage of the situation. With labor at a premium in many lines, it is natural that the same trend should affect this field, and exhibitors are not measurably surprised at the result.

Notes of the Trade.

Two new houses in smaller towns have been announced as opening within a short time, the first at Robertsdale, Pa., the other at Claghorn, Pa. The theater at Langeloth, Pa., which was formerly owned by Mr. Tennyson, the squire of the town, is now operated by the borough and is managed by the schoolmaster. The theater is not conducted for profit, it is understood.

Jack Marks, proprietor of the Orpheum theater in Clarksburg, West Virginia, a thriving manufacturing and oil town of about 30,000 population, was in Pittsburgh arranging his program and making purchases of flowers, etc., for his magnificent new theater, which is now building in Clarksburg on practically the same site as his present theater, and which will be completed and opened about the tenth of June. Mr. Marks says that he looks forward to great business this Fall, with a theater the capacity of which will be about 1,200.

At Wilson, Pa. (which is down the river close to the industrial towns of McKeesport and Clairton, the latter town having obtained the big U. S. Steel plant which was scheduled for completion last October, but is just about finished now), the Dobbins Bros. have almost completed a splendid new theater which will seat about 600. They have been in Pittsburgh recently arranging their program and purchasing the most modern equpment which the local market affords. Ticket registers, new machines, gold-fibre screens, etc., are a small part of the many necessaries which they have laid in. The industrial location surrounding them on all sides makes the proposition look like a winner.

A new theater is being built at Sistersville, W. Va., by Isaac Peters, who already operates a house at Shinston, W. Va. The Peters Bros. have been in the picture business for a number of years, their first venture being the old Theatorium at Moundsville, W. Va. The new theater under construction will be modern in every respect and should enjoy good patronage.

Three Theaters Figure in Deals.

LEVELAND, OHIO.—Cleveland the- aters figured in three important deals during the week of May 26, one of hich has been consummated.

The Priscilla theater, on East Ninth reet, a downtown vaudeville theater ating about 1,000, was sold by Proctor as to Charles Kitts and Michael Car- g. The published price paid was $40,- 0.

Messrs. Kitts and Carrig, who have been nnected with the Star burlesque theater r twenty-two and eighteen years, re- ectively, at once engaged Palmer C. ocum as manager. Mr. Slocum resigned s position as manager of the Liberty eater, a big neighborhood vaudeville use. Previously he had been connected th Keith's Hippodrome and the Miles eater.

Announcement was also made that the eater, which had just closed its vaude- lle season, would reopen early in June th pictures, the first attraction being he Unbeliever." In the fall the house scheduled to go back to vaudeville ain.

The big Wind-a-meer theater in East eveland figures in another deal. Man- er Goodman announced that he had ac- pted a deposit and gave an option to a ewark, Ohio, man, at a purchase price $17,000. Owing to the fact that the al was not completed, Mr. Goodman clined to give further particulars as the identity of the prospective buyer.

Another house which is reported to fig- e in a deal is the Prospect theater, a wntown legitimate theater. According reliable information, Stair and Havlin's ase has run out and a Cincinnati man negotiating for the theater with a view putting moving pictures in it.

Manager Greenbaum Joins Army.

One of the first Cleveland theater man- ers to go into the U. S. Army was J. . Greenbaum, manager of the Alhambra eater. He left May 27 for Camp Sher- n, Chillicothe, Ohio, where he joined he hospital corps. He is located at the ase hospital there for the present.

J. M. Greenbaum.

The Alhambra's service flag has more tars in it than any other Cleveland the- ater. There are seven former employes serving Uncle Sam. Besides Mr. Green- baum, they are Lawrence Hruby, pianist; Frank Tichy, drummer; Byron and Bruce Brady, twin brothers, ushers; Wade Rich- ardson, usher; James Franch, operator.

Ontario's New License Fees Counted Fair

Plan for Taxation Based on Seating Capacity Not Hard on the Smaller Houses—Operators' Fees Also Are Revised.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Ave., Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—The exhibitors of Ontario are not entirely dissatisfied with the new arrangement for theater license fees imposed by the province. The plan of taxation based on the seating capacity of a theater is considered just, and, while a number of exhibitors will be required to pay a higher tax, the small theater proprietor gets off comparatively easy. In cities of 10,000 population and over the charge is 25 cents a seat a year, with a minimum of $135. Until the system was explained by the Provincial Treasurer's Department a number of exhibitors believed that they would have to pay the seat charge and $135 in addition. The limited fee is based on a minimum of 540 seats. Heretofore, theaters in a city of over 15,000 population were called upon to pay an annual Provincial fee of $150. Quite a number of houses will now be paying only the minimum of $135 per year.

The new charge for Class "B" picture theaters; namely, those in municipalities of from 5,000 to 10,000 people, is 20 cents a seat, with a minimum charge of $90. This is based on a seating capacity of 450. The seat tax for theaters in places having less than 5,000 persons is now 15 cents, with a minimum of $75.

New Fee for Operators' License.

The Ontario Provincial Government, through Provincial Treasurer Hon. T. W. McGarry, has decided upon several new details which affect moving picture projection machine operators within the province. The new fee for operators has been raised from $5 to $8 per year, but renewals will cost only $3 per year as in the past. The license fee for apprentices has been raised from $1 to $2, and the minimum age for apprentices has been lowered from 18 years to 16 years. The latter concession is appreciated in view of the growing shortage of labor in all fields.

Censors Will Pass on Paper.

The Ontario Board of Censors has also arranged to examine all film printed matter, such as photographs, posters, slides, etc. This step has been taken because it has been found that some of the advertising matter has contained references to or pictures of scenes which have been eliminated. No great objection is taken to the new arrangement because now all posters and still photographs will be in exact conformity with the release itself after it has passed through the hands of the censors.

What London, Ont., Will Contribute.

The theaters of London, Ontario, will contribute $1,400 a year to the Ontario Government for Provincial license fees under the new arrangement of taxing according to the seating capacity of a theater. The seven local theaters have a total seating capacity of 5,600, or sufficient to accommodate one-tenth of the local population at one time. The seating capacity of the seven houses are as follows: Grand, 1,800; Majestic, 1,400; Patricia, 900; Princess, 450; Empire, 400; Star, 360, and the Unique, 320.

Only one theater is playing vaudeville, and this house, the Patricia, is the only one which will be required to pay the new fee of $5 for each vaudeville act presented.

Keeping Up the Big Shows.

There is no apparent tendency on the part of representative exhibitors in Ontario to cut down the quality of attractions because of the approach of the summer season or because of the new imposition of new taxes and increased duty on imported films. Manager Roland Roberts of the Regent theater, Toronto, booked "Tarzan of the Apes" for the week of June 3 for the first showing of the feature in eastern Canada, while "Over the Top" has just been started on a successful career in Ontario. The Empey special was shown for the first time in Canada at the Grand, in Hamilton, during the week of May 13, and the second presentation was at the Grand, in London, Ontario, where Sergeant Empey enlisted to serve in the 18th Battalion, C. E. F. Manager Minhinnick, of the Grand, London, added several special effects for the attraction.

Kauffman Heads Canadian Select.

Announcement has been made at Toronto that the Select Pictures Corporation of New York will hereafter control the distribution of its releases throughout the Dominion through direct channels. Phil Kauffman, formerly sales manager of Regal Films, Ltd., has been appointed general manager for the Canadian interests of the Select. He has opened an office in the Hermant building, 15 Dundas street east, Toronto, and is arranging for the opening of branch offices in five other Canadian cities. The Select releases were formerly handled in Canada by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., which still distributes Paramount and Artcraft features as well as other pictures.

Toronto's Grand Begins Summer Shows.

There has been a persistent rumor that the Grand opera house, Toronto, one of the oldest dramatic houses in Canada, had been purchased by Jules and J. J. Allen, who control many theaters in both eastern and western Canada. Manager James Cowan, of the Grand, denies the report, however. Incidentally, the Grand closed its dramatic season on Saturday, May 25, and opened as a picture theater on Monday, May 27, with "Within the Law," which was presented as a special attraction during the whole week.

Roland Roberts in Charge of Regent.

Manager Roland Roberts, of the St. Denis theater, Montreal, assumed the management of the Regent theater, one of Toronto's finest picture theaters, on Monday, May 20. Manager Roberts announced that the Regent would be thoroughly renovated at once. He also announced that one of the special attractions for the Regent would be "Tarzan of the Apes," which is scheduled for presentation during the week of June 3. This is the first showing of this feature in eastern Canada. There will be no changes in the personnel of the theater, it is declared.

Theatre Notes From Canada.

The name of the Grand theater, Kitchener, Ontario, which was recently purchased by the Allen interests of Toronto, has been changed to the Allen theater.

To advertise a coming feature, "$5,000 Reward," Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman theater, Montreal, offered a reward of $10 for the capture of "The Mysterious Dick Arlington," a character of the picture, who appeared in various places around the city during the week of May 20. The current attraction at the theater was "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which was being shown in Montreal for the first time.

MORE CLEVELAND NOTES.

Many Cleveland Theaters Cut Shows.

Hot weather during the last part of May has resulted in a big slump of business among theaters of Cleveland and northern Ohio.

Nearly 25 theaters in Cleveland have cut down to two and four nights a week. Even the biggest of film attractions did not hold up during the hot days. However, this condition may be better later on, as the first hot weather of the year usually hurts business.

Gilligham & Smith Theaters Change Name

Stockholders of Michigan Corporation Take Name of Consolidated Theaters, Inc., and Elect H. C. Cornelius as President and Secretary.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The stockholders of the corporation in Grand Rapids, known as the Gillingham & Smith Enterprises, at a recent meeting changed the name to the Consolidated Theaters, Inc., and elected the following new officers: H. C. Cornelius, president and secretary; William Clark, treasurer, and Charles S. Seaman, general manager. All of the stock formerly controlled by A. J. Gilligham, of Detroit, has been acquired by Mr. Seaman and others from Grand Rapids, and in view of the fact that neither Mr. Gilligham nor Mr. Smith are longer interested in the enterprises, it was thought best to change the name.

The theaters operated by the Consolidated Theaters, Inc., are the Majestic Gardens, Orpheum, Strand, Original and Idle Hour.

All of these theaters will continue operating during the summer months. The Majestic Gardens has a splendid cooling system so that it is not affected by the weather.

Charles S. Seaman, who is general manager and handles all of the bookings, was at one time with the General Film Co. in Detroit.

Globe Theater Changes Hands.

Another big theater deal in Detroit was consummated recently when Ben and Lou Cohen and Herman Warren, who now operate the Coliseum and Rex theaters, leased the Globe theater at Grand River and Trumbull avenues for a term of years. The new lease takes effect June 1. The Globe seats about 1,000 people and for many months was under the management of Roy Bishop, now operating the Reaper theater in Monroe. Ben Cohen looks after the Coliseum and Herman Warren looks after the Rex theater. Lou Cohen, the third partner, is in France with the motor truck division of the American Expeditionary Force.

Opens Office at Grand Rapids.

The Pan-American Film Co., of Saginaw, announces the opening of an office in Grand Rapids at 323 Murray building, where the company will keep on hand a large variety of short reel subjects, comedies and features.

Kunsky Contributes Liberally.

John H. Kunsky, president of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, has contributed $1,200 to the Detroit Patriotic Fund. And, by the way, 100 per cent. of the Kunsky employees subscribed to the fund proportionate with their salary.

Harry Charnas Visits Fishman.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, of Detroit, Cleveland and Cincinnati, was in town Friday, May 24, conferring with J. C. Fishman, local manager and vice-president of the company, upon important matters. Mr. Charnas said he recently purchased a number of big pictures for Michigan territory which would be announced later.

Joe Optner Leases the Jewel.

Joe Optner, who for some time has been operating the Olympic theater, Detroit, has just leased the Jewel theater at 418 Gratiot avenue and takes immediate possession. The Jewel seats about 500 people and was formerly operated by Jack Matthews, being originally one of the Klatt chain of houses. Mr. Matthews will leave in a few days for southern California, going there for his health. Mr. Optner plans extensive changes and improvements to the Jewel, with picture policy.

Yeggs Like the Washington's Makings.

For the third time, the Washington theater, Detroit, has been robbed inside of five weeks. The latest robbery netted the yeggmen, who blew the safe, about $300. It's the sixth theater robbery in three months.

Madison to Release Educational.

The Madison Film Exchange, Detroit, has secured the Michigan rights to the Gaumont Weekly, which will be shown exclusively in Detroit at the Washington theater. The Madison has also secured through the Educational Film Corporation the Michigan rights to a split-reel combination scenic and cartoon that formerly was released through Pathe.

Sam Spedon Stops Over.

Sam Spedon, one of the veterans of the film industry, and now special representative of the World, was in Detroit recently on his way back to New York from the Minneapolis exhibitors' convention. Mr. Spedon called on as many exhibitors as his time would permit, but, of course, could not see them all. He expects to visit here again in August and may stay a week.

Joe David Leases Lyric Theater.

Joe David has leased the Lyric theater in Grand Rapids, which makes him the proud manager of both the Apollo and Lyric theaters, both located on Monroe avenue.

Prominent Michigan Film Man.

J. E. Flynn,
Detroit Manager for Goldwyn.

Notes of the Trade.

Herman A. Bird, who operates the Nichols theater on Division avenue, Grand Rapids, has changed its name to the Rivoli.

Indianapolis Expects More Soldier Patrons

Camp of 10,000 Engineers Will Probably Be Stationed Near the City and There Are Few Diversions Except At the Picture Theaters.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Just what effect the advent of the hot weather and vacation season is going to have on attendance at motion picture theaters is a question in which Indianapolis and other Indiana exhibitors are vitally interested at this time.

One thing which local exhibitors believe may aid in keeping up attendance during the "sizzling" months is the plan of the war department to accommodate 10,000 engineering troops at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, a few miles north of here, during the summer. The army post has been practically deserted all winter with the exception of about 1,000 men of the United States regulars who were quartered here.

Soldiers have proved themselves in the past good motion picture fans, and inasmuch as Indianapolis has no bathing beaches near the city or no large parks containing summer amusements, the exhibitors feel that the soldiers will turn to motion pictures for their amusement.

Theaters Help War Chest Campaign.

With the third Liberty Loan drive now a thing of the past Indianapolis exhibitors are now exerting their efforts in support of the $3,000,000 war chest campaign which is now in progress. Practically every theater in the city has turned over its stage to the Four-Minute Men and many of them have furnished slides, posters and other advertising matter to boost the campaign. The $3,000,000 war chest fund which is being raised will be used for Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and other allied war work.

New Washington, Ind., Theater.

Washington will have another new motion picture theater in the near future, according to an announcement made this week by A. R. DeVoe, proprietor of the American theater on West Van Trees street. Mr. DeVoe has made arrangement for the remodeling of H. T. Trueblood building, near Main and Meridian street, and plans to convert it into an up-to-date motion picture house. The ceiling will be raised, he said, and the interior of the place redecorated. The new theater will have a seating capacity of approximately 600.

To Remodel the Harris-Grand.

Robert H. Harris, proprietor of the Harris-Grand and Princess theaters in Bloomington, Ind., has just let a contract for the remodeling and redecorating of the former house. According to Mr. Harris, the interior of the theater will be remodeled along lines resembling the Circle theater in Indianapolis.

War Pictures Are Drawing Cards.

That war-time motion pictures are now in bigger demand in Indianapolis than any other kind is evidenced by the attendance records that have been set at theaters which have been showing pictures of a patriotic order recently.

"My Four Years in Germany," which showed for two weeks at the Circle theater, recently broke all attendance records at that playhouse. The picture, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," was presented to capacity crowds at English's theater week before last, and this week Segt. Arthur Guy Empey in "Over the Top" is packing English's at every performance.

Similar reports regarding patriotic films have been received from exhibitors throughout the state. The Government films, booked through the Indiana state council of defense, are also in big demand, it is reported, and are proving to be excellent drawing cards, especially at this time with Red Cross campaign in progress.

"People are really aroused and awakened over the war," said one down-state exhibitor, "and about the only kind of pictures they care about now are ones that have some bearing on the great world conflict."

Daily License Fees in Wabash.

Wabash, Ind.—If the Wabash city council can have its way about it, motion picture exhibitors of Wabash will have to pay a city license for every day the theaters are in operation. At the last regular meeting of the council the city attorney was authorized to prepare an ordinance that will place a license on theaters, and it is understood that the proposed measure will be ready to be read at the next meeting. The exhibitors of the city are preparing to stage a bitter fight against the measure, it is said.

Central Exchange Using New Name.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Universal Film Exchange, Inc., on May 20, discontinued using the old name of the Central Film Service Co., in Louisville, and all business in the future will be handled under the Universal title.

Majestic Donates a Full Day's Gross.

The Majestic theater recently donated a full day's gross proceeds to the Red Cross, the sum of $524 being taken in and turned over by Manager Lindenberger. Good crowds attended every performance. The company decided on Saturday, a good day for big receipts.

Visiting Exhibitors in Louisville.

A number of visitors have been in Louisville lately, the list including M. P. Foster, of the Horse Cave Opera House, Horse Cave, Ky.; Frank Tarmon, of the Dream theater, Salem, Ind., and Roland Clark, of the Arista, Lebanon.

Louisville Business Notes.

Manager Steurle, of the Walnut theater, is much pleased with the way in which the public has attended the showing of "Over the Top," the Vitagraph special.

Richmond, Ky.—Dick Parsons, an operator at the Alhambra theater, of this city, was presented with a beautiful gold wrist watch by prominent local people on the eve of his departure for Ft. Thomas, Ky., Mr. Parsons having answered the military call.

Thomas O. Davis, manager of the Strand, of Louisville, has returned from a visit to his old home at Lexington, where he spent a day with his family.

Lexington, Ky.—In order to popularize the shows at the Orpheum theater, the management during the latter part of May published coupons in the newspapers, good until May 31, five coupons being accepted for admission except on Saturday and Sunday.

"The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," the Jewel production, has made a big hit in Kentucky, and incidentally two copies of the picture were working in Louisville at one time, one being run at the Camp Taylor "Liberty theater," while the other at the Walnut theater. This picture was also shown at the Capital theater, of Frankfort, Ky., where it broke all attendance records for all time previous including both stage and screen attractions.

H. J. Martin, manager of Macauley's theater, is running summer pictures this season at popular prices, and is showing a number of attractive features, having booked up some good material, including several Universal features.

The Alamo theater has booked the Lion brand star comedies, which will be shown along with the regular feature program.

Doric Opens with a Red Cross Benefit

New Theater in Kansas City Gives First Day's Proceeds—Is a Beautiful House, Seating 956 Persons—Some Novel Arrangements.

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

DONATING the entire proceeds of the first day to the Red Cross campaign, the new Doric theater in Kansas City opened Saturday, May 25, featuring Arthur Guy Empey's "Over the Top," seen for the first time in Kansas City. The seating capacity of the theater is 956 and it was filled at every performance. The theater is one of the most beautiful in the city, taking its name from the style of architecture, the inside also carrying out the Grecian effect. The lighting system is especially well worked out, as all the lights are invisible and by an arrangement the house is at no time suddenly illumined or thrown into darkness. The lights are dimmed both on and off, giving a very pretty as well as unique effect.

The color scheme of the theater is soft shades of brown. Birch wood is used for the wood work, as it is best for the acoustics, and it is stained a dark brown. The walls, of brocaded fabric, are golden brown and the side lights rose. One of the principal attractions is the seating arrangement. There are three different slants in the floor, and there is no seat in the house from which the entire screen is not continually visible.

Unique in truth are the various duties of the machine operator. He not only runs the film, but manipulates the curtain through a system patented by the Doric theater, and runs two clocks, one on each side of the screen. The curtain is velvet and is drawn and closed from the sides by electricity. The clocks are also something new. One gives the correct time, and the other the time of the end of the next performance. At the close of each show, the time is flashed on one clock, and the time the following performance will end is illumined on the other.

The screen is set in a large carved gilt frame, and the back of the stage kept entirely dark, giving the impression of a picture in a huge frame. The music is invisible, both the organ and orchestra. A $15,000 pipe organ, played by hand, but with mechanical attachments for emergencies, furnishes the music part of the time, and one of the few women's orchestras in Kansas City furnishes it the rest of the time.

A clever scheme for making announcements has been developed, whereby words are reproduced on the screen as fast as they are written, each letter appearing as written. No advertising or feature slides of any kind will be used in the theater.

An original ticket system is also in use at the new Doric. Insted of several tickets being issued to a party of two or more, one of the persons is given a celluloid disk with the number on it, eliminating the counting and handling of numerous tickets by the patron and doorkeeper.

The theater has its own committee to make the posters announcing the pictures.

Probably the most original and attractive feature of the new theater is the system of ventilation. They have entirely done away with the old method of piping the air into the auditorium and have two basements. In the lower one is an electrically-run five-horse power blower. The air is refrigerated and sent through a mammoth shaft into the first basement room where the cold air is equalized. From this room it rises through 300 holes about eight inches in diameter in the ceiling to the main floor. In this way the air in the entire upper part of the building is changed every eight minutes and kept continually cool and refreshing.

J. E. McAvoy Will Travel for Mutual.

J. E. McAvoy, who for the last two years has been employed at the local Mutual office, Kansas City, has been made a traveling salesman for that office and will work a part of Kansas. The Week's Film Trade Doings in Texa

Review of the Recent Programs in Dallas—Personal Notes From the Exchang and Theaters—Other Business Notes of Interest.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald. Dallas. Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—A combination of Goldwyn and Paramount made Dallas'—and perhaps Texas'—most attractive program during the week ending May 25, and the combination has proved a winner before. Arbuckle's "Moonshine," with Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," played a big business at Hulsey's Old Mill theater, vieing with the Select, "Up the Road With Sally," at the Queen. There is the cleverest sort of travesty in "Moonshine," and unbiased critics put Normand at her best in "The Floor Below." Constance Talmadge will soon be recognized for what she is, and titles won't count for much. "Up the Road," regrettable as it may be, didn't do so well in Dallas. People didn't seem to "get" the title, but those who saw the play pronounced it one of the best Select has put out. "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark, at the Queen proved highly popular in its radical departure from the ordinary in pictures.

First run Dallas releases for the week beginning May 26 included Chas. Ray in "His Old Home Town" and Hart in "Selfish Yates" at the Old Mill theater, with "Believe Me, Xantippe," and the Select, "The Reason Why," with Clara Kimball Young, at the Queen. Figuring that folk didn't know their history of old man Socrates' family affairs, or else didn't know the latter-day play, the "Xantippe" became "Sweetie" in local billing. The Washington offered World Pictures, "The Doctor and the Woman," from Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K," and the Triangle, "Her Decision," with Gloria Swanson and Barney Sherry.

At the Jefferson the Fox feature with George Walsh, "The Kid Is Clever," ran all week. Manager Stinnett, of the Jefferson, came close to local records with "Over the Top" for a week's run, and is booking the picture for a return at popular pric for the week July 4. Stinnett turned l whole theater over to local women wor ers during the week of the Red Cr campaign, guaranteeing them against lo and giving them all receipts. The pro for the cause was, of course, a conside able one.

J. M. Sheldon Popular in Texas.

James M. Sheldon's name at the bott of Mutual advertisements in the Movi Picture World is counting for more th little with Texas exhibitors. There a many of them who know Mr. Sheld and who are looking forward to thin of big interest with Mutual in the i mediate future.

E. T. Peter Joins Remy's Forces.

Manager Lou Remy, of Goldwyn, sa business is booming, what with the "ma goods" Texas exhibitors have recent shown, and notice of what's to come go abroad? E. T. Peter, veteran of the i dustry in Texas, has joined Mr. Rem road force in the intensive campai Goldwyn is waging for the new thin secured and coming. Frederick a Farrer, with the big male star, name y to be announced, sound mighty good Texas exhibitors, who are acquainted wi the Goldwyn record.

Perhaps; But the Boy Is a Fact.

I'd be willing to make a little wag It's this: Show me the man who fi signed a F. N. E. A. contract for "F Four Years in Germany" after a certa recent event, and I'll show you a m whom I'll venture to wager, got the pi ture a wee bit cheaper than some oth fellows did—and it's good business that, they say, whatever you pay.

It's like this: President E. H. Hulse

f the F. N. E. A., is doing a regular man's ork. In other words, he's right down the desk at the F. N. E. A. local branch ffice bookin' 'em to beat the band. But at's not the story.

Just the other day a visitor showed up Hulsey's house. His name was Hulsey, o—fact it, it was E. H. Hulsey, Jr., and e weighed ten and a half pounds. The N. E. A. head just looked so tickled, figure, that the first fellow who booked four Years" that morning and asked r a reduction—might have got it.

Gave a Party to Departing Soldiers.

Morris Lowenstein, manager Majestic eater, has answered the country's call d gone to New Orleans for further ders. Mr. Lowenstein was entertained th a dinner given by his compatriots the business just before leaving. "A easant time was had by all," and a hand- me gift was carried away by the well- ked picture man as a remembrance from s friends.

Mr. Elman is one great suc- ess with a 5c. house in east Des Moines, ut as soon as his new theater is com- lete he will put in better features at 0c. admission.

Interesting Business Notes.

O. K. Garland, manager of the Yale Photoplays Company, was an Omaha vis- tor last week and reports several su- burban runs on "The Whip." Mr. Gar- and states that two prints on this sub- ject are booked until early fall, which seems to prove that the big racing play s one of the best bets for Iowa.

The A. H. Blank Enterprises, who will handle "Spanuth's Original Vod-A-Vil Movies," announce a great deal of inter- est in these one-reelers and already have arranged several contracts for the first release, which will be on or about June 1.

Minneapolis Film Row Scene of Changes

Three New Managers Are in Charge of Local Exchanges—None of the Managers Now Here Have Been in Office Two Years.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—In the Moving Picture World of May 1 Tarleton Winchester includes in an interesting article two forceful lines as follows:

"Our path is not strewn with roses."

"In no business in the world do things happen so fast as in ours."

To our knowledge Winchester never lived or worked in Minneapolis, but these lines hit the local film circle right on the head, so to speak. Certainly things do move at breakneck speed in our little midst.

Three film exchange managers changed positions here last week and the outlook is that two more changes will be made within a few days.

R. K. Evans, who came to Minneapolis two weeks ago to manage the local General exchange, has resigned to take charge of the Jewel department for the local Universal exchange. Mr. Evans' successor at the General has not been announced to date, but we have been informed that a number of local film men have sought the position.

Harry Graham, who has managed one Minneapolis exchange longer than any man now at the head of a distributing office, resigned as manager of the local Perfection or K-E-S-E exchange to accept a better position with the Kleine interests. Mr. Graham managed the local Kleine office for almost two years. His leaving makes R. L. Hewitt of the Unicorn exchange the oldest local exchange manager in service. There is not one man now managing a Minneapolis exchange that was an executive two years ago—and Minneapolis has thirty-six exchanges.

Mr. Graham went to Chicago from Minneapolis, and it it understood that he will spend some time at the Cincinnati and Pittsburgh Kleine exchanges prior to being promoted to a divisional managership. To say the least, Mr. Graham is deserving of such a promotion. Carl R. Michel, who is well known to exhibitors of this territory, due to his many trips throughout the Northwest, will succeed Mr. Graham as manager of the local Kleine office. Mr. Michel is a likeable sort with a business-like manner that has won him some firm friends among exhibitors. He assumed charge of the Kleine office May 20.

Jack Corbett, who has served as manager of the Triangle exchange in the Film Exchange building here since Dan Michalove resigned to become a district manager last fall, has left Minneapolis for his home at Ridgewood, Ohio, where he will spend a few days previous to entering the army service. Mr. Corbett, recently drafted, has passed the examinations for aviation corps service and is awaiting call. Mr. Corbett will be missed considerably by Northwest exhibitors, with whom he has become very popular. Mr. Corbett, previous to entering the film field was a baseball player in the Southern association, and he started his film activities like Ty Cobb in mid-season form. Mr. Corbett developed a splendid business for Triangle in this territory. He will be succeeded by W. F. Seymour, for two years manager for the Triangle in the Seattle office. Mr. Seymour comes here with a splendid record as a manager and with a wide acquaintanceship among exhibitors.

Mike Conhaim Honorably Discharged.

Mike Conhaim, former manager of the Supreme exchange, recently called to Camp Dodge, Des Moines, in the National army service, has returned to Minneapolis after having been honorably discharged from service.

Gathering of the U. Clan.

Carl Laemmle, Harry Cohn, C. H. MacGowan, C. H. Ison, Joe Brandt and Harry Berman met at the Minneapolis Universal exchange recently, each coming from a different direction. Mr. Laemmle's visit here was his first in two years.

Mr. MacGowan and Mr. Ison, assisted by Manager E. R. Pearson and Miss Beulah Armant, local Universal manager and auditor respectively, started off the new Universal accounting system while in the city. Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cohn and Mr. Berman went to New York from here, Mr. Brandt went to Kansas City, Mr. MacGowan to Detroit and Mr. Ison to Des Moines.

Harry Rathner's Office Wins Prize.

Harry Rathner, manager of the Select exchange, Minneapolis, states that his office has won the first prize for business done during the past month by Select exchanges all over the country. Mr. Rathner has also let it be known that his exchange is leading the country in the contest for the grand prize of $500 to be awarded the exchange doing the most business during the present semi-yearly season.

Minneapolis Film Row Jottings.

D. O. Reese, formerly South Dakota road man for the Minneapolis First National exchange, returned to Minneapolis recently after an absence of about three months. Mr. Reese recently joined the Song Hits and Photoplays, Inc., office in New York and is now completing a continental sales tour. Mr. Reese reports big success in selling state rights and in booking the new song pictures.

John R. Elliott, of the Elliott & Sherman exchange, has announced that his exchange has taken over several of the features previously booked by the local Associated Theaters, Inc., exchange, among them being "The Snail," "The Public Defender" and "Denny from Ireland."

Manager Edward S. Flynn, of the Fox exchange, left Minneapolis for New York Monday morning, May 27, to attend a conference of Fox exchange managers. A. A. Hixon will be in charge of the exchange during Mr. Flynn's absence.

Manager Frank Thayer, of the Supreme exchange, has been in New York City dickering for some new territorial rights photoplays.

T. J. Hamlin has given up his state senatorial aspirations to devote all of his time to building up business at the Associated Theaters, Inc., exchange.

IN CALIFORNIA.

"The Unbeliever" Featured at Alhambra.

The Alhambra theater offered as its special feature during "Marine Drive Week" the George Kleine attraction, "The Unbeliever." The famous Marine Corps band of forty pieces from Mare Island, with the premier soloist, Rudy Weidoeft, a vocal quartette and twenty-five marines in full fighting equipment assisted in making the engagement a memorable one.

Liberty Theater Makes Improvements.

The Liberty theater of San Jose, near San Francisco, has taken a lease on adjoining property and is awarding contracts for the construction of a splendid ladies' rest room off the lobby, which will cost not less than $6,000. This rest room will be furnished in sumptuous style and will compare very favorably with conveniences of the kind to be found in any theater in the State. The additional space secured also gives an opportunity for extending the balcony, and room for five hundred seats may be added later, together with exits from the balcony to the street. Adjoining stores have also been taken over and these are to be remodeled with the idea of improving the tone of the entire neighborhood.

Red Cross Drive Interest Fills Theaters

Moving Picture Houses Are Made Centers of the Drive and More Than a Million and a Half Netted for the Cause.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Red Cross week, which netted about a million and a half dollars in the cities making up the greater San Francisco, proved to be a good week for moving picture theaters, in spite of the fact that so many people were taking an active part in the drive for funds. Many theater owners co-operated with the leaders of the drive to make their houses gathering places for the dissemination of Red Cross information, and all assisted by showing special slides or films. In some houses collections were taken and the management of one, the Hippodrome, states that an average of $200 a day was secured there. The California theater posted its honor roll the second day of the drive, every one of its seventy employes being a subscriber to the fund. The Imperial theater gave over a part of its daily advertising space to the cause, and some of the smaller houses gave the entire proceeds of certain performances.

The management of the moving picture houses of Berkeley, comprising the U. C., the T. & D., the Berkeley, the Lorin, the Strand and the Varsity theaters, united in featuring a Red Cross day on May 23d, and all the profits of the day were donated to the Berkeley Chapter of the Red Cross. The joint advertising campaign was very effective and the local fund was swelled by a neat sum.

Many Theaters Sold.

The United Theater exchange has been instrumental in making several important theater transfers of late, among these being the following: Clement theater, 1800 Clement street, San Francisco, from Michaelson Bros. to C. D. O'Costa.

Lincoln theater, at Sixth and Clement streets, San Francisco, from L. H. Killingsworth and J. H. Enos to Abe Markowitz and Ben Lebo.

Lyric theater, at 61 South Second street, San Jose, from Louis Horn and John Peterson to T. W. Bordman.

New Star theater, 928 Tenth street, Modesto, from W. B. Martin to C. F. Reindollar.

Novelty theater, at Martinez, from J. W. Clark to A. Gattemann.

A one-half interest in the Sequoia theater, Twenty-fifth and Telegraph avenue, Oakland, from J. Tobias to Ed. Poussir.

Atlas Film Takes on New Lines.

The Atlas Educational Film Company, Pacific building, is now handling the line of developing tanks, printers and laboratory equipment made by R. P. Stineman of Los Angeles. Mr. Stineman was here recently and made demonstrations of his equipment at several developing and finishing plants and his visit resulted in arrangements for the carrying of stocks here for immediate delivery.

Many Exhibitors Visit Metropolis.

Many country exhibitors have been here during the past few days to arrange for service and to purchase machines and supplies. Among these have been:

Charles Godard, of Godard's J Street theater, Sacramento, who is the proud owner of a new Franklin touring car.

Edgar S. Thompson, of the Gem theater, Kennet, Cal., whose house was recently destroyed by fire, but who has resumed business there.

Glenn Hurst, of Reno, Nev.

Theodore Keech, of the Liberty theater, Fresno, Cal.

C. C. Howell, of the Monache theater, Porterville, Cal.

Claude L. Langley, of Taft and Hanford, Cal.

James J. Wood, of Redding, Cal.

W. F. Jacobs, of the Auburn theater, Auburn, Cal.

W. F. McClune, of the Rose theater, Roseville, Cal.

C. T. Reavies, of the Cline theater, Santa Rosa.

Much New Equipment Being Purchased.

Considerable new moving picture theater equipment is being purchased at the present time and local dealers are having trouble in keeping a sufficient stock of machines on hand to supply the demand. Edward H. Kemp, Commercial building, has just installed two of the De Luxe model Motiographs in the Lorin theater of Beach and Krahn at Berkeley, Cal., and one machine of this type in the new Shriners' building in this city. He has also installed two standard type machines in Fisher's theater in the Richmond district, San Francisco; two in the Butler theater at Tonopah, Nev.; one in the new theater of John E. Triguerio, at Mendocino, Cal., and sold a traveling outfit to the latter to be used in small mountain towns.

Oakland to Have Hippodrome Theater.

Ackerman & Harris will take possession of the MacDonough theater property in July and work will be commenced at once on the remodeling of the building at a cost of not less than $100,000. It was originally planned to call this new house the Palace theater, but arrangements have been made whereby it will be called the Hippodrome, to conform with the other houses on the circuit. Sam Harris, of this concern, states that business is good throughout the entire territory, the slight falling off in attendance in interior houses being more than made up by the increase in the large cities. Irving C. Ackerman recently left for the Yosemite valley with his family for a short outing in California's wonderland.

Cartoon Concern Retires.

The Animated Cartoon Film Corporation, David Hewes building, has turned its contracts over to the Tam Slide Company, 171 Second street, and will retire from the field after June 1. Byington Ford, the active head of the concern is in France, and it is possible that upon his return the business may be resumed, as it was very successful previous to his departure. The Tam Slide Company plans to take over the quarters of the Animated Cartoon Film Corporation and to use the present equipment.

Banquet Tendered Peter Boyle.

Peter Boyle, the new business agent of Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 162, and past president of this organization, was tendered a banquet by his associates on May 18 in appreciation of his efforts in furthering the union cause. William G. Rusk, international organizer, presented him with a gold watch and chain on behalf of those present.

J. L. Warner Returns to the Coast.

J. L. Warner, representing Warner Bros., of New York, has returned to San Francisco, after a stay of about a year in the east, and will assist E. M. Asher, of the film exchange department of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, in booking "My Four Years in Germany."

Among Managers and Salesmen.

H. H. Hicks, manager of the local branch of the Select Pictures Corporation, recently made a business trip to Los Angeles.

H. E. Lotz, manager of the Pacific Coast distributing interests of the Triangle, has left for New York, and Ben F. Simpson, manager of the local branch, has gone to Salt Lake City to attend a meeting of Western branch managers.

Mell Hulling has been promoted to the position of assistant branch manager of the local Pathe office, and his former territory is being covered by Percy Roberts. Robert E. Green, formerly with t Fox exchange at Los Angeles, is now wi the San Francisco Pathe office as booke

W. J. Drummond Steersman at K.E.S.

W. J. Drummond, well known in t motion picture circles of both the E and the West, has taken over the ma agement of the Seattle K-E-S-E office, which Frank Steffy gave up last week to become manager of the Coliseum theater. Mr Drummond became familiar with this territory when he was acting in the capacity of special representative for Mutual two years ago. He is very popular with all the exhibitors and exchange men of the territory. He comes to Seattle direct from San Francisco, where he had headquarters as California special representative for "The Unbeliever." Previous to that he was special representative for Triangle in the New England States.

Leon Bories Made Manager.

M. H. Hoffman, president of Foursquare Pictures Corp., spent two days in Seattle recently. He came to open a new office for the handling of his productions. Leon Bories was appointed manager, and the office is located at 2016 Third avenue, on Film Row. Mr. Bories will also handle the serial written by Wm. J. Flynn, former head of the U. S. Secret Service, "The Eagle's Eye."

Joe Deitch will also handle from this office the pictures belonging to the Northwest Consolidated Film Corp.

Exhibitors from Out of Town.

Among the exhibitors visiting Seattle's Film Row last week were E. J. Myrick, Liberty theater, Portland.

Frank Stannard, Gem and Wenatchee theaters, Wenatchee.

Henry Newman, Arcade and Liberty, Hoquiam.

H. C. Thomas, Dream, Hoquiam.

H. T. Moore, Colonial, Tacoma.

G. G. Maxey Takes New Job.

G. G. Maxey.

Idaho and Montana, and, judging from the success the picture is having in Seattle, he should have little trouble in placing it in every town throughout the territory.

Mr. Maxey has organized and conducted his department at the Paramount office in a very efficient manner, and when the new Artcraft business was added to his duties he showed his ability to grow with his job. Mr. Rosenbaum, Paramount-Artcraft manager, is sorry to lose him to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, but he is nevertheless glad to see him start on his journey toward the top.

Mr. Maxey's work at the Paramount-Artcraft office will be assumed by A. J. Kennedy, publicity manager of the office.

Ackerman & Harris Plan Spokane House

The Hippodrome Needs Bigger Capacity and the Heads of the Circuit Are In Spokane to Prepare For a New Theater.

By S. Clark Patchin, E 1811 Eleventh Ave., Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—A $165,000 theater building at the northwest corner of Lincoln and Sprague streets, Spokane, to house the Hippodrome shows is being considered on the site of the Denver hotel.

Plans for the building have been drawn by Francis P. Rooney, and the location is arranged for. Owners of the circuit will be in Spokane soon to investigate the proposition.

"Ackerman & Harris have improvements in mind for this city, and the new building plans and the location have been placed before them, with what results I do not know. The new location would be a great advantage in many ways, and may appeal to them, and the proposition has been put in definite shape for their consideration.

"Alterations in the present building would need to be very extensive to meet the present needs, and, since the Hippodrome is being provided with new quarters in several other cities and Spokane is supporting the circuit in good shape, it is not unlikely that the building proposal will be met with approval."

The new theater will seat 1,850 people, having the largest capacity in town. The main floor will accommodate 1,000, and there will be a balcony, with a mezzanine floor commanding a view of the stage, to accommodate the crowd unable to find seats until the end of a performance. Every attention will be given to heating and ventilating, and the artistic features will be equal to those of any theater in the Northwest.

Mr. Ackerman and Mr. Harris will be in the city the week of May 27, according to Manager Smith, and will give their attention to these proposals during their stay.

Spokane Has Film Colony Now.

"A score of people prominently identified with the motion picture industry are now gathered in Spokane from New York and California, and will form a permanently colony," said General Manager C. J. Ward, of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation.

"Tyrone Power, our star, will play the leading male role in our first feature photoplay, that of Marshal Strong an early-day prospector of the Northwest.

"Miss Florence Turner, a noted international star of the silent drama, will play opposite Mr. Power.

"Wellington Player, recently of the Famous Players, plays one of the character leads, and Mrs. C. S. Albert, of Spokane, will play 'Lilas,' wife of Marshall Strong. Evelyn Brent, recently leading lady for Lionel Barrymore, will be 'Nancy Strong,' Tyrone Power's daughter. Miss Brent is conceded to be one of the beauties of the screen.

"Kempton Greene is coming to do the juvenile lead, Duncan McRae will take an English character part, and Jane Murfin, well known as a playwright, is giving her attention to the preparation of interesting stories to be produced by our corporation."

Change in Titan Company Officers.

At a stockholders' meeting, the Titan Feature Photoplay Company re-elected its board of five directors, who will be announced soon. A change was made in the officers, those elected being J. Don Alexander, president; C. L. Mayo, vice-president; R. E. Musser, secretary-treasurer. The stock underwriting contract with the K. H. Dixon Company was renewed, and the present business offices of the Titan company will be in the Sherwood building.

Cancel "Birth" Film in Spokane.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer and Dr. H. C. Lambach, of the Clemmer theater, informed members of the county council of defense that they would cancel the engagement of the "Birth of a Nation" film as requested by the county council. The council voted to send letters to all moving picture men in Spokane district requesting them to refrain from running the picture, and to the state council of defense to request that it make similar requests over the state.

Battle Bang at Liberty Theater.

Realism was added to the presentation of Arthur Guy Empey in "Over the Top" at the Liberty, which had a big run for the week ending May 18, by an array of bags of sawdust being lined across the stage. Just before the picture was thrown on a soldier appeared before the curtain and made a plea for enlistments in the state guard, then the house was darkened, and a slide of the picture was shown. The house was again darkened, and, zip, bang, rifles were being discharged right into the audience, but over their heads, by a squad of soldiers who were secreted back of the bulward of bags. A dim light appeared as an apparently wounded man with head bandaged was carried off of the stage.

Titan Making War Pictures.

Motion pictures of Spokane's big Red Cross parade taken May 18 were produced within four hours afterward on the screen at the Liberty theater by the Titan Feature Photoplay Company.

"We plan to incorporate part of the Red Cross parade in a Red Cross photoplay which we are preparing to produce shortly," said Frank E. Montgomery, manager of the Titan Company. "The proposed picture will have many prominent Spokane people in it, incidental to the story.

"Our first big feature play will probably be a war narrative out of the ordinary in many ways. The scenario is now in our hands, and is written by one of the leading photoplay authors of the country. It deals with a branch of the Government service that has never been exploited in pictures, to my knowledge, and is full of sensations."

Seattle Exchange Personals.

James L. Tally, manager of the Seattle Vitagraph office, returned from a trip to Spokane, where he placed the new Vitagraph special, "Over the Top."

H. H. Brownell, formerly with the Vitagraph studios and later employed in the Los Angeles Vitagraph office, has accepted a position in the Seattle office.

R. H. Dunn, bookkeeper in the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office, has been called to Philadelphia on account of the death of his mother.

Miss F. C. Solomon, assistant manager of the De Luxe Feature Film Company, returned from Portland recently, where she helped H. C. Arthur, Jr., open the new branch office for the company. She reports business very good in the Oregon city.

W. H. Merwin, manager of the Seattle Mutual office, reports that he has booked his entire service to Jensen and Von Herberg. The first Mutual production to be shown in Seattle under the new contract is the Wm. Russel special, "Hearts or Diamonds."

Has a Circuit of One Night Shows.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—"Hub Taylor's Tank Town Circuit" is the latest movie combine in this territory. Hub, who formerly represented Pathe here and who is now in the general supply business for himself, has booked up a string of theaters in the nearby "sticks" where he follows a one-night policy. He is making a success of the circuit, too, but Hub had that all figured out before he went into it. Some of the pictures that he offered his rural patrons last week included "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "The Vicar of Wakefield," Pathe Weekly.

"Eagle's Eye" Players Visit Rochester.

The presence of a large number of the cast which is playing "The Eagle's Eye" in this city was a big stimulus to the business of the houses where the picture is being shown. King Baggott and other members of the company came to this city with Leopold and Theodore Wharton to take part in the film which was produced for the Rochester War Chest and which is this week being shown in all of the local theaters.

"War Brides" Film Cannot Enter Marylan

In Trial Brought by Louis J. Selznick Court Upholds Decision of State Board Censors in Its Condemnation of the Picture.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Selznick production entitled "War Brides" cannot be shown in the State of Maryland. This is the decision which has finally been given out by Judge Duffy in Part 3 of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, concerning the appeal which was taken recently by the producers of the film play over the ruling of the Maryland Board of Censors, and it is the only appeal case which has ever come up in the courts of Maryland concerning a moving picture production.

The court went to the Garden theater, Lexington street, at Park avenue, on Saturday morning, May 25, and witnessed a private exhibition of "War Brides." It was the first time the court had sat outside the court room to hear evidence.

In handing down his decision on the case Judge Duffy states in one part that he should hesitate to declare "War Brides" immoral in the narrower sense, that it is not obscene, lewd or salacious and that he does not think it tends to the degeneracy of the moral sense of the public, yet he is strongly of the opinion that the finding of the board that this play is immoral is not arbitrary and should be sustained.

"A GAME WITH FATE."

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature—Poorly Directed and Weakly Acted.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT MAKES little demand on the spectator, the new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "A Game with Fate." It is easy enough to follow, but many will feel during the first reel that it is not going to be even fourth-rate entertainment, for the plot seems to be "the same old" easy-to-write melodrama, and it is clear that the leading woman is not putting any semblance of life in her part. Harry Morey has the central role, and it makes no demands on him as an actor. He plays naturally, but it is a part any actor could walk through.

We see a crime committed and are led to feel that there is a mystery behind it. In the second reel it looks as though another crime, murder, has been committed, and the law slowly winds the accusation around the man who in the first reel stole so mysteriously from the murdered man. The man is condemned and, after failing in all legal aids to clear himself, sends a cable to a mysterious stranger in Europe, who, he says, "can save me now." The answer comes that he is sailing, and the papers report the sinking of the ship and the death of the man. Now it turns out that the "murdered" man is really the man on the ship who is drowned. There are papers proving that it was only a wager to fool the police, and the man who has the papers loves the woman and tries to force her to marry him. She won't, and he burns the evidence that would free her fiance in a scene acted by Betty Blythe as though the only thing at stake was a crushed flower. At the end the "murdered" man, of course, turns up.

A good deal of the action consists of opening and shutting of a cell door, of the leading woman putting her arms around the leading man's neck, of getting in and out of automobiles. True, the story is told by these things, but the feeling of monotony and dragging at a time when the action begins to wear thin makes the closing part of the picture tiresome. It was written by Tom Terris and directed by Paul Scardon.

"THE CABARET."

World Pictures Presents Notable Cast in Story of America's Latin Quarter.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel World picture offering, "The Cabaret," is as pretty a little romance as ever came out of Greenwich Village. It contains all of the glamour and charm of that famous section, and the director, Harley Knowles, has very kindly wrapped up all of the familiar sordid touches and thrown them into the waste basket. There is not a jarring note in it, and the pleasant little story comes to a natural and sympathetic close with just the right element of surprise at the finish.

The story, written by J. U. Guisey, has utilized the "Trilby" idea to a certain extent in the main situation, which is happily acknowledged in the course of the production. It might have been as well to call the whole "A Greenwich Village Trilby," as that is really what the heroine is, up to a certain point. The present title, besides being trite and unworthy of this really admirable tale, is something of a misnomer, as only a few short scenes are taken in a cabaret.

June Elvidge is simple and convincing in her portrayal of the girl out of a job who strolls into the village quarters of the four artists and makes her home with them. They do not want her at first, but she dusts, cleans their brushes and makes herself so generally useful that they keep her, and eventually, of course, all wind up by falling in love with her. Carlyle Blackwell is excellent as the jealous Ned Lorrimer, Montague Love quietly effective as Darrel and John Bowers and George MacQuarrie complete the quartet of artists pleasingly.

The story is one that should prove popular.

"A BROADWAY SCANDAL."

Bluebird Offering Features Carmel Myers in Dashing Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

CARMEL MYERS has come up wonderfully in her acting ability. Her performance in this number, which was written by Harvey Gates and directed by Joseph De Grasse, is a revelation of feminine chic, and she proves altogether bewitching as Nonette Bisson, the girl of French parentage who is fond of "thrills."

The plot, in spite of its unpromising title, is thoroughly enjoyable and moves swiftly through its course to a pleasing conclusion. Nonette is the daughter of Armande Bisson and his wife, who conduct a French cafe in New York. The girl is a favorite with the French colony, but finds life rather tame and expresses a desire to experience some of the thrills of life. She is a pretty, thoughtless creature, and is induced to go on a joy ride with a chauffeur named Colby. This ride precipitates a series of adventures which prove more than she had bargained for.

Colby is in reality an automobile thief, and they are pursued by the motor police, one of whom fires a shot which wounds Nonette. Colby shoots one of the police and takes the girl to a hospital. Here she is befriended by a young doctor. When her story appears in the papers her parents refuse to receive her again and she goes on the stage. The young doctor, who loves her, goes to France and loses an arm in service. Later he returns to this country and meets Nonette, who becomes reconciled with her parents. Colby, prior to this, had been sent to prison.

The presentation of this offering is particularly pleasing from almost every point of view. Others in the cast are Edwin August, Lon Chaney and Andrew Robson.

"LOVE'S CONQUEST.

Lina Cavalieri's Beauty and Art Strongest Features of Paramount Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

VICTORIEN SARDOU'S stage play, "Gismonda," that Fanny Davenport introduced to this country, has been rechristened and produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the name of "Love's Conquest." Lina Cavalieri, the famous Italian beauty and opera singer, is the star of the cast, which was directed by Edward Jose; Charles E. Whittaker did the scenario. The combined efforts of all three results in a screen drama that has many impressive moments, real pictorial appeal, but whose strongest features are the beauty and art of the woman who plays "Gismonda."

The original play was not one of the French dramatist's most successful works. All its author's knowledge of dramatic technic and historical incident are in evidence, and he has not omitted to supply his usual big scene where passion gets the better of the two human beings who occupy the center of his story, but his present material lacks the sympathetic warmth of his masterpieces.

As a pageant reproducing the life of sixteenth century Athens, when that city was ruled by its Roman conquerors, the screen version of "Gismonda" can lay claim to much merit. Edward Jose has been permitted to employ every aid to correct settings for the pictures of the Athenian Court, and to people his scenes with the mobs and principal characters called for by the story. Some of the concerted movements of the crowds are a trifle too mechanical, but most of the groupings are well handled.

Gismonda, a beautiful widow, and the ruler of the Duchy of Athens, is forced to choose between her honor and her pride when her little son is saved by a slave from the claws of a lion after the boy's mother has vowed to wed the man who rescues her child. The rescuer's name is Almerio, and he is shown struggling with the lion. When Gismonda learns of Almerio's birth she refuses to keep her vow, but after he kills a noted pirate chief and wins the title of duke, promised to the man who frees Athens from the menace of the pirate, the duchess grants Almerio his request, and spents the night with him at his hut. The next morning Gismonda kills the man who threw her boy to the lion, and Almerio takes the deed upon himself to shield her. This wins her over completely, and she accepts him as her husband.

Lina Cavalieri as Gismonda is always a source of supreme satisfaction to the eye, and a perfect figure of old romance. She wears the flowing robes of the duchess as though born to them, and mirrors the soul of the titled woman with fine skill. Her artistic restraint is greatly in her favor. Courtenay Foote as Almerio is manly and forceful. Fred Redcliffe, Frank Lee, Fredi Verdi, J. H. Gilmore, and Isabele Berwind complete the cast.

"FOR SALE."

Pathe Release Features Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in Pleasing Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel number, produced by Astra Film Corporation from a story by Fred Jackson, was directed by Fred Wright. It presents Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale as the principals, the narrative containing plenty of story interest and an abundance of action. It is a type of offering that, while it makes no pretense of going very far beneath the surface of life, at the same time wins the observer's continued interest by a rapid succession of entertaining events. It is in no sense a powerful, or even at times a particularly convincing story, yet it is one that will make friends wherever presented.

The girl in the case is a young stenographer named Dorothy Daniels, a role assumed in her usual naive and captivating manner by Miss Hulette. She is out of work and finally gets a job with the boss of her friend Jim, with whom she is in love. Jim is a potential crook and a cad of the worst kind when the story opens, and he develops amazingly along these lines as the piece proceeds.

Dorothy's employer is Waverly Hamilton, a young man portrayed agreeably by Creighton Hale. Hamilton is at once attracted by the girl's looks and falls in love with her. He knows she is in love with Jim, and gives her a sum of money to send Jim West when the latter is presumably ill. As a matter of fact, Jim has stolen a large sum of money from Hamilton, a fact which the latter soon learns. Dorothy eventually marries Hamilton, though she does not love him, in order to provide funds for her family and Jim. Later, when she learns Jim's true character, after the latter attempts blackmail, her love turns to her husband.

The production is developed in short, sketchy scenes at the beginning, and scarcely makes the most of the dramatic moments which follow; it succeeds largely because of the agreeable cast and an abundance of plot interest.

"VIVIETTE."

Vivian Martin in Paramount Picture from Novel by William J. Locke.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE English novelist, William J. Locke, has departed from his usual whimsical style in writing "Viviette," and turned out a story that belongs to the realistic or Sir Henry Arthur Jones school of fiction. The screen version, made from a scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers and directed by Walter Edwards, reveals a well put together photoplay, for the most part, that is acted with good effect, except in one particular, by Vivian Martin and her support. Produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the picture has the advantage of an intelligent and generous policy of preparing the story for the screen, and an upper middle class English society furnishes the background for considerable real drama.

Viviette, the young woman whose name supplies the title of the picture, is a very un-English person. She has just returned from a finishing school when she first appears at Ware Manor, and, as portrayed by Vivian Martin, has the vivacity of a French girl, the roguishness of a daughter of Uncle Sam, and dressed with the good taste of both. Two brothers of the house of Ware fall in love with her. Dick, the elder, is a type of primitive man as he is known on an English country estate. Horses and dogs alone occupy his thoughts until the arrival of the coquettish Viviette. Austin, the other brother, has gone in for a law career, and is already a successful solicitor. Viviette throws Dick off his mental balance to such an extent that he begins to hate Austin, and is even tempted, for the moment, to kill him. This scene is cleverly handled. Viviette urges the brothers to re-enact a duel in which one of the ancient Wares figured, and a loaded pistol almost turns the incident into a tragedy. The finish finds Dick and Viviette married and happy in the Canadian Northwest, and Austin engaged to a pretty young widow.

The picture would make a much better impression if the character of Dick had been properly cast. Eugene Pallette is an excellent actor, but his personality is not suited to the elder Ware brother. Harrison Ford as Austin, Kate Toncray as Mrs. Ware, and Clara Whipple as Kathryn Holroyd are admirable selections.

"ACE HIGH."

Tox Mix is Splendid Hero in Melodrama of the North and is Excellently Supported.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

SUCH good work is done in the recent Fox picture, "Ace High," by everybody concerned, even the Indian players, that it might be called an all-star production without stretching the truth. Tom Mix himself makes a splendid hero for this kind of story, in which he takes the role of a Northwest mounted officer and, as champion of an unprotected girl (Kathleen Connors), saves her from the villainous sheriff from over the border (Lawrence Payton).

The Ace High is the name of a rough saloon where the bar can be moved at a signal across a room from the United States into Canada, or the other way, as the coming of authority makes necessary. It is kept by a venal character, perfectly played by Colin Chase, whose wife, now dead, had adopted a baby girl found in the woods and, unknown to him, daughter of an American engineer. She is now grown up and away at a convent, but is coming back. The mounted officer and the sheriff both drop in at the saloon now and again. The officer had been the girl's playmate a few years before and the sheriff, seeing her picture, takes a fancy to her and the plot is on.

The officer is out on the mountain—the best kind of backgrounds distinguish the whole picture—the girl is coming on the stage. The sheriff has set his gang on to rob the stage of a package of money and the officer sees it held up. There's a dash to the rescue and a runaway, with the girl the only occupant of the rocking vehicle; then more wild galloping and a few well-handled scenes in which the girl and the man recognize each other. The officer knows that he is taking the girl back to danger, but doesn't know that her foster father has decided to sell her to the sheriff.

There is no lack of fresh interest in the story that follows a path often taken by other pictures of this kind, and it comes largely from the new and apparently extemporaneous way the players go about the business. The flight of the man with the girl down a dangerous looking rapid to escape the gang of the sheriff seems a bit too perilous to be at all trite. It isn't likely to be repeated often and carries through some beautiful scenery.

Director Lynn Reynolds has scored another triumph in outdoor directing.

"THE RED-HAIRED CUPID."

Triangle Subject Presents Roy Stewart as Henry Wallace Phillips' Hero.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Triangle subject, "The Red-Haired Cupid," catches a great deal of the flavor of Henry Wallace Phillips' memorable stories of Western humor. There is a certain geniality in the character of "Red" Saunders that will no doubt appeal to screen observers, and Roy Stewart is a good type for the role since he plays with an agreeable freedom from self-consciousness.

The director of this first subject, Clif Smith, has succeeded very well with the humor of the story, which is the important feature. The plot itself, in which Red seeks to aid his friend Kyle Lambert in marrying the girl against her uncle's wishes, is not so clearly outlined. The uncle's opposition to the match is not brought out with sufficient positiveness and it might be well to insert one or two explanatory subtitles.

The Western settings are in perfect keeping with a ranch story of this type. The cowboys play a joke on the uncle Albert Jones, of Boston, by mounting him on a genuine bucking bronco, which soon unseats him. Later the girl, after learning of this, revenges both herself and her uncle by telling them of the arrival of "Lilly," her beautiful friend from the East. The boys dress up in lavish style to meet Lilly, a Jersey cow.

Peggy Pearce plays the girl, Ray Griffith, the uncle, and Charles Dorian the lover.

"THE SQUARE DEAL."

Margarita Fisher Gives Pleasing Performance in Mutual Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE average audience will enjoy "The Square Deal," a five-part production made at the American studios, in which Margarita Fisher is the featured member of the cast. Jack Mowrer plays opposite the feminine star with good effect—in fact his work in some scenes of the picture is more than ordinarily good. The production was directed by Lloyd Ingraham in a creditable manner.

As the story runs the petted youngest daughter of an elderly couple becomes influenced by a male expounder of loose theories which are embraced by certain apostles of culture. Falling in love with a cousin of her dearest friend she marries him, but not before extracting from him a promise to abide by her "square deal" theory which calls for an interchange of confidences should either one fall in love with someone else, with the idea of bringing about a divorce. After suffering life in an apartment hotel which resolves finally into a meeting place for his wife's friends the young husband turns to the girl's mother for a cure. Making his wife believe that he has found another woman who is willing to make a real home for him he goes to her mother's in a nearby village with the full confidence that she will also find her way there and learn his purpose. The expected happens, and the young wife finds herself a wiser and happier woman.

"WHEN MEN BETRAY."

Ivan Abramson's Latest Production, with Gale Kane, Strong Sex Drama.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SEX lure is the proper theme of a photoplay with the suggestive title, "When Men Betray." Ivan Abramson, the author and director of the six-part picture produced by the Graphic Film Corporation and featuring Gale Kane, has not attempted to catch his public with a title that promises a frank revelation of human frailty and then failed to deliver the goods. "When Men Betray" lives up to its name. The theme has not been made unnecessarily offensive, however. The author states his case frankly, but dwells strongest on the consequence of the immorality of his sinning characters, and shows how far-reaching and unsuspected may be the results of a man's departure from physical purity.

Stated baldly, the plot of "When Men Betray" deals with a man who has wealth, the love of a beautiful wife and a sweet little girl, and is fool enough to keep a mistress also. When his wife finds this out he adds insult to injury by mumbling something about his love for the woman being so strong that he is powerless to resist. He keeps up his infatuation until he discovers that his business partner is the real lover of his mistress, that the partner has attempted and almost succeeded in becoming criminally intimate with the hero's wife, and that the man engaged to the hero's elder sister has taken advantage of an opportunity given him by her brother's misconduct to seduce his fiancee's younger sister. Matters are straightened out by marrying the betrayed maiden off to the brother of the dishonorable young fellow, who is shot by the rascal of a partner, and by having the husband promise his wife to behave himself in the future.

There is nothing subtle in the way Ivan Abramson has told this story, but it is worked out in a logical manner, and it generally has the force of real drama. There is too much moralizing in the subtitles, and everyone talks in the good old set speech of cheap sensationalism: "Your brother seeks pleasures with other women, and I, I seek revenge." It also drags in spots, but it is well acted and produced. Admirers of the Abramson brand of screen drama will not find "When Men Betray" at the top of the list, but they will count it as excellent entertainment.

Gale Kane as the wife is limited to a display of but few emotions. She brings to the part great personal attraction and a fine quality of screen art. The other parts are in the hands of Robert Elliot, Stuart Holmes, Jack McLean, Sally Crute, Reed Hamilton, Dora Molls Adams, Gertrude Braun, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn, and Juliet Moore. Marcel A. LePicard is responsible for the photography, which is of good quality.

"LEND ME YOUR NAME"

Harold Lockwood Enacts Dual Role in Entertaining Farce-Comedy.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

DUE largely to clever subtitling and several amusing situations, "Lend Me Your Name," the five-reel Metro release for May 27, is an entertaining picture. The story, adapted from Francis Perry Elliot's novel of the same title, is somewhat involved, and Harold Lockwood, cast in a dual role, although doing capable work in a majority of the scenes, does not always succeed in keeping the two characters distinct.

The Earl of Gilleigh, a dyspeptic, leaves his fiery-tempered wife and comes to America. His twin brother, who many years before forsook the ancestral hearth to wander over the face of the earth, enters the earl's home, and is discovered. The earl, having received word that his wife is coming to visit him, changes places with his brother. Various complications of a farce-comedy nature ensue, based on each brother being mistaken for the other until finally all is straightened out, the earl becoming reconciled to his wife, while his brother wins the girl of his choice.

Harold Lockwood as the earl and his wandering brother gets a number of laughs, and he is assisted by a capable cast. Pauline Curley is charming as the girl, and Bessie Eyton handles well the role of the fiery-tempered wife. Bert Starkey and Harry De Roy in the eccentric roles of Dr. Dinger, a specialist in brain diseases and a valet, respectively, gives good performances and adds to the merriment. Stanton Heck is well cast as the caretaker who poses as a real earl.

The production was directed by Fred L. Balshofer, and the photography is the work of Antonio Gaudio. The interior scenes are lavish in their evidence of wealth, and in keeping with the beautiful exteriors of the two castles. There is also an attractive woodland scene showing a number of girls engaged in classical dancing, and one of the best scenes, which gets over well, is where Lockwood attempts to carry Pauline Curley across a brook, slips on a rolling stone, and ends by sitting contentedly in the water watching the girl as she runs away.

"MORE TROUBLE"

Frank Keenan Gives Fine Impersonation of Doting Father in Five-Part Pathe Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the best comedy-drama productions of the season is one made by Ernest C. Warde for the Anderson-Brunton Company entitled "More Trouble." This production, which will be released July 14 through the Pathe Exchange, Inc., features Frank Keenan, and it may be said to the latter's credit that rarely has he appeared to better advantage. The story on which the picture is based is a good one, written by Edgar Franklin and put in scenario form by Ouida Bergere. An excellent supporting cast consisting of John Gilbert, Ida Lewis, Roberta Wilson, Joseph J. Dowling, Jack Rollins, and Helen Dunbar do much to keep the comedy moving.

The story concerns the troubles that overtake Lemuel Deering, a rich iron manufacturer, the father of the only student at a certain college who boasts not a single demerit mark. He neither drinks nor smokes, and in fact is a model young man. John Gilbert, by the way, gives an excellent interpretation of this character. The proud father, discovering that his son is bent on attending faithfully to the business of life, makes him a partner in his business.

The comedy of the situation which presents itself when there come in bills for cigarettes, liquors, taxis, and all sorts of extravagant luxuries charged to the account of the younger Deering, and finally a note on the bank for some twenty-five thousand dollars can easily be imagined.

The end of it all is that the rescue of the young man from the lockup, where he landed through blackmail by his former college room mate, brings the latter's confession to having forged the note and also to having used Young Deering's name on his charge account because his father, also a rich manufacturer, refused him funds. This, however, does not occur until the elder Deering faces bankruptcy, with the guilty man's father almost in possession of the Deering mills. The manner in which the doting father persists in relying absolutely on the word of his son almost to the last has a strong human appeal, as well as a comedy side.

"THE FAIR PRETENDER"

Six-Part Goldwyn Comedy-Drama Feauring Madge Kennedy Presents Star At Her Best.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE theme of "The Fair Pretender," a six-part Goldwyn production released May 19, is not new. But in the hands of Hugo Ballin, director, and Madge Kennedy, the featured member of the cast, it became as good as new. Madge Kennedy has perhaps never done better work than in this production, which gives her ample opportunity for the class to which she is best suited. Playing opposite her is Tom Moore. Others of the cast are Robert Walker, Paul Doucet, Wilmer Walter, Emmett King, John Terry, Charles Slattery, Florence Billings, and Grace Stevens.

The story, written by Florence Bolles, follows a brief but stirring portion of the career of a young woman, stenographer by profession, who worked in the office of a theatrical manager. Beset with the idea that she can take the place of the leading woman who, in a fit of temperament, has left the cast, she is finally told by the manager that if she can prove to him that she can appear to advantage in society he will grant her wish. The story then follows the young lady into the home of one of the upper ten, into which she is forced by circumstances surrounding her choice of a name. Posing as the wife of a certain Captain Brown reported to have been killed in the war she finds herself in the tightest of tight places, finally coming face to face with the man whose wife she is supposed to be. A young author, also pretending helps out the romantic side of the story, and a German spy who steals the plans of an aero motor belonging to the host of the home in which the pretenders pretended adds a melodramatic touch. "The Fair Pretender" may be classed as a distinct success from the viewpoints of art and of comedy.

"WILD WOMEN AND TAME LIONS."

Laughable Fox-Sunshine Comedy in Which Two Tame Lions and Several Hysterical Women Appear.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Fox-Sunshine comedy, "Wild Women and Tame Lions," is another mark of Lehrman ingenuity. The picture is a series of funny incidents which do not require serious explanation. The tameness of the lions which appear in the picture in conjunction with women of different types, including a sprinkling of men, is something that might be questioned judging from the frequent snarls with which they greet their fellow performers.

The manner in which these beasts have been made to really act in this production is worthy of mention. The idea of a full-sized lion allowing himself to be tied up in a laundry bundle before entering a single complaint is something that has to be seen to be appreciated. He also allows his tail to be braided in the plait of a maiden lady's hair. By way of further explanation we will say that he found his way unnoticed into said lady's room when she was retiring for the night. The attempt at speedy separation of tail and braid is very funny.

The picture is full of just such entertaining nonsense, and one wonders at the daring of the players who work with perfect ease apparently unmindful of the danger which must necessarily attend association with the most treacherous of beasts.

"THE BRAVEST WAY"

Paramount Presents Sessue Hayakawa in a Drama of Sacrifice.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CHIEF values in this story are those of personality. The essential character of Mr. Hayakawa is that of gentle manliness, and, if it is representative of his race, it contributes to a more complete understanding of his people. Miss Florence Vidor charms equally with her sweet womanliness. These two and their supporting players carry along an action which is so entirely at the discretion of the author, irrespective of plausibility, and so easily determinable in advance, that the high value of suspense is almost entirely lacking. A villainous Japanese kills a brother clerk for no other apparent reason than that of revenging himself on a third, played by Hayakawa, against whom he has a grudge. He uses the latter's knife, and plants it near the victim. The knife is not found—it has slipped down a crack—and the villain makes no accusation until a period of three years has intervened.

Hayakawa, in the role of sacrifice, marries the wife of the murdered comrade in order to support her and her children and suit some religious neighbors, not taking the trouble to explain to them the circumstances, nor even to the half-caste to whom he is engaged.

The half-caste is broken-hearted, and induced by an American villain to go abroad and study vocal music for three years. She returns, and finds herself in the villain's power to the extent of five thousand dollars. How can she pay it? The employer of Hayakawa conveniently assigns to Hayakawa his entire business and six thousand dollars; the Japanese woman he has married conveniently dies; the villain who did the murder is forced into a confession, and the manly young Japanese at last embraces the gentle half-caste, the two agreeing to raise the dead woman's children.

General Film Company.

THE RAIDERS OF SUNSET GAP (Ned Finley).—L. Case Russell is the author of this two-part photoplay produced by Ned Finley. It is a story of moonshiners in the Tennessee Mountains and follows along the beaten path of this class of pictures. The love interest is built around the efforts of Buck Lane to protect Lindy Farley's father from the revenue officers, the old man being a true son of the mountains and engaged in the manufacture of moonshine whiskey. Buck pretends to be looking for copper ore, and a fake blast which he set off uncovers a deposit of the metal. The picture was made in the Tennessee country and possesses a number of striking scenes. It is fairly well acted. Ned Finley, Marion Henry, Richard R. Neil, Harry Hamill and Bert Gudgeon are in the cast.

WAY UP IN SOCIETY (Diamond).—Lew Marks, Irving Browning and Diana Allen are the chief fun-makers in this one-part knockabout farce. The plot turns on the efforts of two tramps to get into society and get a square meal into themselves. They waylay a count, steal his clothes and his title and go through the regulation comic business set down for such cases. Everyone in the cast works vigorously and the picture will amuse a limited class of spectators.

HIS FATAL FATE (Diamond).—This one-part comedy is acted by the same cast as the one used in "Way Up in Society," and shows the humors of a theatrical boarding house as seen through the glasses of a pair of burlesque comedians. The action is rapid and the fun of the same quality as "Way Up in Society."

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

A BROADWAY SCANDAL (Bluebird).—A brilliant little comedy-drama in five reels, written by Harvey Gates and directed by Joseph De Grasse. Carmel Myers is featured as a daughter of a French restaurateur in New York. The plot action is swift and the situations are delicately handled. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Educational Films Corporation.

SWAT THE FLY (Educational).—A Katzenjammer number, the enjoyment of which will depend entirely on the viewpoint of the audience. In this number Mr. K. is painting the floor while Mrs. K. is busy trying to swat a fly that will not be swatted. The children finding a vacuum cleaner and also a hive full of bees endeavor to turn pain into comedy by disgorging the vacuum's load of bees about their parents' heads.

Famous Players-Lasky.

LOVE'S CONQUEST, June 2.—Taken from Sardou's stage play "Gismonda," this five-part picture presents an elaborate production of life in Athens in the sixteenth century and is well played by Lina Cavalieri and her support. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

VIVIETTE, June 9.—Vivian Martin is the star of this screen version of the story by William J. Locke. The plot is dramatic and the scenes take place on an English country estate. The picture is in five parts. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

WILD WOMEN AND TAME LIONS (Sunshine), June 2.—A comedy which will please the majority of people because of the part taken in it by a couple of apparently tame lions. The picture contains some good slapstick comedy, and the daring of the players in acting in close conjunction with the king of beasts will elicit considerable admiration.

"ACE HIGH" (Fox), June 9.—A five-reel melodrama of the Northwest. It will more than probably prove a popular number, for it is most satisfactorily played with Tom Mix in the leading role and supported by Kathleen Connors, Colin Chase, Lawrence Peyton and others, many not named in the cast, but all excellent. The story has fresh interest, is exciting and is directed by Lynn Reynolds, whose other recent Western picture will be recalled. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

Graphic Film Corporation.

WHEN MEN BETRAY (Graphic).—Written and directed by Ivan Abramson, this six-part picture has a vital story on the lines indicated by the title, and is capab acted by Gale Kane and the supporting company. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

A GAME WITH FATE (Blue Ribbon Feature), June 3.—Five-reel melodrama poorly acted for the most part. It holds attention till the outcome can be guessed, which is during the fourth reel, but there is more than one rather awkward and dragging place in the action. For a longer notice see another page of this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

LEND ME YOUR NAME, May 27.—Adapted from the novel of the same title by Frances Perry Elliot, this five-reel picture furnishes Harold Lockwood with an entertaining vehicle. There are several amusing situations and a number of good laughs. Lockwood appears in the dual role of an English nobleman and his carefree brother, who has become a wanderer on the face of the earth. Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 26 (Mutual), May 29.—Among the interesting items of this issue is given a demonstration of the effective use of honey in treating wounds. There are also Red Cross parades, scenes on the French battle front, Belgian soldiers on their way from Russia to the wet front, and other events of interest.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 27 (Mutual), June 2.—A fire at the Fowler aeroplane works opens this number, which also show women learning to do the work of men, the result of a tornado at Boone, Ia.; putting a stop to smuggling on the Mexican border, and other items of current interest.

A SQUARE DEAL (American), June 10.—A moderately entertaining Margarita Fisher feature in which a young woman, led away by the teachings of a certain irresponsible male, tries to carry into her married life what she terms "the square deal." The idea is that if either should fall in love with someone else, that party should confide in the other so that a divorce might be arranged without further trouble. Needless to say grief attends her adventures. A full review will be found elsewhere.

BY FOWL MEANS (Strand).—Rather an entertaining comedy in which the troubles of a young wife who tries to cook dinner for some friends of hubby's are set forth. Finally, after burning her own turkey she steals one from the oven of her neighbor, who, when she discovers her loss, proceeds to make things hum. The guests also furnish turkeys, and the ending of the picture takes place in the studio where the stage hands are finishing the remains of the feast. The latter is hardly understandable as a finish to the story.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

BRITAIN'S BULWARKS, NO. 5 (Pathe), June 9.—Another informing number of the series compiled by Charles Urban. This answers any number of mental querie that have been asked about the work o "drifters" and mine-laying vessels, a well as mine-sweepers in the North Sea Any amount of absorbing details are pic tured in connection with this war work It gives a new comprehension of the gi gantic labors carried out in the water surrounding the British Isles.

FOR SALE (Pathe), June 9.—A five-ree subject produced by Astra from a story by Fred Jackson. It features Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The story concerns a girl who marries her employer in order to send money to her real lover, who is presumably ill. The latter is a cad and later develops into a crook, and the girl comes to true happiness at last with her husband. This is not powerful in any way but entertaining and full of action.

ST. THOMAS (Pathe-Post Film Co.) June 16.—This first issue of the New York Evening Mail Travel series is decidedly instructive and interesting. It describes in pictures the island of St. Thomas, purchased by this country from Denmark The towns and native life are most picturesque, and especially enjoyable are the scenes showing the inhabitants carrying coal in wholesale lots.

SOMEWHERE IN TURKEY (Rolin-Pathe), June 16.—A laughable knockabout comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. This pictures Harold as a professor in Turkey. He becomes enamoured of a girl whom the Sultan also likes and of course trouble speedily follows. The situations are of the slapstick order and will get many laughs

Triangle Pictures Corporation.

THE POOR FISH (Triangle-Keystone) June 2.—A two-reel comedy, based on a story by Frank Condon. This pictures the amusing experiences of a young lady with a bowl of goldfish, and a young man with an unwelcome baby, on the way to a house party. The scenes are nicely pictured and the general effect quite pleasing, though not extremely laughable. The baby was too roughly handled at times.

THE RED-HAIRED CUPID (Triangle) June 2.—A five-reel story of ranch life adapted from one of the well known humorous tales by Henry Wallace Phillips. Roy Stewart plays the part of Rec Saunders, a role which suits him very well. There is some very good humor in this subject and the story is entertaining Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Company.

CURRENT EVENTS, NO. 55 (Universal) May 25.—Training with our Naval Rookies: registration of men of 21 years; official "baby" week in Chicago; Belgian troops returning from Russia, and numerous other subjects are treated in this number

World Pictures Corporation.

THE CABARET (World Picture), June 10.—A charming little romance of Greenwich Village, quite the best that has come out of that interesting quarter for some time. The story, by J. U. Guisey, is one of the pleasant type and awakens sympathetic interest. It is enacted by a splendid cast, which includes June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and others. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

FIRED (World-Comedy).—A two-reel knockabout comedy featuring Marie Dressler, heroine of many stage comedies. She plays in this the role of a waitress discharged from her job who makes friends with a hobo and afterward tries to rob a house. There is a good deal that is laughable in this, but the efforts at humor are too obvious at times to get the best results. It makes a fairly strong comedy number.

"THE CABARET."

World-Pictures Present Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, John Bowers and George MacQuarrie in an All-Star Production of Timely Interest.

Cast.

Helene.....June Elvidge
Grandpere.....Captain Charles
Jaffrey Darrel.....Montagu Love
Ned Lorrimer.....Carlyle Blackwell
Dick Turner.....John Bowers
Stanley Sargent.....George MacQuarrie

Directed by Harley Knoles.

The Story: The narrative deals with the love adventures of a girl seeking a livelihood who comes innocently to a student's apartment in Greenwich village and calmly assumes possession of one of his rooms. The student is a member of "The Quartet," of whom the other members are three other artists like himself. The four take an intense interest in the young girl, and they vie with themselves in being nice to her until one of the number becomes jealous of her supposed preference for another member of the quartet, and the pleasant relationships are disrupted and not restored. Then happen surprising and interesting events which culminate in the happy union of two loving hearts.

Feature June Elvidge as Helen and Carlyle Blackwell as Ned Lorrimer.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Bohemian Life, Its Love and Jealousy, Screened in New York's Famous Greenwich Village.

"MIDNIGHT MADNESS."

Bluebird Presents Kenneth Harlan and Ruth Clifford in an Unusual Story of Stolen Gems and a Gem Thief Who Did Not Belong.

Cast.

Prentice Tiller.....Kenneth Harlan
Aaron Molitor.....Harry Van Meter
Simon Temple.....Harry M. Holden
Gertrude Temple.....Ruth Clifford
Chevat.....Louis Willoughby
Lola Montez.....Miss Harris

The Story: Prentice Tiller goes to his hotel room to dress a wound in his left hand. A number of jewelry robberies have been committed, and the only evidence the police have is that the thief has a wounded left hand. Through Gertrude Temple, Tiller meets Aaron Molitor, and sees that his left hand is also wounded. The next night Tiller breaks into Gertrude's house via the window, and is about to steal her gems, when the police arrive. To save Gertrude, Tiller allows the officers to think that he is Molitor. Sometime later, Molitor, Gertrude and her father are on the boat for France, when Tiller comes aboard. Molitor, assuming that he is one of them, does not molest him. In Paris, Gertrude becomes involved in a love quarrel with Lola, the plaything of Chevat, the mastercrook. Lola is about to kill her when Tiller appears. At this moment the police break in, and in the melee, Tiller gives Gertrude a bag of jewels and aids her in escaping. Chevat is killed by Lola, and Tiller, who has disguised himself, flees.

Feature Kenneth Harlan as Prentice Tiller and Ruth Clifford as Gertrude Temple.

Stunt Suggestions: For two or three days before presentation have all of the house staff with their left hands neatly bandaged. To any inquiries instruct them to reply, "See 'Midnight Madness'," and naming the playing dates. Parade a street man with an enormous bandage upon his left hand. Paint on the bandage, "See 'Midnight Madness' (house) today." The bandage should be large enough to permit clear lettering. Cut-out bandaged hands or glove models can be used to hold window cards.

"HYPOCRITES."

Cosmofotofilm Presents the Famous English Cinema Production with Elizabeth Risdon, Star of "The Manx Man."

Cast.

Rachel.....Elizabeth Risdon
Michael Neve.....Edward O'Neill
Helen.....Margaret Brewster
Sarah Piper.....Minnie Grey
Lennard.....Cyril Raymond
Rev. Edgar Linnel.....Frank Randall
Mr. Wilmore.....Douglas Munro

The Story: Lennard, the son of the squire of the village of Weybury, England, meets Rachel, daughter of Michael Neve, a poor sculptor, for whom he poses. Upon receipt of a letter from his mother telling him that arrangements have been made for his marriage to Helen, daughter of Sir John Plugenet, Lennard leaves Rachel, but with the promise to return. When Lennard reaches home he is told that he must marry Helen to prevent financial ruin overtaking his father. A rumor to the effect that the squire's stableman has been unwise in his relations with Sarah Piper spreads about, so the squire, Mr. Wilmore, who considers himself guardian of the village morals, orders their marriage to take place at once. But the Rev. Edgar Linnel, the village curate, who detests hypocrisy, and who is a man with a broad mind, refuses to perform the ceremony on the ground that he is sure that the stableman has been used as a pawn. Lennard's mother intercepts his letter to Rachel, and the girl, whose father has died, and who believes that he has forsaken her, comes to the village. She falls ill upon her arrival, and the curate learning the cause of her illness exposes Lennard's affair with her. Rachel is compelled by the squire's lawyer to sign a paper absolving Lennard, but the curate reveals the true state of affairs, and the young people are married.

Feature Elizabeth Risdon as Rachel and Cyril Raymond as Lennard.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Heart-Appealing Story of Love and Intrigue in a Quiet English Countryside.
Hypocrisy Exposed by God-Fearing Curate at Risk of His Office.
Wealth and Influence Fail Despite Intrigue and Villainy When True Love Takes Command.
Honest Love Finds the Way to Happiness While Baffling Intrigue and Malice.
Gripping Story of True Love in Its Fight Against Oppression.
The Power of Love in Its Battle Against Deceit and Malice.

Stunt Suggestions: This story of English country life offers no opportunities for special stunts. Make the most of the hit Miss Risdon has made in "The Manx Man." Offer it as a picture of English life, but not as a typical example, and dwell on the pretty country scenes. You might ask your patrons if they know a hypocrite when they see one, and explain they can learn the ear marks at your house on a certain date.

"UNDER THE YOKE."

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in a Romantic Melodrama of the Philippine Insurrection.

Cast.

Maria Valverde.....Theda Bara
Captain Paul Winter.....Albert Roscoe
"Diabolo" Ramirez.....G. Raymond Nye
Don Ramon Valverde.....E. B. Tilton
The Duenna.....Carrie Clark Ward

Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

The Story: Captain Paul Winter, of the American Army of Occupation in the Philippine Islands, meets Marie Valverde, who falls passionately in love with him. She scorns the advances of "Diabolo" Ramirez, an overseer on her father's plantation. "Diabolo," intent on revenge, foments an uprising among the natives, and Marie's father is slain. When word of the revolt reaches the headquarters at Manila, Captain Winter is sent with a detachment to subdue it. In his endeavor to rescue Marie, who has been captured by "Diabolo," Winter is himself taken prisoner. The United States artillery comes into the fray, and the bombardment sets the house afire; but the troops enter and carry Marie and Winter to safety.

Feature Theda Bara as Marie Valverde and Albert Roscoe as Captain Paul Winter.

Theda Bara's Latest and Greatest Sensational Dramatic Triumph.

Stunt Suggestions: The lithographs for this play, particularly the larger sizes, are sufficiently vivid to bring good returns, and will pay for extra posting. Trust to these for the outside work, and in the papers hook up the Philippine campaign with the present world war and draw comparisons between the methods and means of warfare.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Press sheets and mats. (Mats may be secured free by writing to the Fox Film Corporation, Publicity Department, New York City.) Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"A SOUL FOR SALE."

Jewel Presents Dorothy Phillips in An Absorbing and Piquant Adaptation of Barter Evelyn V. Campbell's Vivid Tale in Snappy Stories.

Cast.

Neila Pendleton.....Dorothy Phillips
Mrs. Pendleton.....Catherine Kirkwood
Wilbur Simons.....Harry Dunkinson
Hale Faxon.....Wm. Burress
Steele Minturn.....Albert Roscoe

Directed by Allen Holubar.

The Story: Mrs. Pendleton has an insatiable desire for jewelry, so when her husband dies she finds herself without funds as the result of her extravagances. To obtain money she contrives to marry her daughter, Neila, to some wealthy man, and at a fashionable resort where Mrs. Pendleton takes her daughter she does her utmost to get her wedded to the rich old Hale Faxon. By a trick the mother involves Neila's financial honor, and it looks as if Neila would have to sell her soul to Faxon, who in reality is the scandal of the place. But Neila falls in love with Steele Minturn, a wealthy young man, and her mother robs him to secure money. Neila learns of her mother's transgression, and in replacing the money is caught by Minturn, who, believing her guilty, breaks their love affair. But Minturn hears the truth later on, and the development of the plot brings about a pleasing end.

Feature Dorothy Phillips as Neila Pendleton and Albert Roscoe as Steele Minturn.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Reared in Luxury a Girl's Soul Is Offered for Sale to Social Lepers by Her Fiendish Mother.

Stunt Suggestions: Make the most of the title. Feature it on the boards and in the newspapers, and get out throwaways, with the title for the catchline, giving a description of the player, and adding that her soul can be seen at your house on a certain date. Get the butchers to display signs reading, "We sell hearts and livers and brains, but only the Blank theater has 'A Soul for Sale.' On sale (date)." Send out a sandwich man with the title on the front sign and the details on the back board.

Advertising Aids: One, three, five and twelve-sheets. Various stills. Heralds in rotogravure. Window cards. Lobby displays. Advertising book. One, two and three-column cuts.

"THE LAST REBEL."

Triangle Presents Belle Bennett in a Story of An Unreconstructed Family That Stayed Unreconstructed to the Third Generation.

Cast.

Floribel ..... Belle Bennett
Cora Batesford
Colonel Batesford.....Walt Whitman
Mrs. Batesford.....Lillian Langdon
Jack Batesford.....Joe Bennett
Harry Apperson.....Joe King
Jim Apperson.....Joe King
Pensinger Gale.....Jack Curtis
Mammy Lulu.....Lucretia Harris
Landlady.....Anna Dodge

Directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton.

The Story: At the outbreak of the Civil War the friendliness between the Batesfords and the Appersons, two old southern families, is broken when Harry Apperson declares his intention to fight to save the Union. At the end of the war Harry finds his sweetheart, Cora Batesford, married. Harry goes to the West, where he strikes it rich. Fifty years later he and his grandson, Jim, are the only Appersons left, and Jim is sent to Carolina to buy back the old homestead. When Jim arrives at the old town he finds the fortunes of the Batesfords have so dwindled that Floribel Batesford, who is just reaching womanhood and who is the only remaining member of the Batesford family, is unable to pay the mortgage on the estate and has to let it go into the hands of Pensinger Gale, who holds the mortgage. Gale offers to give the property back to her if she will become his wife, but she refuses. Jim meets Floribel and proffers his assistance, but she ignores him when she learns that he is an Apperson. He vows to look after her, and in another city where Floribel has made a vain search for employment and is on the verge of committing suicide he at last persuades her to abandon her determination to cherish the Batesford honor and to accept aid from an Apperson. Shortly before Jim and Floribel are married he buys the Batesford estate from Gale and gives it to his wife as a wedding present.

Feature Belle Bennett, who plays the parts of Floribel and Cora Batesford, and Joe King as Jim Apperson.

Stunt Suggestions: About the best way to handle this story would be to work along the lines that there is no North and South today and present this as a curious picture of a condition no longer existing. Point to the northern and southern men fighting together in the trenches and waving the flag. This is about all that can be done to excuse the revival of this antiquated idea.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28 Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

"FIND THE WOMAN."

Vitagraph Presents Alice Joyce in a Blue Ribbon Feature By Stanley Olmstead From Suggestions by O. Henry' Cherchez la Femme.

Cast.

Madeline Renard.....Alice Joyce
Maurice Dumars.....Walter McGrail
Monsieur Morin.....Arthur Donaldson
Madame Tibault.....Jessie Stevens
Nicolette.....Jean Paige
Sol Robbins.....Henry Hour
Sister Felicite.....Mary K. Carr

Directed by Tom Terris.

The Story: Maurice Dumars, a journalist, is enamored of Madeline Renard of a French opera company. She is to sing Marguerite in Faust and induces Monsieur Morin, a gold worker, to make a paste replica of a string of pearls, which belong to her mother and which is worth $20,000, for the great jewel aria. Morin makes the counterfeit gems, and the next day is found dead. The $20,000 which M. Morin received from Madame Tibault to invest for her is missing from his effects, but a note from him to Madeline which is found saying that he had done her a great favor in making the jewelry casts suspicion upon the opera singer. When she makes her appearance as Marguerite in Faust she is hissed, and she tells of her business relations with M. Morin and of her mother's jewels. Simultaneous with her leaving the convent a year or so later, where she had gone to seek refuge, Dumars finds pinned on the walls of Mme. Tibault's inn the $20,000 in bank notes which M. Morin had given her and which she had carelessly left there. With the mystery cleared Madeline is again sought by Dumars and all who had done an injustice.

Feature Alice Joyce as Madeline Renard and Walter McGrail as Maurice Dumars.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Eventful Career of An Opera Singer Who Lives Down Criminal Suspicions and Finds Triumph in True Love.
Fateful Legend of Paste Pearls That Brought Happiness to Loving Hearts.
Ambitious Girl Sees Fame on Operatic Stage to Find Happiness Where She Least Expected.
Revelations of a Great Secret in the Career of a Famous Singer.
Intensely Emotional Photodrama Produced With Consummate Artistry.
Alice Joyce Creates the Most Ambitious Role in Her Screen Career.

Stunt Suggestions: A good line for throwaway or window cards would be a large "Find the Woman and bring her to the Blank theater (date) to see Alice Joyce in Find the Woman." This would also work on small cards for general distribution. On the cards all but the title should be in very small type well away from the title. Get department stores to

"A GAME WITH FATE."

Greater Vitagraph Presents Harry Morey, With Betty Blythe in a Sensational and Thrilling Story of a Man Who Gambled With Death.

Cast.

Robert Harwell.....Harry Morey
Elaine Huntington.....Betty Blythe
Henry Dawson.....Denton Vane
Richard Shields.....Percy Standing
Chief Inspector Burke.....Robert Gaillard
Harwell's Lawyer.....Stanley Walpole

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: Robert Harwell ,a young millionaire, wagers with a friend he can get himself convicted of murder on evidence he himself "plants." Affidavits are made out to guard against any possible contingency, and the friend disappears. Harwell. is found guilty and condemned to die in the chair, and on the day of his sentence he learns that his friend, whom he is supposed to have murdered, has perished when a steamship on which he is returning from Europe is torpedoed. He sends a supposed friend for the affidavits and this man seeks to use them to force the girl, whom Harwell loves, to marry him. She refuses and he destroys the documents, the last hope Harwell has of escaping the chair. But as Harwell is being led to the execution chamber his friend, who had been saved when the ship was attacked by the U-boat, arrives and Harwell's life is spared. His sweetheart forgives him and again they find happiness in each other's love.

Feature Harry Morey as Robert Harwell and Betty Blythe as Elaine Huntington.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Rich Clubmen Provide Themselves with Thrill by Wagering That One May Be Convicted of Murder He Did Not Commit.
Close to the Electric Chair for a Murder Never Committed Rich Clubman Miraculously Saved by Protecting Fate.
Suspense and Thrills Provided by a Succession of Surprises.
Oddly Conceived Photoplot Provides Gripping Entertainment.
Something New in Photoplot Furnishes Unique Thrills and Sensations.
Surprise Follows Sensation in Fast-Moving Photodrama of Thrills.

Stunt Suggestions: If your patrons like melodrama you have plenty of chance to get their money with this by giving the plot of the story, but holding back the climax. Use the newspapers and get out a noisy throwaway. With a better class audience deal rather with the novelty of the story and the originality of the situation in which Robert finds himself. Work also on the value of circumstantial evidence. If you can, hook up with some local or state murder trial. Use such lines as "It's all right to bet, but don't make the electric chair the stakes." "Vengeful rival on death bed denounces innocent rival as murderer." "U-boat torpedoes condemned murderer's last hope of life."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby display, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

Cast.

Vivette.....Vivian Martin
Dick Ware.....Eugene Pallette
Austin Ware.....Harrison Ford
Mrs. Ware.....Kate Toncray
Kathryn Holroyd.....Clare Whipple
Lord Banstead.....Donald Blakemore

Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story: Viviette is an impulsive English girl whose charms attract men to her as the flame attracts the moths. When Dick Ware, a primitive Englishman, strong and masterful, declares his love for her, she coquettes with him and then devotes her attention to Dick's brother Austin, and later to Lord Banstead. She dangles the three upon her fingers, sporting with them, loving each in greater or less measure, but in her heart of hearts, the big primitive man's image lingers with increasing affection. So it happens that when Dick becomes jealous of her and she banteringly suggests that he fight a make-believe duel with Austin, he carries out the program with murder in his heart. Fortunately for all concerned, however a catastrophe is providentially averted and Viviette realizes that she has done a foolish thing. After many scenes of intense interest and not a few serious complications, Dick's strong primitive nature wins her love and both find happiness in their mutual affection.

John Braddock.....Alec B. Francis
Nathan Bergman.....Alfred Hickman
Briggs .....Edward Boulden
Bagley .....Edward Elkas
Boy .....Albert Hackett
Hattie Fanshawe.....Una Trevelyn
"Dimples" Briggs.....Nadia Gary

Directed by H. R. Durant.

The Story: Kitty O'Brien is an employee of Braddock & Company, manufacturers of bathing suits. On account of its old-fashioned methods and stock the business is on the wane. Kitty designs a stunning bathing dress, which creates a sensation among the buyers. The new bathing suit resuscitates business and Bradford, whose health has been rather undermined as the result of worry over his son's extravagant living, goes to a country resort to recuperate. Kitty, who has never seen Paul, the son, writes him at college, telling him of his father's condition and that he is the cause of it. Determined to show his father that he has the right stuff in him, Paul applies for and secures a position in his father's office under an assumed name. But his identity is revealed to Kitty some time later when he gets into trouble with an adventuress. Kitty gives the woman a position as model upon her promise to reform, and Bergman falls in love with her. Paul goes to Kitty's home to tell her of his love, and arrives as the dissolute father of "Dimples," a little girl whom Kitty has taken into her home, attempts to abduct her. In coming to the aid of "Dimples," Paul is shot by the father of the girl. Kitty nurses him back to health, and when Mr. Braddock returns he receives the surprise of his life in hearing that Paul has helped to build up the business and that he and Kitty are to be married.

Pathe Presents Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in an Astra Production of a Girl Who Sacrificed for Love and Found the Object Worthless.

Cast.

Dorothy Daniels.....Gladys Hulette
Waverly Hamilton.....Creighton Hale

The Story: Dorothy Daniels is a stenographer in the office of Waverly Hamilton. In the same place works Jim Reynolds, a bookkeeper, and her sweetheart. Jim contracts a violent cough, and Dorothy, much alarmed, consents to his request to ask Hamilton for a loan to enable him to get to a dry climate. Hamilton extends aid, but only on the promise of Dorothy that she marry him. Jim takes the money, but does not know that Dorothy virtually has sold herself to her employer. It develops that Jim had stolen a large sum of money from Hamilton, and that is his real reason for going away. Dorothy is ignorant of this, and as the wife of Hamilton she is in position to send Jim enough money to keep him in the healthful climate. Dorothy still believes that she loves Jim, but as the weeks go by she begins to see the admirable qualities in her husband, and finds herself falling in love with him. Jim, learning that Dorothy has married, returns. He spurns the explanation that Dorothy made the sacrifice to save his life. And then comes the big climax.

Feature Gladys Hulette as Dorothy Daniels and Creighton Hale as Waverly Hamilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Girl Marries for Mercenary Reasons and Then Falls in Love With Her Husband.

Stenographer, Believing She Loves Fellow Employee, Steals Money from Her Benefactor and Pays the Price in Humiliation.

Complicated Situations and Complex Plot Lends Gripping Appeal to Sympathy-Impelling Photoplay.

Weak Will and Faint Heart Leads Stenographer to Hazardous Venture in Matrimony.

Gripping Photoplot Woven Around Every Day Life in Bustling Business Office.

With No Look Before the Leap Foolish Girl Marries Into Maze of Troubles.

Stunt Suggestions: The title will work up well on an imitation auction bill for a throwaway or small poster following the general style of such bills in your territory. For the lobby use a large portrait of Miss Hulette, with a "For Sale" sign and the date. For street work use a man with a bell and a sandwich board carrying out the "For Sale" idea.

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 11x14, both in sepia and color. Also 22x28. Slide. Campaign book. Cuts.

"HER FINAL RECKONING."

Adolph Zukor Presents Pauline Frederick in a Story Based Upon Jules Claretie's "Prince Zilah."

Cast.

Marsa, Princess Zilah .....Pauline Frederick
Prince Zilah.....John Miltern
Count Menko.....Bob Cain
Count Verhely.....Warren Cooke
Doctor Forg.....Joseph Smiley
Doctor Charcot.....James Laffey
Prince Tcheretoff.....Karl Dane
Marquis de Nati.....Florence Beresford
Butler in Marsa's Home...Louis Reinhart
Maid in Marsa's Home.....Edith Ellwood

Directed by Emile Chautard.

The Story: Marsa is the gypsy daughter of a Russian prince who is wronged at an early age by a rascally count. When she meets and loves Prince Zilah in Paris at a later period the count seeks to force her into a resumption of their former relationship, but when he calls at the villa at midnight she sets her Russian wolfhounds upon him, and he is nearly bitten to death. Unfortunately for Marsa the man escapes with his life, and he later forwards to Prince Zilah a packet of compromising letters written by her, and in despair she confesses all to her fiancee. She becomes ill, the count is killed in a duel, and Prince Zilah takes Marsa to his heart despite her admissions of guilt.

Feature Pauline Frederick, who plays the dual roles of Marsa and Princess Zilah, and John Miltern as Prince Zilah.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Dual Roles Give Pauline Frederick the Greatest Opportunity for Passionate Acting in All Her Career.

"THE SHOP GIRL."

Vitagraph Presents Gladys Leslie in the Story of a Million Dollar Damage Suit. A Blue Ribbon Feature.

Cast.

Marjorie Sanford.....Gladys Leslie
Her Father.....Frank Norcross
Richard Van Ruhl.....Ed. Burns
Mrs. Van Ruhl.....Julia Swayne Gordon
Jimmie.....Harold Foshay
Deering.....Ed. Favor

Directed by Martin Justice.

The Story: Marjorie Sanford wants to break into society. Her father, a millionaire soap manufacturer, to aid her social ambitions, proceeds on the theory that society people principally crave publicity, and advertises her by placing her face on each cake of soap that leaves his factory. But instead of assisting Marjorie the scheme operates against her, for Mrs. Van Ruhl, her aunt, and social arbiter, refuses to countenance such an idea, and the young girl finds herself a social outcast. Having learned that the first Van Ruhls sold rum to the Indians, Marjorie, in retaliation, buys a distillery and sells whiskey, and on the bottles is a trademark bearing a likeness of Mrs. Van Ruhl. On the ground that Marjorie has injured her standing, Mrs. Van Ruhl brings suit against her; but Richard Van Ruhl, the nephew, who has been disinherited because of his infatuation for Marjorie, learns of the trouble, and comes to her rescue. He succeeds in making Mrs. Van Ruhl see her error and in getting her to drop her suit. Marjorie becomes the wife of Richard, and Mrs. Van Ruhl relinquishes her place as social arbiter in favor of the young girl.

Feature Gladys Leslie as Marjorie Sanford and Edward Burns as Richard Van Ruhl.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Clever Satire of Social Distinction Combined With Interesting Love Plot to Adorn the Sarcastic Tale.

Dan Cupid Proves Once More That It Pays to Advertise.

Stunt Suggestions: Use a teaser campaign before announcing the title with such lines as, "You can't slide into society on a cake of soap," "While there's soap there's hope," "Have you heard about the $1,000,000 damage suit?" etc. For window work cut rough busts or figures out of yellow bar or soft soap and use them as the basis for window displays. Offer a small prize for the best reproduction of "The Soap Girl" to be turned in a day or two before the showing and placed on exhibition in some store window. Use the display in a borrowed show case for the lobby ballyhoo if space permits.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

"THE ONLY ROAD."

Metro Presents Viola Dana and a Cast of Favorite Players in a Charming Story of a Tomboy Heiress.

Cast.

Nita.....Viola Dana
Bob Armstrong.....Casson Ferguson
Clara Hawkins.....Edith Chapman
Ramon Lupo.....Fred Huntley
Pedro Lupo.....Monte Blue
Manuel Lopez.....Paul Weigel
Rosa Lopez.....Marie Van Tassel

Directed by Frank Reicher.

The Story: Nita is living with Manuel Lopez and his wife, Rosa, low Mexicans. Manuel sends her for beer, and in the saloon Nita is accosted by Pedro Lupo, a prepossessing young Mexican and the son of Ramon Lupo, a lawyer. She repulses him and rushes away. Some days later she is again approached by Pedro and is struggling in his arms when assistance comes in the person of Bob Armstrong, who on account of insubordination to his father has been sent West to make good. Pedro learns that Nita is really the daughter of Mrs. Clara Hawkins, the wealthy ranch owner, with whom Bob is stopping. In her youth Mrs. Hawkins eloped and when her child was born it was stolen. Bob rescues Nita from the room in which she is placed upon her refusal to marry Pedro. The Mexicans, bent on revenge, capture him and tell the sheriff that he compromised Nita. The sheriff compels Bob and Nita to marry, and after the ceremony Bob places his bride in a convent, from which she subsequently escapes and obtains work on the Hawkins ranch disguised as a boy. When her identity is discovered and she is discharged, the better nature of Ramon Lupo asserts itself and he confesses that Nita is Mrs. Hawkins' daughter. A happy reunion follows.

Feature Viola Dana as Nita and Casson Ferguson as Bob Armstrong.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Going West to "Make Good" Rich Youth Brings Back to His Eastern Home a Bride of Surprising Ancestry.
Adventurous Excitement Provides Thrills During Progress of Impelling Love Story.
Mexican Bandits Make Ranch Life An Era of Excitement for Eastern Youth.
Thrilling Scenes and Swift Sensations in Photoplot of Great Interest.
Viola Dana, Star of Latest Metro, Has Best Role of Her Career.
Brigands and Bandits Foiled in Their Purpose of Gritty "Tenderfoot."

Stunt Suggestions: Work your newspaper and throwaway advertising along the line that "The Only Road" on (playing date) leads to (house name). You might get permission to post placards at street intersections reading "Detour to The Only Road at (house and date)." Pattern these after the usual automobile signs. If you can get a large six shooter of an old pattern, display this with a card reading "Viola Dana in 'The Only Road' shot the rope from her sweetheart's neck with a gun like this and nursed a lame wrist for several days. See the play at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three and six-sheets. Press sheet. Ten-minute novel for newspapers. Lobby sheet. Slides. Heralds. Cuts. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. Filler sheet.

"MADAME SPHINX"

Triangle Presents Alma Rubens in an Original Story by Raymond L. Shrock, Telling the Luck of a Girl Detective Who Found a Murderer and a Husband.

Cast.

Celeste.....Alma Rubens
Andre Du Bois.....Wallace MacDonald
Raoul Laverne.....Gene Burr
Henri Du Bois.....Frank Macquarrie
Guissert.....William Dyer
Dessin.....Dick Rosson
Lys.....Betty Pearce
Chambre.....Wilbur Higby
Beauchard.....Arthur Millett
Louis.....John Lince

Directed by Thomas N. Heffron.

The Story: The obstinacy of Andre Du Bois causes his father, Henri, to disinherit him, and to make Celeste, his ward, the sole heir to his fortune. Henri is murdered, and Celeste, finding a cuff-button near the scene of the crime on which a sphinx has been carved, retains it, and decides to do a little detective work. In a cafe she sees an artist with a tie-pin on which is engraved a sphinx identical in design to the one on the cuff-button. Being under the impression that he is the slayer of Henri Du Bois she sets a trap for him, and at the psychological moment springs it, getting the young man in her power. She turns him over to the police, but learns that her captive is the long missing son of Henri. Andre protests his innocence, and Celeste, continuing her search for the murderer, finally fixes the crime on Raoul LaVerne, whose love she had spurned. Raoul's confession releases Andre, who eventually becomes the betrothed of Celeste.

Feature Alma Rubens as Celeste and Wallace MacDonald as Andre Du Bois.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Clever Girl Unravels Murder Mystery, Finds the Criminal, and Wins Happiness in Requited Love.
Skillful Detective Work Brings Girl Heroine Into Love and Fortune.
Quaint Sleeve Buttons Provide the Missing Link in Murder Mystery's Chain.
Tracing a Murder Mystery Through a Mass of Complications.
Baffling Plot Finds Solution in Convicting Evidence Gathered by Girl.
Baffling Screen Plot Provides Unrelaxing Interest in Skillful Photodrama.

Stunt Suggestions: The story does not lend itself to stunting, but can be attractively presented in press work. Use the lithographs for general display, and take a little extra space for newspaper advertising or put the money into a throwaway headed, "She found a murderer and won a husband."

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Special process art heralds. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Photographs. Slides. Electros and mats. Triangle Magazine. Press sheet.

Released June 9.

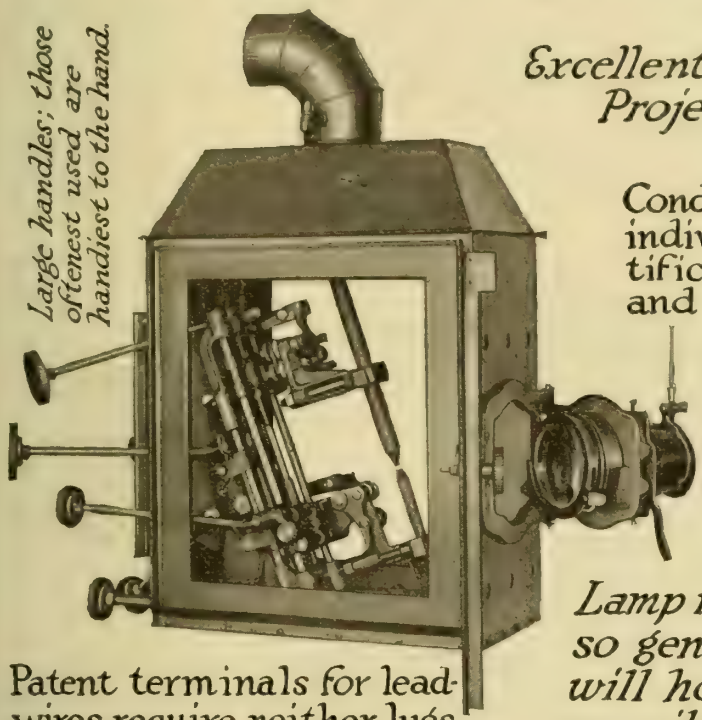
Simplex

Why the Operator is so fond of the Type "S" Simplex Lamphouse



Large handles; those offenest used are handiest to the hand.

Excellent ventilation. Double doors. Projection Room kept cool.

Condensers quickly accessible, and individually held in rings scientifically designed to expand and contract same as the lenses. reducing breakage to a mininum.

Patent terminals for lead-wires require neither lugs nor solder, and yet provide carrying capacity ample for the most extreme needs.

Lamp is built like a machine, and so generously designed that it will hold a larger arc than can possibly be required. Can draw 150 amperes or more.

These are only a few of the reasons. In every detail this outfit is one that makes the Operator dissatisfied with any other. And it can be had only on the Simplex Projector.

The Simplex Mechanism insures projection of unequaled steadiness
The Type "S" insures clear-cut pictures, unequaled in brilliancy
It's a combination that produces profits for you—if you use it

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook

for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Third Edition

The most complete, exhaustive and instructive work ever published on the projection of moving pictures. Contains complete instruction with detail illustrations on all leading makes of American projection machines and practical information on wiring, lenses, carbon settings, screens, theatre equipment, etc., etc. 700 pages and over 300 illustrations, $4.00, postage paid.

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A real help and business builder for exhibitors, theatre managers and owners. It tells all about theatre advertising, type, printing and paper, house programs, lobby displays, newspaper advertising, posters, heralds, etc., etc. 300 pages. $2.00, postage paid. P. S.—Mr. Sargent conducts a weekly department in this same style in the Moving Picture World, which contains many up-to-date business-getting ideas.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

An up-to-date work on the electrical equipment of picture theatres by a practical electrical expert. Contains chapters on electricity, D.C. and A.C. current, resistance and resistance devices, electric service, wiring, lighting, etc. Also contains practical suggestions and all necessary reference tables on wire sizes and capacity, weights and measures, heat units, etc., etc. 260 pages, illustrated. $2.50, postage paid.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Our newest book is one that will fill a long-felt want to those contemplating the building of a theatre. This is a very complete and exhaustive work by an architect with many years of practical experience in theatre and studio construction. Fully illustrated, with considerable data as to requirements, construction cost, building laws, etc. $3.00, postage paid.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Third Edition

Complete instruction in photoplay writing, including study of plots, how to obtain and how to develop; writing the synopsis; studio requirements; script preparation and marketing; technical terms; examples of actual scripts in facsimile typewriting, etc. 400 pages. $3.00, postage paid.

Screencraft

or the Making of a Photoplay

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

A comprehensive and thought-provoking treatment of the subject in a series of chapters, similar to a university course of lectures, by a successful writer of photoplays. Also contains a complete working scenario and several sample pages of manuscript. 150 pages; illustrated. $2.00, postage paid.

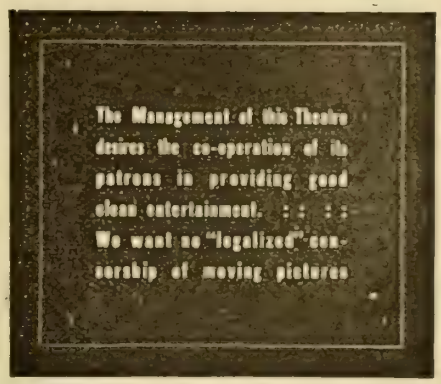
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre
desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good
clean entertainment. : : : :
We want no "legalized" cen-
sorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now!
Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

"The Double Arc Motor-Generator which gives DOUBLE THE AMPERES FOR SINGLE ARC"

This means that the Exhibitor who puts in a HALLBERG gets twice as many amperes at the arc with one lamp burning as does the Exhibitor who puts in any other make motor-generator designed to operate the two arcs in series. This is important because one arc only operates 90% of the time when a strong light on the screen is necessary.

Besides, the HALLBERG costs no more than the less efficient two-arcs-in-series generators.

Look, But Don't Bite

No. 211 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle,

President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

NOW keep your eyes open!

Use keener judgment than you ever used in all your life to avoid making a calamitous blunder in your booking.

Frantic efforts will soon be made—if they have not already been made—to tie you up as tight as a drum with such a big program of features that you will not have room to book anything else. Alluring bait will be dangled before your eyes. Look at it, if you like. Smell it a bit. But be careful about biting it.

If you like certain stars and feel that they will make money for you, book them—but book them alone. Don't let anyone use certain stars as a club to hammer you into booking other so-called "stars" that you don't want.

For example, if you like Dorothy Phillips, book Dorothy Phillips pictures. If you like Mary MacLaren, book Mary MacLaren pictures. That's the Universal plan, and it is based on nothing but the merit of the pictures. If you want Douglas Fairbanks pictures, book them, but retain the right to book them WITHOUT having to take other pictures at the same time.

Don't let ANYONE induce you to take one, two, three, four, five or six pictures that you DON'T want in order to get an occasional picture that you DO want. It is the rankest kind of booking folly and it leads to disaster.

Any exhibitor with half an eye has been able to see the lightning-like changes the business has undergone in the past few weeks. Right now the big picture is the thing. The program feature that used to be a real feature is now merely a filler. The overpaid star used to pack the house, but now he packs nothing but great gobs of weekly salary in his own panties. The exhibitor who kept himself free to book the big specials is now COINING MONEY. The exhibitor who booked up a lot of stuff ON PROMISES is not.

You never were in a better position to pick and choose. The same overproduction that makes conditions bad for producers makes them glorious for you. You don't have to book anything you don't want, and there isn't any organization or group of organizations strong enough to make you book pictures that you don't want in order to get pictures that you do want.

Don't tie yourself up in a booking knot. Keep free and clear. When the bait is shoved at you, simply look, but don't bite.

Mary MacLaren

Do you know that the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Current Events and Screen Magazine constitute as big drawing cards each week as your features? Do you realize that millions of American people are more eager to see these news weeklies than they are to see your costly feature photo plays? Do you realize that you can cash in on the huge Nation wide demand for news in pictures of "Our Boys" at home, abroad, on the firing line, in the trenches, and everywhere? Do you realize that even one third of the amount of advertising you spend on your features, if spent on these news weeklies, would pay you triple the amount of actual cash profits?

We have proven it by actual test made in theatres in different parts of the country. Exhibitors who have taken our tip and who have boosted these news weeklies with advertising, using even only a fraction of the money spent each week on features, have, for the amount invested in the weeklies, made more actual profits than they believed possible. We have proven to Exhibitors that these news weeklies are tremendous drawing cards BECAUSE THE PEOPLE WANT THEM.

Try it yourself in your House. Book and Boost these three Universal Weeklies. Keep it up week after week. Establish the fact that YOU have the fascinating Universal News Weeklies in YOUR house every week with all the latest and best news of the war in pictures. The results will surprise you. TRIANGLE

DAMMING THE CURRENT

ONE of the impossible things in nature is to permanently dam a running body of water.

ALL the engineers in the world with all the forces at their command could not stop the flow of the Mississippi River.

NEITHER can progress in the motion picture business be checked.

TRIANGLE saw that the fabulous prices being paid to large numbers of so-called motion picture stars could never be sustained because the enormously swollen rentals of films could not be successfully met by exhibitors.

THESE outrageous rentals acted like a dam to the stream of profits which motion picture exhibitors should have been, but were not making.

THE waters of opposition rose higher and higher. The pressure on the dam became terrific.

TRIANGLE got to the dam and split it wide open. At first the crack only permitted a small volume of water to flow through. But the Triangle policy of higher profits for exhibitors gradually widened the opening.

BUSINESS began to pour into Triangle. The stream of profits for exhibitors began to run through in an ever widening channel.

TRIANGLE tore aside that part of the dam given over to "secret agreements and secret diplomacy." The Triangle policy was a fair and square one, open and above-board and based on the principle of making the exhibitor a success.

ANOTHER huge hole in the dam.

ENORMOUS success has crowned the efforts of Triangle and Triangle exhibitors as a whole.

SO if anybody is damming your business with unreasonable rentals, poor service, or unfair business methods just turn your business into the Triangle channel and watch that dam disappear.

PERSHING'S CRUSADERS

First U. S. Official War Feature

The United States is at war with Germany. Its preparations are stupendous, its achievements great.

All Americans want full and accurate information concerning these activities. More important, the motive and purpose of this conflict should be better understood by all the people of this country.

The Government will use motion pictures to convey this information. These films will be shown in theatres everywhere from the metropolitan city to the rural village. They will be released regularly in various forms, from news service to special features. The first of these is showing not only General Pershing and our boys at the Front, but telling graphically how Uncle Sam is feeding, clothing and transporting these sons of America.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS"

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" has already played some of the largest cities of the United States with unusual success. At Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee and at other points the public has registered at the box office its intention to see this film.

What the Newspapers say:

New York Times: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' is far and away the best compilation of war pictures exhibited here since the beginning of the European struggle."

Washington Herald: "It is a picture that makes the cheeks tingle with pride, and the graphic portrayal of America's coming might is a thing that tightens the throat."

St. Louis Dispatch: "The pictures are . . . extremely thrilling in the realism with which they show what it means to be a soldier in the world's greatest war."

Cleveland Press: "Scenes of staggering immensity."

Chicago Post: "There is a break in the voice and a sob in the throat when we mention 'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS'; there is so much that should be said and so little that can be said adequately."

The Milwaukee Wisconsin: "'PERSHING'S CRUSADERS' registers enough facts to have done credit to the United States if three years instead of one had been consumed."

Boston Transcript: "Applause was thunderous."

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" was taken by the U. S. Signal Corps and Navy Photographers and the French General Staff

The Screen helps to win the War

That the exhibitors of America will take the same pride in presenting to the American People that we do in having been granted the privilege of distributing it, we are confident.

PERSHING'S CRUSADERS

This will be the most important aid the screen has been privileged to give in the Nation's work of winning the war.

In these times of strife people will welcome this beautiful drama of human kindness

At the Play-houses.

Gerard's.

MOTION PICTURES AS GRAPHIC AS LIFE ITSELF.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

THE war is so big that it makes big events out of every phase of life. The little things—little minds, little people—are no longer permitted to survive. Life, life glorious and abundant, springs up in every country where the shrouded form of death is stalking.

Even motion pictures, youngest of the arts, and up to a few years ago the most frivolous, have turned toward seriousness and a genuine attempt at a criticism of life. They are no longer the mere amusement of the many, but the necessity of all, for their appeal has become the universal in its breadth and scope.

There is purpose in many of the motion pictures of today, and that purpose is nothing less than a vivid and living interpretation of the tremendous cataclysm that is rocking the world. We had "Hearts of the World," we had "The Beast of Berlin," with numerous minor photoplays of similar import, and now we have, at Clune's Auditorium, Ambassador James W. Gerard's picturization of "My Four Years in Germany," one of the most marvelous of them all—the peer, indeed, of the almost peerless "Hearts of the World"—though, of course, it is not a motion-picture play in the usual sense.

William Nigh directed "My Four Years in Germany." I take off my hat to William Nigh. He is a man of genius. His work in the production of the pictures and in the choice of actors to portray famous —and infamous—men living today is like astonishing magic. Looking at them, we are almost forced to exclaim: "How did he do it—how did he get the ridiculous Kaiser and all his ridiculous retinue—the unspeakable Crown Prince, Von Hindenburg, Von Jagow, Von Tirpitz, Von Falkenhayn, Zimmerman—how did he get them to pose for the pictures, to strut through their various roles in the farce?"

Of course, he didn't get them, but he found men so like them that they look like peas in the same pod. The man who can do that, with such an unerring instinct for outward resemblances, and can then compel his actors to play in character, is unique in genius. That William Nigh is also an actor himself, and a superbly good one, is evidenced by his work in the role of the idealist Socialist who was so terribly misled to his own doom.

I regretted that I went to yesterday's matinee' performance of "My Four Years in Germany." I should have been at Clune's Auditorium in the evening, when the house was packed, so that I might have let myself go with the crowd—to hiss, to execrate, to shout, to huzza, with all my loyal Americans As it is, I did start to jump to my feet and wave my arms several times, the tingle of Americanism grew so strong within me as I watched the unfoldment of German duplicity, intrigue, cruelty, and, above all, German childish—or perhaps idiotic?—credulity

The fatuous stupidity of the Kaiser and all the Kaiser's men is beyond belief. Belgium would submit! England would never fight! America would never interfere! world is our oyster! It is to laugh—and, believe me, the audience who watched the amazing antics of the autocrats at Berlin laughed long and loud, as if they had been at a circus that boasted a dozen clowns. In truth, it was a circus for every humorous American, because the dozen German clowns in the big ring hadn't an ounce of humor between 'em.

It is whispered that Mr. Gerard himself played in a few scenes. Halbert Brown must be his double, for we can't tell, for the life of us, where Gerard ends and Brown begins. We commiserate Earl Schenck for looking so much like the Crown Prince, but we congratulate him for playing that unspeakable princeling with such consummate artistic intelligence. And so it runs through the whole list of supermen "made in Germany"—save the mark as a souvenir, but don't use it—they are imitated by the actors so cleverly that they seem genuine articles, though German.

"My Four Years in Germany" is the motion picture of the hour, of the century. It is momentous history with almost the power and grip of life itself. It will be treasured in our archives. It will mold millions of Americans into heroic stature, Americans with indomitable courage, and with a passionate love for truth and justice.

Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan

Like the Fighting Mast Is Built for Strength

The hardest thing to destroy on a battleship is the fighting mast, because the steel strands of its framework are so interwoven that every strand braces every other strand.

By uniting exhibitor and producer in a framework of mutual interests, the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan has created a business structure equaling in strength and durability, the fighting masts of the American greyhounds.

Like the fighting mast, each factor of the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan, contributes to the well being of every other, to the end that the investments of all are protected and perpetuated.

WHAT NEW YORK CRITICS SAY:

IMES:
"Crowd gets thrill in 'Stolen Orders.' It provides a suc-ssion of thrills. Stirring scenes."

ERALD:
"'Stolen Orders' is filled with action. Such was the terest in the picture that the playhouse was crowded to pacity, notwithstanding the heat. 'Stolen Orders' on the reen is twice as exciting as on the stage."

RIBUNE:
"It is seldom indeed that one finds a picture so entirely tisfactory in every detail. The story is interesting from e first foot of film, and never for one instant is interest llowed to flag. It is all very exciting."

LOBE:
"Some new thrills are given the people in 'Stolen Orders.' is an interesting and thrilling production."

VENING SUN:
"A masterpiece. The action is continuous throughout the icture. The picture's most thrilling moments centre about Zeppelin in midair. The illusion is perfect."

IORNING SUN:
"Thrilling."

VENING TELEGRAM:
"Exciting Thrills."

MORNING WORLD:
"It should have no difficulty in capturing popular approval with its thrilling story and exciting situations, all of which are very well suited to the needs of the movies."

TELEGRAPH:
"Decidedly entertaining, besides being good propaganda."

EVENING MAIL:
"Goes over the top successfully. A large audience fanned and perspired for two hours without one spectator leaving the auditorium. At the end of the picture there was a genuine and generous tribute. If it receives the support it deserves it will be running for a long, long time."

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE:
"'Stolen Orders' is full of excitement. The picture is a better show than the speaking version. A thrilling tale of the American navy and German spies."

P. S. Harrison in MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
"This is a good production. It is the kind that will offer your patrons entertainment worth their money. The story is very interesting. It is a picture that will appeal to all classes."

VARIETY:
"A corking, suspensive melodrama dear to the hearts of the picture patrons. A series of hair-raising episodes that hold one grippingly."

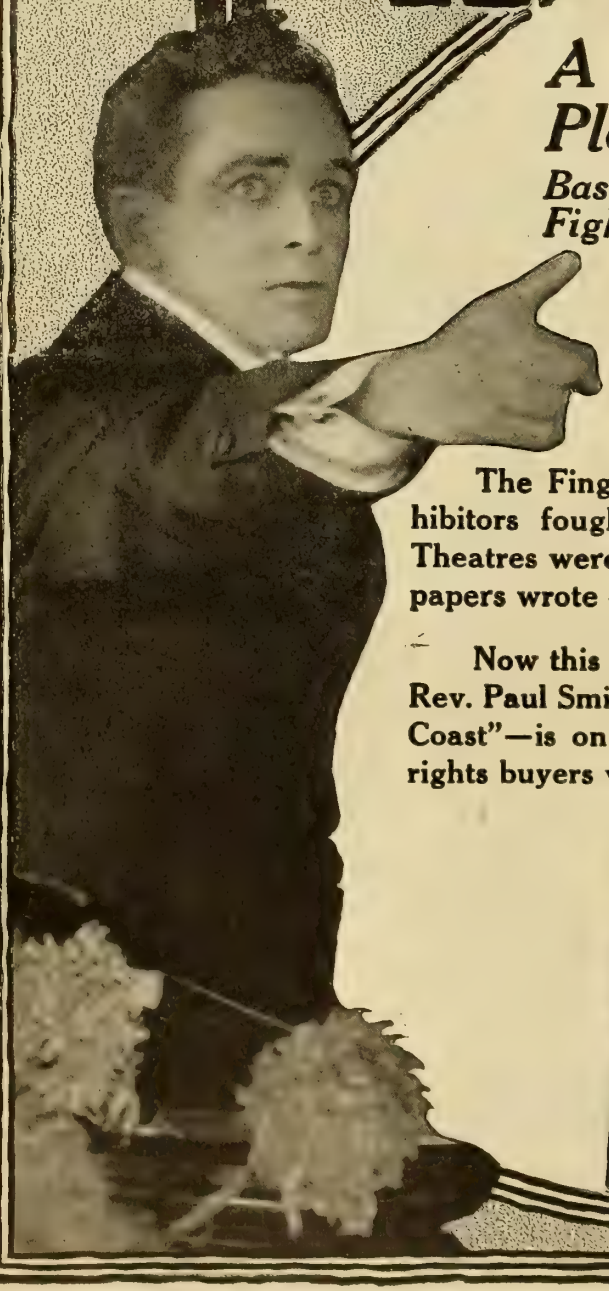
The FINGER

A Tense, Dramatic Plea to Parenthood

Based on Rev. Smith's Successful Fight Against the Vicious Barbary Coast



This is the first announcement to buyers. There have been no secret deals with syndicates or individuals. Choice territories everywhere are open.

The Finger of Justice is the picture pacific coast exhibitors fought to get. Successful ones coined money. Theatres were jammed. Crowds were turned away. Newspapers wrote columns and columns and columns.

Now this sensational morality drama—the actual story of Rev. Paul Smith's fight that smashed the notorious "Barbary Coast"—is on the open market. Ready now for you state rights buyers who know a triumph when you see one.

State Rights Buyers

of JUSTICE

featuring the celebrated star
Crane Wilbur

Quick action wins this money making picture. Buyers will receive consideration strictly in the order their applications are received.

Remember—this is the picture of the fight that drove vice from San Francisco. Shows vivid views of life on the "Barbary Coast"—the workings of the vicious "system" that took its toll, first in virtue, then in life. Portrays conditions that exist, or can exist, in every sizable city.

Newspapers—civic bodies—clergy—all are one in endorsement of this picture.

WIRE! Don't Wait To Write!

The Finger of Justice presents a sensational opportunity to you who can clinch territorial rights. Delay means sure loss. Get your application in immediately.

If you wait to write, you are taking chances. First application from each territory receives first consideration. WIRE!

Facts and Comments

JUNE 14 is "Flag Day," that date being the 141st birthday of Old Glory. Every exhibitor should take this opportunity to impress upon his audience the sacred nature of the Stars and Stripes and what its significance is to the world at this time. Born amid a struggle for freedom from oppression it has ever been the emblem of Equality of Man, liberty for the individual and righteousness among nations. Now it is leading armed hosts in the great battle for the Democracy of the World. When, by the grace of Almighty God, peace shall finally prevail, the principles for which it stands shall fill the hearts and actuate the minds of all Mankind. Let us, then, make the day a day of exaltation.

* * *

THIS issue of the Moving Picture World prints letters from men high in the councils of the Nation on the subject of the essentiality of motion pictures, should leave no doubt in our minds as to where this industry of ours stands in the great scheme of war. We believe that the utterances of these high officials reflect the true sentiment and intentions of those who have been chosen to guide our Nation through the great emergency which we now face. While it has been the desire of all men in the trade to do their utmost to aid in the conduct of the war, it is not possible for us to do more. Let us prove that we appreciate the confidence which is reposed in us.

WE would suggest to our esteemed contemporaries that they can serve the interests of the trade best by dropping the bone of controversy as regards Major Funkhouser, once Chicago censor. The Major has been relieved of his duties as censor and the work is being conducted by others, and that's an end to it. Nothing will serve better the desire of a certain coterie to have him restored to his old job than this continued nagging that some trade papers are indulging in. Suppose we drop it?

* * *

ONCE more the question of taxation is before the country. Beginning June 6 a Congressional committee began its work of securing data from the various industries in an effort to learn how the additional tax could be laid to the least discomfort. More money must be raised and none can expect to escape the inevitable and very necessary increase. The only question to be decided is how it shall be imposed. It is understood that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has made arrangements to be adequately represented before the Congressional committee. Just what has been decided to recommend we have not been informed; nevertheless we feel constrained to venture our opinion on the subject, which is this: Any tax that may be placed upon the industry must, finally, be paid by the public in increased prices of admission. This will be true even though the levy be directed against film footage or profits of manufacturers or distributors. This being the case, why is it not better to place the tax directly on admissions and have done with it. This method is better because it is simpler; it will not affect in any particular the schedules of prices for service or the cost of production; it will be easier to obtain because it will be collecting a small sum from many people. We know, when we advance this method, that our readers who are the exhibitors will feel that we should not advocate placing the burden of taxation upon them, but we would remind them that, no matter where it may be originally placed, they will have to pay it eventually, so why not pay in the first place. Still, they should remember that it is not a case of paying, but only of collecting—it is the public that pays. Following this theory we suggest that a fair and equal pro rata tax on admissions, including all theaters and places of amusement, will be paid by the patrons thereof for the purpose of winning the war without complaint. Think this over.

Little Christopher Discovers the Show Business

By Edward Weitzel.

What Tradition Teaches.

HISTORY tells us that Christopher Columbus discovered America in 1492. Little Christopher discovered the show business in 1918. The records also make it clear that hundreds of years before the ships of the Italian adventurer sighted the western world the show business was known to the ancients and has kept pace with the march of civilization down to the present day. Recognized as a specialized branch of commercial activity, the man who undertook to exchange his particular brand of amusement for the coins of his own particular public has always been forced to use his best wits in mastering his business.

There never was and never will be any other road to success. No one else can run his show business for him. He must be a natural born showman to begin with and must develop his gift by every means in his power.

Showmanship and the Screen.

The successful men in all branches of the moving picture business today are showmen.

Either by instinct or training they started on the right track and have learned by practical experience how to satisfy the wants of the public to which they cater. The wide point of difference between their occupation and that of the ordinary business man, whether engaged in the manufacture of pictures or their exhibition, is that every photoplay is a separate proposition, and requires its own special touches of showmanship in the making and also in the advertising on the part of both the maker and the exhibitor.

Every detail of running a picture theater comes under the head of showmanship, and the real showman buys the best product for the needs of his theater and proceeds to market it as his own skill and experience dictates.

This condition existed long before the editors of certain trade papers learned there was such a word in the amusement world as showmanship and announced their discovery with a flourish of trumpets worthy the achievement of Columbus himself.

These little Christophers are now so pleased with themselves that they will talk of nothing but the wonders of their new discovery.

It is, of course, quite within their province to publish every useful hint for the exploiting of pictures they can devise or annex. Some one may benefit by it; but there are men in all branches of the industry who had a thorough training in showmanship before any of the trade papers recognized its importance, and who must regard the attitude of these complacent Columbuses with the amused tolerance granted a child with a new toy.

A Primer on Showmanship.

Show business is the trade name for every form of amusement enterprise.

Showmanship is the art of making money out of the show business.

Every detail of manufacturing and exhibiting the moving picture comes under the head of showmanship.

Every moving picture presents its individual problems to the author, the director, the producer, the advertising staff of the producer and of the exhibitor.

Highly developed natural ability, assisted by brains, education and untiring effort, are absolutely essential to success in any and all departments.

Time was when a certain element interested in the screen resented the entrance of showmen who had received their training in the older amusement field—the stage. That day has passed.

Time was when money could be made out of the moving picture by producers and exhibitors who were not showmen. That day also has passed.

Showmanship is not the art of deceiving the publice, but of gaining its confidence. P. T. Barnum was a great showman, and made a fortune out of his circus because he had what his posters called for—the best show on the road.

Showmanship enables the manager of a play or the maker of a moving picture to turn out an attraction that will please the public and roll up big profits, although the critics and reviewers damn it most cordially.

Showmanship built the beautifully designed motion picture houses all over the world and dictated the policy of giving the spectator more than his money's worth in excellent amusement among refined surroundings.

The above primer is not for the enlightenment of the well informed exhibitor.

It is for Little Christopher and his kind.

Interesting Facts About a Showman.

Your true showman is among the most wideawake individuals alive.

He is capable of doing his own thinking.

Give him the facts and he'll work out his own deductions.

His knowledge is 50 per cent. tradition and 50 per cent. initiative.

He knows that the moment he tries some advertising scheme just because the other fellow used it he is slipping back.

He does not book pictures to please himself—or his wife's mother.

He does not bother his head about a few technical errors of lighting or some minor slip of direction provided the human interest of the story is so strong that the spectator fails to notice the defects.

He does not rely solely upon the opinion of the talkative patron, who stops every time he leaves the theater and tells how much he likes or dislikes the picture he has just seen.

Neither does he make it his business to find out the sort of picture his patrons enjoy the most and then book this one class all the time.

He believes in constructive booking as well as in constructive criticism.

Business and the Box Office

By Epes W. Sargent.

TOO many managers appear to be considering their box office slips as units. A certain film production takes in a certain amount of money, the profit or loss therefrom in so many dollars and cents. This is beautifully simple, but the real proposition is far more complex. Often the film showing an apparent profit may entail a loss, and a seemingly losing film may be the cause of an increase in business attributed to another film.

Let it be supposed, for instance, that the manager is over-persuaded by some independent film salesman to put in a sensational subject. Perhaps he may be shown other box office statements to prove that the film has made money elsewhere. He shows the subject and the box office report records an additional hundred dollars on the day. The next day he plays a program offering and takes a loss of twenty dollars. The natural inference is that the sensational picture made a hundred and the other lost twenty. But as a matter of fact the sensational picture is directly to be charged with the loss of the twenty dollars the following day. It made a hundred dollars on the day, but it brought to the house only a percentage of the regular patronage. The rest was supplied by the sensation seekers, and the established clientele stayed away not only on the day of showing, but perhaps for many days thereafter. In reality the objectionable film may have cost the management five hundred dollars instead of making a profit of one hundred. More than that, the films which follow and which show varying losses may really show a profit in the long run in that they restore the confidence of the regular patrons and bring this business back.

It is perhaps only natural for the manager to argue that what is wanted is sensation. He took a profit on that and lost it on clean films. He is tempted to book in other odorous productions, and presently his business is shot to pieces because he cannot keep on increasing the sensation. He argues that people are tired of film, though in reality it is merely that he cannot hold his sensation-seekers and cannot draw the more respectable and more lasting patronage back.

To correctly read the box office statement the statements for the week preceding and the month following must be read as well. It is only by reading in relation to other days that the true figures are arrived at. Even a special feature wholly unobjectionable may react on the box office statements for a week following, and this loss must be charged against the feature and subtracted from the apparent profit on the day if proper judgment is to be formed. This is not an argument against the so-called super-features, but merely a plea that the regular subjects shall not be blamed for the falling business which generally follows. It is probable that the net gain will still show a profit, but in booking films do not be guided by the box office statement for the day, but charge against that the lesser business that will follow, and then figure about how much a special will really bring into the house. Specials are necessary and even valuable in building eventual business, but do not credit them with profits really obtained at the expense of the average product.

It may be figured even more closely. If you sell a film for twenty-five cents to a patron who usually takes in two fifteen-cent shows, you have lost five cents instead of gaining a quarter. Look at it in that light.

Exporters Should Organize

AN attempt is being made to organize motion picture exporters, a meeting for that purpose having been held at the Hotel Astor on June 6. The effort should succeed because there is great need for such an organization. Through the abnormal conditions caused by the war the world trade in motion pictures has become centered in New York instead of London. Insofar as the product of the United States is concerned this status should be maintained always. In the past transportation facilities have not favored American exporters, but we shall have a merchant marine after the war, plying to every port in the world, and it will be up to American manufacturers to sustain it. Consequently the motion picture trade must prepare to deliver its export business to American bottoms when that time comes. This cannot be accomplished if nothing is done between now and the time when peace shall be declared.

Tourneur Pays Respect to Star System

Producer Draws Contrast Between It and the Plan of Independent Selection to Advantage of Latter.

MAURICE TOURNEUR, who has just launched his own producing organization, is a firm believer in the big opportunities now offered the independent film maker.

"The star system of today is fast proving its fallacy," declares Mr. Tourneur. "Consider the problem of the producer with a chain of stars. He must manufacture films regularly, using these stars at systematic intervals, in order to succeed. It is natural that the stars are alloted certain roles to which they have shown themselves fitted. From two and three to twenty stars must be fitted, and there is no time to study a player's possibilities.

"Thus these stars come to get stereotyped stories, providing them with essentially the same characters. This is dangerous from many angles. Except in rare instances film fans tend to lose interest in stars who keep on playing upon the same string. Screen patrons come to be familiar with the stories and they know just what is likely to happen in their working out, so that all novelty is gone. All this spells the ultimate eclipse of the star in question.

"Today the star has no substantial hold upon his or her following. A series of three bad pictures can send a star sliding downward rapidly, while one or two unusual vehicles will pull a star back into popularity. This has been demonstrated a dozen times this year. It all goes to show the insecurity—steadily growing—of the star system.

"Don't think that the stars do not realize all this themselves! Note how they change leading men and leading women with each production, hoping to gain some novelty in this fashion.

"The independent producer, on the other hand, can afford to select the star to fit his photodrama or to produce his film play as he feels it should be produced. He can put time, undivided attention and care into his efforts as against the machine-made productions of the star system."

Mr. Tourneur, in speaking of the steadily advancing prominence of the director, says: "The charge is made that to substitute the prominence of the director in place of the player is but to shift stars, and is therefore no cure for the star system evil. This is obviously not true. The director is the man who paints the dramatic picture. Give him a bigger canvas and recognition and he will do bigger things; but make him paint around the limitations of a certain player and you curb him, stunt his growth and prevent his development.

"Let us not forget that the director and the scenario writer must be the big factors of the photoplay's future."

Mr. Tourneur is now completing his first independent production, "Sporting Life," adapted from the famous Drury Lane melodrama.

Wide Interest in Allen's Program Shift

Ben Cronk Declares There Are Distinct Advantages to Downtown House in Starting Week on Saturday.

UNUSUALLY wide interest has been aroused in Canada over the adoption by the Allen theater, Toronto's new downtown theater, of the policy to start its weekly programs on Saturdays instead of Mondays. Belief in the advantages of the arrangement is expressed strongly by Ben Cronk, of the Allen theater interests. According to Mr. Cronk these advantages consist of increased advertising for a new picture, better Monday business, a plan that is entirely different from that of any other theater; greater prominence for reviews in the newspapers, and a general lead of one day over all other theaters.

Mr. Cronk declares that the difference in business and otherwise during the first week or two after the new policy was put into effect immediately justified the change in system. He secured good reports in the Monday newspapers and the Monday business proved to be better than usual. A great many people saw the new pictures on Saturday, of course, and these people talked about the pictures on Sunday. This word of mouth publicity was supplemented by large advertisements in the Saturday and Sunday editions of the papers; the reviews in Monday's papers carried large headlines because there were no other theater reports.

Motion Pictures Are Essential to Victory

McAdoo, Hoover, Creel and Garfield Give Authoritative Expression to Their Belief That the Screen Serves a Necessary Purpose

DESPITE the fact that in every other belligerent country theatricals in general and moving pictures in particular have not been disturbed save for necessary control and taxation, there have been persistent rumors that the Government would, sooner or later, decide that the screen in America is not essential to victory and that, ultimately, picture theatres would be closed and the production of films would be curtailed, if not entirely prohibited. These reports have prevailed despite the high praise and appreciation President Wilson has publicly rendered to the good work already done, not alone in direct support of the war, but in spreading the gospel of Liberty in patriotic films as well as in inestimably valuable aid that has been given by the motion picture industry in advancing three Liberty Loans, the Red Cross and Knights of Columbus Drive and promoting the sale of Thrift and War Savings Stamps.

Charles Hart, director division of films, Committee on Public Information, undertook recently to get a direct expression of opinion from George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information; and Mr. Creel, in turn, sought opinions from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo; Herbert Hoover, director of food administration, and Dr. Harry A. Garfield, director of fuel administration, bearing upon the usefulness of films as a war essential.

Copies of these opinions, as expressed in letters to Mr. Hart and Mr. Creel, should bring assurance to everybody concerned in the industry that there will be no disturbance of the present situation during the war.

June 7, 1918.

Mr. Charles Hart,
Director Division of Films,
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Hart: This is an acknowledgment of your letter, calling my attention to the growth of a movement against the continuance of the motion picture theaters on the theory that it is non-essential. As you know, my own views are not only definite, but a matter of record.

I believe in the motion picture just as I believe in the press, and in my work it plays just as powerful a part in the production and stimulation of an aroused and enlightened war sentiment. The motion picture industry as a whole has put itself squarely behind the Government and at the disposal of the Government, and I cannot speak too highly of the importance and effectiveness of its services.

Because I do not wish to speak out of my own experience entirely, or in any manner to run counter to the policies of other Governmental divisions, I took the whole matter up at once with Secretary McAdoo, Dr. Garfield, and Mr. Hoover, and I inclose you copies of their letters.

Believe me, very sincerely,

GEORGE CREEL, Chairman.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 25, 1918.

My dear Mr. Creel: I have your letter of the 23d of May, informing me that a movement is sweeping over the country to close moving picture theaters on the ground that they are non-essential.

I am amazed that such a movement should gain any headway. While there have undoubtedly been many harmful moving pictures displayed in the past, and while it is probable that some of this kind of pictures are still being displayed, I consider the influence of moving pictures, particularly during the war, a beneficial one. The people of the country who are working at high pressure to win the war need some form of recreation, and to a vast number of our people moving pictures are the only form of recreation within their means.

The majority of the moving picture theaters of the country have placed themselves unreservedly at the disposal of the Government for the furtherance of Liberty Loans, War Savings, and other Government movements, and deserve the thanks of the country for their patriotic attitude. I should look upon it as a misfortune if moving pictures or other clean forms of amusement in America should be abolished.

Sincerely yours,
W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, 25 May, 1918.

George Creel, Esq., Chairman
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Creel: I would say that at the present moment there is no necessity to close the moving pictures as non-essentials. To me, non-essentials are all relative to our necessities. I believe it is essential to get all of the labor in the United States who have mechanical or agricultural training back into these callings.

This does not at all imply that the moving pictures should be closed down; in fact, they are educational and they have great value from a moral point of view. War does not imply the abolition of recreation—so long as it is not wasteful of national resources.

Long before the movies are closed they should be given ample opportunity to engage women for such of the work as is now carried on by men who can be replaced. That is, all such people as ushers, ticket-selling people and so on, can quite properly be replaced by women. So far as I know, none of the countries at war has found it necessary to go farther than this. Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION.
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1918.

Mr. George Creel, Chairman
Committee on Public Information,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Creel: So far as I have any personal conviction in the matter, I am frank to say that I consider the motion picture, properly controlled, as having distinct educational value, and as well being a legitimate amusement which I see no present need of the Government curtailing.

Yours very truly,
H. A. GARFIELD, United States Fuel Administrator.

EALAND OF DETROIT VISITS TORONTO.

A visitor in Toronto film circles on Memorial Day was Manager Ealand of the Orpheum and Regent theaters, Detroit. Mr. Ealand is a native son of Paris, Ontario, and on a visit to his home he came on to Toronto to inspect local theaters. Comparing notes with local downtown exhibitors, he was surprised to find that pictures which had proved disappointments in Detroit had gone over big in Toronto and vice versa. It was explained that the fact that Canada had been at war for almost four years had probably made a difference in the tastes of the people of Toronto and other Canadian cities.

GERALD GRIFFIN OUT OF HOSPITAL.

Gerald Griffin, the "veteran globe-trotter," has returned to his work at the Metro studio in the preparation of the five-act feature comedy-drama, "Both Members," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Mr. Griffith has been at Misericordia Hospital, New York, for several days, and was even "congratulated on his death," but has emerged feeling better and younger than ever. When his work in the Bushman-Bayne feature is finished, Mr. Griffin will go to his summer camp in Maine, to rest up for another season's activities.

Frank Marion Returns to United States

Representative of Public Information Committee Tells of the Educational Work Accomplished in Spain and Italy in Half Year

FRANK J. MARION of the Kalem Company, who was sent to Spain and Italy last November as special representative of the Committee of Public Information to secure the distribution and exhibition of American motion pictures in those countries, has returned to New York. Mr. Marion arrived at an American port on Saturday, June 1, and immediately joined his family, from whom he had been separated for nearly seven months. The real purpose of his return was his desire to make the acquaintance of a new daughter who arrived during his absence. He was pleased to find the young lady in the best of health, whereupon he proceeded at once to Washington to report to George Creel, chairman of the committee under which direction he is working.

On his way to Washington Mr. Marion stopped over in New York a day and was seen at the offices of the Kalem Company by a representative of the Moving Picture World, to whom he related many interesting incidents of his work abroad. Regarding his official business Mr. Marion spoke in a very guarded manner, as much of the work of the Committee on Public Information is not available for publication, but he was able to say that all Spain was being entertained by motion pictures made in the United States and that the people enjoyed them immensely.

"I had considerable difficulty at first," said Mr. Marion, "in getting my campaign started, but once the ice was broken things moved rapidly. Spaniards like our pictures and the only signs of disapproval came, I am convinced, from German propagandists, who now and again, hiss when the Stars and Stripes are shown.

"My best effort and the one of which I am most proud was in gaining the approval of the Catholic Educators in Spain, who have encouraged the showing of American pictures in many of their schools throughout that country.

"In addition to handling all the American film used in Spain I also had charge of the news service, sending out a certain number of words each day, which made the job a fairly considerable one. One difficulty that I had to overcome was to get the right kind of material in both films and news. Some pictures were being shown commercially in which a character in army or navy uniform portrayed a disreputable part, such as would tend to disgrace the uniform. Because of this we were compelled to advise a strict censorship over pictures intended for foreign use.

"I must say one thing, though, President Wilson is the biggest man in the world with the Spaniards. Every word coming from him is printed in the Spanish press and the people read it with avidity. It is truly remarkable. In fact, wherever I went I found that our Chief Executive was held in reverence and everyone conceded that he was right in his conduct of the affairs of the United States in this war."

Mr. Marion spent some time in Italy, where he went to establish a film and news service similar to that he had built up in Spain, but he said that the task of directing the service for both countries was beyond the capabilities of any one man, and finally confined his efforts to the Spanish service.

It was Mr. Marion's good fortune to get to the front in several sectors of the battle line in France and he related a number of personal experiences and observations. He was also in Paris during the great air raid when some sixty German bombing machines flew over the city. Of the last incident he said:

"I do not expect again in my life to pass through such a terrifying experience as the German raid on Paris. Life in the front line trenches is a Sunday school picnic in comparison. There you are, sitting in the dark, for all lights are extinguished; you can go nowhere, nor do anything—you just sit and wait, the bombs bursting all about you, and not knowing but that the next one may hit the building in which you may be for the time sheltered. It is more like a terrific thunderstorm than anything else I can imagine, with the exception that there is no rain. There is nothing you can do; no way to retaliate, so you just sit still and wait till it is over. In the trenches you know where the shells are coming from and you have some measure of protection; you also know that our side is giving the enemy as good as he sends, but when the bombs fall from the sky all about you in the darkness, there is nothing you can do. I'll take the trenches for mine every time if I have a choice in the matter."

Much that Mr. Marion said of the efforts being made to get motion pictures of military activities in France cannot be printed here, but he insisted that very different methods would have to be adopted before the right kind of pictures could be obtained. He intimated that it had been impossible to have a cameraman at the right spot when big things happened, but that this trouble was now being remedied. Camermen are not plentiful for the work. "The big things may have to be put on back of the lines just as we put them on here," said Mr. Marion. "A story must be written and the picture must be directed by regular directors who know their business, making the cameraman responsible for photography only. Such scenes as marching troops, construction work and artillery operations are already stale and something more substantial must be secured. This kind of material cannot be obtained by cameramen in the front lines."

Mr. Marion spoke enthusiastically of the work being done by the Y. M. C. A. in providing motion picture shows for the soldiers back of the lines. He said that the service was remarkably good and that the soldiers were making the most of the opportunity afforded. All troopships, he said, were fully equipped with machines and pictures and plenty of entertainment was provided for the men going over there. American pictures were the rule, he said.

Just how long he will remain here Mr. Marion was unable to say. He left for Washington Tuesday night to report to the Committee on Public Information and was greatly pleased with the support given his work and the great enthusiasm of George Creel and his associates in pushing every phase of its activities.

F. R. HIRSCH JOINS THE MARINES.

Among the younger film reviewers who meet in the different projection rooms of the metropolitan producers to report on the chances that coming film releases have of making a hit with the public, F. R. Hirsch, of the New York Dramatic Mirror, has become popular with his fellow-newspapermen and with the trade by his gentlemanly personality and pleasing address. On May 1 he celebrated his twenty-first birthday and made a resolution not to wait to be drafted, but to enlist. The branch of the service he chose was the Marines. At his first examination he was not quite acceptable, but the difficulty was not important, and as he was so clearly the kind of young American most wanted in that select branch of the service, the medical officers took interest in him and instructed him to take certain developing exercises. He quickly made such progress that they were glad to enroll him and he has been sworn in and is awaiting a final call to join. Mr. Hirsch will be missed in New York while he is away on duty.

GILSON WILLETS IN NEW YORK.

Gilson Willets, widely known as a novelist, world traveler and scenario writer of the Pathe forces, has returned from Los Angeles, where he has been preparing the story of the new "Hands Up" serial, starring Ruth Roland and George Chesebro, and where he witnessed the filming of the first episodes of this hot weather tonic which Pathe will release in midsummer.

As a scenario writer Mr. Willets has many successes to his credit, among them the first motion picture serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn." He began his literary career at the age of nineteen and at twenty-one published his first book. In search of literary material he has traveled in all parts of the world.

Mr. Willets comes of an old colonial family. His ancestor, Thomas Willets, was first mayor of New York in 1665.

Exhibitors Should Watch Income Tax Returns

Joe Brandt, Back from Long Trip, Brings Interesting Observations on Some Things That Came Under His Eye.

JOE BRANDT, general manager of Universal, returned May 31 from an extended trip around the country, as a result of which he has issued a warning to exhibitors to be more careful in compiling their receipts and disbursements in order that they may avoid trouble when they are called upon by the government to make income tax return.

"I was amazed," said Mr. Brandt, "to find the number of exhibitors who are paying absolutely no attention to their receipts and expenditures. All of them are checking their theater receipts very carefully in order that they may make proper war tax returns. But in doing this they seem to overlook the fact that the government also is in the market for income taxes.

"I don't say this in a spirit of criticism, but rather to keep the exhibitors out of trouble later on. During my trip I visited numerous of them, and when I found a man not keeping the proper books so that at a glance he would know exactly his net income I showed him how to do it. From my superfiicial investigation there must be thousands of exhibitors who will not be in a position to render the proper income return unless they start immediately to put their house in order. They have reached the point where they must understand that a bookkeeper is not a luxury, but is an absolute necessity."

As the exact opposite to the conditions Mr. Brandt found in numerous theaters he cites the case of Mr. Blackwell, an exhibitor of El Dorado, Kan. Mr. Blackwell is a successful exhibitor. Just the appearance of his theater would prove that. His books are in such condition that at the end of every day's performance he can tell the exact amount of his profit and loss, and by carrying the total forward from the first day of the year, he knows just exactly where he stands. By this system, on the night of December 31 next, Mr. Blackwell will be able to make his income returns to the government with the absolute assurance that it is correct in every detail.

Blackwell Has Special Checks Printed.

Mr. Blackwell has carried his efficiency even farther. He has caused his bank to have special checks printed for him in a manner that makes them an absolute receipt for everything that goes with every picture he shows. There are blank spaces on the check for the name of the picture, the exchange number of the feature, the price paid, the poster cost, the advertising cost and the war tax. When one of these checks is returned at Mr. Blackwell's bank with the indorsement of the exchange he has proof conclusive of his payment for everything. The natural result is that he never has a controversy with an exchange over a financial matter.

"Another thing that was impressed upon me," said Mr. Brandt, "is the fact that the day of the big stars seems to be in the eclipse. The result of this change is thaat the big first run houses are booking the big specials and not stars. This means that the day of the big specials is here. Of course it is not safe to make a prediction as to how long this condition will last, but it is a fact that the specials are in the ascendancy and the stars are on the downward path."

During his trip Mr. Brandt went out in the capacity of a roadman. He called on numerous exhibitors throughout Oklahoma and got acquainted with some exhibitors who not only ran picture shows, but owned the local butcher shop, acted as postmaster, justice of the peace, as well as mayors of their municipality. He finished his road experience, assured of the fact that selling a film service at a reasonable price is not quite as easy as selling ice when the thermometer is at 110 degrees fahrenheit.

During his trip Mr. Brandt made several changes. L. H. Coen, in charge of the Minneapolis Metro Exchange, became branch manager of Universal in place of Elmer Pierson, who went with the First National.

Mr. Frisch, formerly with Pathe, was employed to take charge of Jewel Productions released through the Des Moines office.

Mr. Roderick was placed in charge of the Milwaukee Universal Exchange in place of Fred Myers, who resigned on account of ill health.

METRO GETS RIGHTS TO MYRTLE REED NOVEL.

Screen rights to Myrtle Reed's novel, "Flower of the Dusk," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Viola Dana. A five-act feature picture will be made under the direction of John H. Collins, who is also adapting the novel.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Manhattan Local Holds an Active Session

Small Number of Members Decide to Get Busy in Reorganizing and Securing Suitable Quarters.

A SPECIAL meeting of Manhattan Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held in Wurlitzer Hall, New York, on Friday afternoon, June 7, President John Manheimer in the chair. There were fifty members present. Preliminary to the regular order of business a young corporal, who returned from the trenches "Over There" with the fifty soldiers General Pershing sent over here to tell us of what real war is like, addresses the meeting and made a plea for our assistance in the thrift stamp drive to be made on June 28. He was followed by a representative of the Government, who asked the exhibitors to make a special drive on that day to dispose of all the War Savings Stamps they possibly could.

Charles Haring, who is chairman of the Thrift Stamp national committee of the Motion Picture Industry, distributed among those present blanks which he asked all the exhibitors to sign as authorized agents of the Treasury Department and said he would furnish all the signers with any amount of stamps they thought they could dispose of on June 28.

Among the communications read was the resignation of David Weinstock as secretary of Manhattan local. In it he stated he had joined the colors and been called to Camp Merritt, N. J., where he was stationed in the Quartermaster's Department. He expressed regret that he could not keep up his associations with the League and then mentioned that he cherished his last work in connection with the motion picture Red Cross Drive and the collection of $857.12 by personal solicitation at the Park Row theater. In last week's Moving Picture World the amount was erroneously printed as $57.12, which we are glad to correct. Mr. Weinstock's resignation was accepted and the Secretary of the League instructed to write a letter to him expressing the loss of his services to the League and its best wishes for his more valuable service to the Government.

Sydney Cohen brought up the question as to how many delegates New York State was entitled at the National Convention at Boston. Tom Howard, as national secretary, answered it by stating there were seventeen in all, including five general delegates elected at the annual state convention at the Hotel Astor last March. The question of the special meeting of the State League to be held at the Astor on June 14 was broached. There seems to be some doubt as to the legality in calling it for the purpose of electing delegates at large, when this work had been done at the convention in March.

Manheimer Questions Right of Howard to Floor.

At this point the chairman asked Mr. Howard if he were an exhibitor. Howard said he was. Mr. Manheimer differed with him and said no one but an exhibitor was allowed the privilege of the floor and no one but a bona-fide exhibitor would have his permission to debate at meetings of the League while he was president. Things were getting very interesting when some one suggested that such discussion was very much out of place and was not within the province of the meeting. The incident was closed and the regular order of business resumed.

The standee law was brought up and Lee Ochs asked what had been done by the Law and Legislation Committee appointed by the League three or four months ago. Charles O'Reilly, chairman of the committee, said nothing had been done. He added that he believed something could be done if the League were properly organized and with proper cooperation.

Max Ostricher started some action when he declared that he was ashamed of the New York Exhibitors' League. This meeting of only a handful was an evidence of its lack of strength and the interests manifested in its affairs. "The Manhattan Local is without a home and is nil," he said. Its headquarters is on the film broker's curb at 729 Seventh avenue. I want to be proud of my League, where I can invite my friends and not be ashamed."

Sydney Cohen advocated a new body of 100 exhibitors and start an organization of power and influence. Mr. Ostricher said he would give $100 to secure new quarters. "If fifty of us will give the same amount we can get a home right away," he said.

Fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars was pledged. Mr. Ochs advised that he thought before taking new quarters it would be better to reorganize the league.

League Declares for Reorganization.

This suggestion met with general approval, and it was so decided. There seemed to be a sentiment that in addition to reorganization new officers should be elected. Mr. Ochs made a motion to dismiss the old committee on securing headquarters for the league and a new committee appointed. He said the New York League was a disgrace and inferior to all other leagues. His motion was seconded and carried and a committee of ways and means was appointed, with power to act, consisting of Lee Ochs, chairman; Charles OReilly, Charles Steiner, Ike Hartstall, Joe Perlman, Max Ostricher, Sam Brandon, Charles Haring and John Manheimer. This committee will take up question of headquarters and all other business matters of the League.

The question of transportation of films was brought up, and it was stated the Prudential Transportation Company had filed a bond of $1,000 to cover losses, but this would apply only to members of the League in good standing.

The ways and means committee are to deliberate on the several questions discussed every day during the week of June 9, and report their deliberations and actions at a special meeting to be called early in the week of June 16.

St. Paul and Minneapolis Form Locals

Former Starts Off With Hundred Per Cent. Membership—Hays and Hansing Are Presidents.

EXHIBITORS in the Twin Cities have taken up the local exhibitors' organization proposition. On May 23 St. Paul exhibitors (every one of them, too) held a meeting and organized St. Paul Exhibitors' Local No. 1. Theodore L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick theater, was elected president; Oliver A. Rowe, of the Blue Mouse, vice-president; Joseph Friedman, Park theater, secretary, and James Gilosky, of the Alhambra, Gem and Rex, treasurer.

Mr. Gilosky was for three terms president of the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation. The new board of directors is made up of S. P. O'Malley, of the Palace theater; G. R. Simpson, of the Ideal theater, South St. Paul; Henry Breilein, of the Breilein Circuit; Charlie Marks, of the Cozy theater, and E. U. Carter, of the New Garden. The fact that the organization started off with a 100 per cent membership speaks well for the feeling existing among St. Paul exhibitors.

Three days following the organization of the St. Paul local, Minneapolis exhibitors organized Minneapolis Exhibitors' Local No. 2. C. E. Hansing, of the Nokomas theater, was elected president; O. A. Lee, of the Oak Park theater, vice-president; Henry P. Greene, of the Lake theater, secretary, and John R. Martin, of the New Lyndale theater, treasurer. The board of directors consists of W. G. True, of the Princess theater; W. H. Deeth, of the American theater; S. G. Lebedoff, of the Liberty theater; Mike Mitchell, of the Ione theater, and George Granstrom, of the New Franklin theater. Mr. Deeth is president of the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation. Both locals plan holding semi-monthly meetings, and it is expected the Minneapolis local will soon rival St. Paul by showing a 100 per cent. roster.

A local exhibitors' organization will, in all probability, be organized in Duluth shortly. It will be known as the Duluth Local No. 3. All local members are affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest.

Short Shrift for Meddlesome Teachers

California Superintendent Says Picture Theater Is Help to Government and That It's Patriotic to Attend Them.

THE Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Alameda County recently held its monthly gathering at Oakland, Cal., and discussed at length the campaign that was being waged by certain teachers in the public schools against the patronizing of moving picture theaters by school children. It was pointed out by several exhibitors that this campaign had reached a point where the theaters were keenly feeling the loss of patronage and that it was spread over many towns in the vicinity. It was asserted that teachers were making pleas in the schools for the children to refrain from attending moving picture houses during the period of the war on the ground that it would be patriotic for them to save the money spent for amusement and invest it in thrift stamps.

This matter has been taken up with the county superintendent of schools and he has advised exhibitors that he will dismiss any teacher found making talks against moving picture houses. He agreed with the exhibitors who called upon him that it was in reality patriotic for people to attend theaters as much as possible, since the Government was making such an effort to present its activities through the medium of the screen.

At the May meeting of the League an exhibitor told of how he had been approached by members of an organization of women and asked to give publicity to a parade that was being planned. He did so, going to the expense of having slides made, but was rather taken back on viewing the parade to see a large sign carried in a prominent position admonishing people to remain away from moving picture houses during the period of the war. In several east-bay communities Mothers' Clubs are attempting to keep children from theaters, except when pictures approved by them are shown, and these organizations are assisting in the movement in the public schools, alleged to be in the interests of thrift.

A. E. A. MEN WILL BE AT BOSTON.

At lunch, a few days ago, with Alfred Black, Frank Rembusch, Henry Varner and Tom Blumenthal, the matter of reconciliation of the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. of America was broached. From the conversation it appeared that an invitation had already been sent to the A. E. A. to meet in conference at the convention in Boston next month. Mr. Rembusch said he had not officially received any communication from M. P. E. L. to that effect. It transpired that he would be so notified. Mr. Varner said he would attend the exposition if he could possibly make it, just to have a good time and show his interest in the affairs of the industry. Mr. Black said he thought it a duty to the Government for everybody in the industry to attend the exposition.

NEW DATE FOR PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

The convention of Pennsylvania exhibitors which was previously scheduled for June 3 to 5, will be held on June 24 and 25 in Philadelphia and at the same place as formerly announced. Delegates to the Boston convention will be elected.

Canadian Exhibitors Choose an Organizer

To Devote His Time to Forming National Protective Association to Work for Wiser Legislation—None Named for Position As Yet.

THE moving picture exhibitors of Canada are on the road to a national protective organization. The first definite step in this direction was taken at an important conference of theater owners and managers at the Toronto headquarters of the Ontario Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, which was attended by no less than forty-six interested men. The exhibitors were unanimous in their desire for more activity on the part of the Ontario association and for an extension of the association idea. This feeling had developed, it was apparent, because of increased taxation on the part of both federal and privincial governments and the enactment of regulations affecting the film business.

To stimulate the energy of the Ontario association it was decided to employ an organizer. Who the new organizer is to be has not yet been announced officially, but it is probable that whoever is chosen will devote all his time to the movement and will retain fifty per cent. of all the fees he collects for his services. When the Ontario body is thoroughly organized it is proposed to launch a dominion-wide organization, in which case the exhibitors' associations in various cities are to be invited to join in a body. It was decided to base the new membership fee for the Ontario association on the seating capacity of the theaters. The rate will be 7½ cents a seat a year, or approximately half the charge which the Ontario government makes for the annual picture theater license fee. The membership fee for a theater with 500 seats will therefore be $37.50 a year.

The exhibitors present at the conference discussed various matters of urgent importance to the independent theater interests. One exhibitor strenuously opposed the tendency on the part of film exchanges to acquire control of large and small theaters by purchase or lease. It was urged that the independent exhibitors should not patronize exchanges which owned a string of theaters because, it was claimed, they were helping to feed their own opposition. The organization of exhibitors' circuits for the booking of pictures was also urged.

The Ontario association purposes to get busy on various legislative and legal matters, including the subject of the admission of children to theaters. The exhibitors want a little more freedom in this respect. The association also intends to give attention to the methods of taxation by the federal and provincial governments, as well as by municipalities. The first step, however, must be the building up of the Ontario organization, according to President Baillie, who is a Toronto exhibitor. There are more than three hundred exhibitors in Ontario, and an effort is being made to secure the active support of every exhibitor in the province. The new organizer will cover every part of the province in an effort to line up all exhibitors for the association.

PORTLAND EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE FOR WAR HELP.

An association has been formed among Portland exhibitors for an entirely patriotic purpose. At a recent meeting at the Benson hotel, attended by a large number of theater men, the plan was broached to affiliate the local exhibitors with a large exhibitors' organization now being promoted on the coast for the purpose of doing the theater men's "bit" more expeditiously.

Heretofore the Portlanders have worked hand in hand with Liberty Loan campaigners and Red Cross workers to a more or less disadvantage to the cause being promoted as well as to themselves. Under the new plan exhibitors will carry on the patriotic work independent of other organizations to a certain degree at least. E. J. Myrick, manager of the Liberty theater, is chairman of the new organization.

NEW YORK STATE LEAGUE MEETING CALLED.

June 3, 1918.

To All Exhibitors of the State of New York:

Please take notice that a convention will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Friday, June 14, 1918, at 11.30 a. m., for the purpose of electing delegates at large to the national convention to be held at Boston, Mass., July 15 to 20, 1918. Yours Fraternally,

SAMUEL I. BERMAN, Secretary.

Gerard Film Has Dallas by the Ears

Hulsey Puts Over Publicity Stunt That Wakes Up Texas Town and Packs 'Em In for Two Weeks.

EARL H. HULSEY, First National franchise holder for Texas, must be credited with putting over a most novel and effective publicity "stunt" in connection with the recent two weeks' showing of "My Four Years In Germany" at his Hippodrome theater in Dallas.

The Hulsey idea which proved so successful in drawing widespread attention to Ambassador Gerard's screen story was nothing less than an essay-writing contest on the subject "Why We Are at War with Germany," open to all the pupils in the public and private schools of Dallas County. The contest was held under the auspices of the Dallas Daily Times Herald, which carried big news stories on the subject, members of the editorial staff of the paper serving as judges of the manuscripts submitted. The active co-operation of school officials and teachers was also secured, with the result that more than 2,000 children of both sexes became participants in the contest. As a result it overshadowed every other juvenile interest in the community during the seven days of its duration.

Essays were confined to 200 words in length, and each contestant was required to give his or her name, address, age and school grade. Age and grade were important considerations in awarding prizes, the system of marking being such that everybody was given an equal chance.

Copies of President Wilson's fourteen official reasons for America's entry into the war were printed and distributed in all schools by the Times Herald, and in addition children were encouraged to familiarize themselves with Ambassador Gerard's book. The prizes offered were as follows: First prize, $20 in gold; second prize, twelve tickets to "My Four Years in Germany." In addition, 900 honorable mention prizes were distributed to as many contestants in the form of tickets to the Gerard production.

The essay to win highest award was written by Andrew Patton, 15 years old, Bryan High School.

When the awards were made, the line of school children reached from the office of the Times Herald almost around the entire adjacent block. Mr. Hulsey received wholesale congratulations on the success of his enterprise, and the results were also apparent in the record-breaking attendance at the Hippodrome during the run of the Gerard picture. The names of the 2,000 contestants have been retained as a permanent mailing list.

An entire reproduction of the campaign as it was carried on by Mr. Hulsey and the Times Herald is being sent out to other exhibitors booking "My Four Years in Germany" by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

FLAGG TO MAKE SERIES FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Famous Players-Lasky announces the signing of a contract whereby James Montgomery Flagg will provide a series of comedies to be released in the near future under the Paramount trade mark. The theme of the series will be "Sweethearts and Wives," and each release, which will be in two reels, will appear under a distinctive title, the first of which will be "It's Greek to Us," and the second, "Romance in Brass Tacks." There will be sixteen subjects to the series, which will be released on dates which will not conflict with Paramount-Mack Sennett and Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, and which will have a decided advantage over former Flagg comedies in that the humorous side of married life will be depicted.

PICTURE CARNIVAL IN AID OF RED CROSS.

A great display of moving pictures, the appearance of artists of the screen and stage, and of operatic soloists of the first magnitude will mark the big Red Cross carnival to be held at Midland Beach, Staten Island, Friday and Saturday, June 28 and 29.

One of the novel features will be a great picture screen, built like a solid wall, in the water just off the shore of the beach. On this screen will be displayed war pictures and the newest screen plays. The screen, projection apparatus and operators will be contributed by William L. Sherry.

The proceeds of the carnival will be for the benefit of the Red Cross, the entertainments being under the direction of committees of the Staten Island Chapter. In addition to the picture shows and theatrical performances the committee plans to have military and naval displays.

CHANGES IN GENERAL FILM MANAGERS.

Two changes in the management of its branches was reported during the week by General Film Company. L. D. Wolfe, recently connected with the V-L-S-E exchange at Syracuse, has been appointed manager of the General exchange at Buffalo, succeeding F. Flarity, who resigned last week to enter the National Army.

C. D. Hill, acting manager of the Indianapolis exchange, also drafted for the selective army, has been succeeded as acting manager by C. W. McDaniel, who has been transferred to that post from the Chicago General Film exchange, where he has been acting as a traveling representative.

North Carolina Ignores Boston Session

State League Sets Date for Convention That Conflicts With Time Set for National Gathering.

THE naming of July 11, 12 and 13 as the date for the annual convention at Wrightsville Beach of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League by Secretary Varner and President Wells, sets at rest all speculation as to whether or not the Tar Heels intend to be represented again this year at the League's national convention in Boston, as the holding of the North Carolina meeting near the middle of July precludes the possibility of sending delegates to Boston.

While neither Mr. Varner nor Mr. Wells has been approached for a statement as to the present status with relation to the Leagues national organization, it is felt that there would be a slight embarrassment in sending a delegation to Boston in the face of the treatment accorded the Southerners at the last convention, since they have not even received an invitation from the Ochs aggregation to rejoin the League.

The correspondence between the president of the New York State League and General Manager Pettijohn upon the subject of amalgamation cannot be considered except in the light of a personal correspondence, since the New York official was not vested with authority to make official overtures to the American Exhibitors' Association. So far Mr. Ochs has only hinted at an effort to secure an undivided force at Boston through his official convention notice.

Mr. Ochs recently made a trip to North Carolina, where he explained his distribution plan to a group of the Carolina exhibitors. He made a few friends, but included in this number were none of those who were at the Chicago convention, among whom it is still felt that there could be nothing gained by again joining hands with the League as long as Mr. Ochs and his supporters are in control of its destinies. It is felt among certain exhibitors that Mr. Pettijohn exceeded his authority in agreeing to President Cohen's invitation for amalgamation without first submitting the proposition to the directors of the A. E. A., and this view is evidently also held by Frank Rembusch, national secretary, who last week addressed a letter to Secretary Elliott of the N. A. M. P. I. declining to join in the Boston convention.

The Chicago farce of last summer has reacted disagreeably upon the North Carolina League, many exhibitors becoming disgusted with the organization as a whole, and the State League has been inactive to a great extent during the past several months.

The summer convention in July, which will be held at Wrightsville Beach, Wilmington, will be made a special occasion for reviving interest in the League as a state organization to handle independently all matters pertaining to members, without regard to any amalgamation or connection with either the American Exhibitors' Association or the National League. The convention will be purely a business meeting, no social festivities being allowed to interfere with the transaction of business.

Nashville Fights for Sunday Shows

Following Newspaper Straw Vote of 10 to 1 in Favor Tennessean Continues Campaign.

THE fight in Nashville for Sunday moving pictures has narrowed practically to one point—the majority of the people against the churches. The people want seven-day pictures, as forcibly demonstrated in the recent "straw" election held by the Nashville Tennessean and American.

Following the mayor's assertion that he would not allow a picture house to open in Nashville on Sunday "under any circumstances, even if he had to use the entire city police department to enforce the order," the Tennessean and American addressed an open letter to the Nashville city commission. The letter was published three columns wide and running the full length of the editorial page, calling on the commission to take action and amend the statutes of the city to such an extent that Sunday pictures would be permitted as a means of protection to the modern welfare conditions of the city.

The open letter pointed out that various labor unions had adopted resolutions approving Sunday pictures; that the people had voted in the newspaper "straw" election by a majority of 8,237 votes for Sunday pictures and that only 844 voted against the pictures. It was shown that in a certain city statute a phrase existed which points out that it is unlawful for any place of business or amusement to remain open for profit on Sunday. The appeal to the commission asks that this section be so amended as to permit the shows to be run on Sunday without any violation of the law.

"In so suggesting," the letter reads, "we wish to call your honored attention to Section 1072, same page, same volume, laws of Nashville, which reads, 'It shall be unlawful and is hereby declared a misdemeanor to engage in, conduct or permit any agent or employee to engage in or conduct any game, sport or device for profit on Sunday except baseball.' In calling your attention to this section we do so because baseball is made an exception—an exception just as we suggest, and the people want moving pictures to be excepted in Section 1073.

"The United States Government has approved of Sunday moving pictures by allowing the Liberty theaters in all army cantonments and the motion picture houses in the District of Columbia to be open on Sundays. It is evident that the United States Government has felt that this was necessary for the welfare of its soldiers and its citizens, especially in these times of stress, when human nature tends toward morbidness.

"Nashville now has an army of many thousands of men working from early morn to late at night making powder for the Government, helping us to win in this struggle for world democracy. These men deserve some recognition. They should be given an opportunity for clean recreation on Sunday, and nothing offers better recreation than moving pictures."

Taking the question from a standpoint of the church people, there has been strong opposition since the "straw" election. At a meeting of the Pastors' Alliance on Monday morning, June 3, all members of the alliance, embracing various churches of the city, voted solidly against Sunday pictures.

Affiliated Begins Soon, Says Pettijohn

General Counsel Announces First Meeting of National Board of Directors, to Take Place This Month.

RETURNING to New York from an organization trip in the Middle West Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, announces that that organization would start the distribution of pictures within the immediate future.

"We expected it would require six months for organization work," said Mr. Pettijohn. Instead it has taken less than two. We were prepared to spend $100,000 or more for preliminary expenses. Instead the organization work to date has involved less than a tenth of that amount. The first meeting of the national board of directors will be held in New York this month, at which time the selection of the first pictures for release over the Affiliated will be made.

"While the Affiliated was organized primarily for the benefit of the average theater owners, in the belief that they constitute the main strength of the industry, a remarkable number of 'first-run' houses have allied themselves with this movement.

"In Buffalo, Detroit, Philadelphia and other cities these houses are the foremost of their communities. Contrary to other exhibitor organizations, however, these larger exhibitors will enjoy no advantages not shared by every other exhibitor.

"One of the reasons why the Affiliated has made such a universal appeal is the fact that none of the Affiliated's national directors have had to advance any money for promotion expenses, nor do they hold notes to be paid back out of exhibitors' funds. The exhibitor's money is at all times under his own control in his own territory.

"Evidence of the confidence which such a plan engenders is the fact that of the seventy-five officers and directors thus far chosen by exhibitors for their local association not one has declined to serve."

Mr. Pettijohn announces receipt of a telegram from the Theater Owners' Association of California, signed by H. J. Siler, president and Giles Harper, secretary, stating they have completed organization for California, Washington, Oregon and Nevada and are to unite with an organization composed of the states of Montana, Iowa, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico for the formation of a unit of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, based on 300 booking days. There will be four distributing points—Los Angeles, St. Lake, San Francisco and Seattle. The stock is fully subscribed, and directors have been named for the meeting, to be held in New York on June 18-20.

With the formation of this unit 85 per cent. of the territory of the United States is now organized, only the New England states and a few of the southern states being still open.

Goldfish Finds Exhibitors Optimistic

In Ten-Thousand Mile Trip Goldwyn Executive Interviews Many Showmen and Completes Plans for Expansion

READY to carry into immediate execution the doubling of Goldwyn's annual output of productions and with work well laid out in advance for six or more Goldwyn stars, Samuel Goldfish returned last week from California expressing greater confidence in the development of Goldwyn and the expansion of motion picture popularity than he has shown at any time in the last two years.

Mr. Goldfish while away covered ten thousand miles of territory, saw important exhibitors in most of the large cities, and came in contact with the owners of the big and little houses in the western half of America.

"Every motion picture producer should take at least a semi-annual trip to the Pacific Coast," says Mr. Goldfish, "for such trips frequently made would absolutely destroy the cynical and ofttimes pessimistic outlook which New York associations and lobby lounging induces. The exhibitors of the West, large and small, are too busy, too prosperous, too busily devoted to building bigger houses to take care of their patronage to take time for pessimism. In Los Angeles the Kehrlein brothers are finding their handsome new Kinema theater taxed to capacity business and I was happy to arrange with them to become the first-run customers of Goldwyn Pictures, thereby giving our productions a home where increased house capacity will enable vastly more Angelenos to see them. Sid Grauman has made an instantaneous success with his new million-dollar Grauman theater and deserves all possible praise for his courage in building such a costly and beautiful structure. Always fine and aggressive showmen, the Graumans are now attaining the greatest success of their lives, which they well deserve.

Samuel Goldfish.

San Francisco Theaters Are Prosperous.

"In San Francisco I found from Mr. Turner of the big Turner & Dahnken circuit that patronage conditions have never before come anywhere near equaling their present levels. These two wealthy and successful showmen's greatest regret at this moment is that their popular Tivoli theater is not twice as large with regards to seating capacity.

"Eugene Roth's faith in the present and the future of the motion picture is advertised to the world in his beautiful and remarkable California theater, which from the day that its doors were opened has played to capacity business without lessening even in the smallest degree the attendance at his Portola theatre, which immediately adjoins the California.

"Howard Sheehan, of the Sheehan and Lourie partnership, which owns the Rialto, San Francisco, has made a tremenrous success of his house by splendid showmanship and a skilled knowledge of presentation, and since my departure from the Coast has purchased two other screen theaters in nearby cities.

"Contact with men of this sort has built anew my increased faith in the solidity of American exhibitors. All of these men have the big, broad viewpoints that prevail in all other successful businesses, and the bigness of their viewpoints should and does stimulate every producer in the industry."

Mr. Goldfish, on returning, points out to Secretary of War Baker and Provost Marshal Crowder the vital essentiality of the motion picture in war time and urges both of these officials to give earnest attention before depleting the picture industry of too many men.

Government Officials Recognize Essentiality of Screen.

"It has been a pleasure to find our governmental officers recognizing the essentiality of the stage and screen," says Mr. Goldfish. "The government view that the theater and other amusements should be encouraged and sustained is both just and wise. The motion picture industry is the biggest help the government has in winning the war. Through the picture theaters is the one great way of spreading propaganda and information. The pictures have helped in all the great drives for money. There are more than 18,000 Four-Minute men speaking in the theaters and other amusement places of the country. Take away the pictures and you at once lower the morale of the country.

"The screen is supporting the morale on the other side, too. The government called in the producers and asked us to hurry and send pictures to Europe to foil the German propaganda, which is telling that America is as autocracy-ridden as Russia, so we sent the pictures of American homes and the way people work and play here. They must have pictures for the soldiers of the cantonments and camps. Amusement is necessary to keep them happy. You can only have a stage show once in a while, but you can have the motion picture theater all the time, on the ocean as well as at home. Motion pictures are essential, and the men who act in them, distribute them and produce them are of vital service to the nation at this moment."

During Mr. Goldfish's absence on the Coast Mae Marsh's latest production, "All Woman," was completed and released. scoring the finest success of any Mae Marsh picture thus far made by Goldwyn. "I am especially delighted with 'All Woman' because it reveals the splendid dramatic capacities of Willard Mack, who recently assumed full direction of the scenario organization at our Fort Lee studios," said Mr. Goldfish. "Having enlisted the brilliant capacities of Mr. Mack, one of our most successful American dramatists, and the chief exponent of theatrical 'punch,' I feel certain that Goldwyn has obtained the one big factor we desired in our organization to round it out into fuller perfection."

At the Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 9 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—A double feature program was shown at the Strand for the week of June 9. "Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's Expedition into the Wilds" and Mae Marsh in the Goldwyn photoplay "All Woman" were the two numbers. The Roosevelt pictures cover the Colonel's South American trip. The Topical Review was also on the program. Betty Brown and Joseph Tushinsky were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—George M. Cohan in a screen version of his stage play "Hit-the-Trail Holliday" was the feature at the Rivoli. The picture is an Artcraft. Marguerite Clayton is the star's leading support. A scenic of modern Mexico, a comedy and the Animated Pictorial completed the picture program. Gladys Rice and Greek Evans were the soloists.

THE RIALTO.—Elsie Ferguson in an Artcraft production of Ibsen's "A Doll's House" headed the list of screen attractions at the Rialto. The picture was directed by Maurice Tourneur and does full justice to the subject. Views in St. Croix, the Animated Magazine, and a comedy were also on the program. The soloists were Annie Rosner and Carlos Mejia.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET THEATER.—First half, Charlotte Walker in "Men," and a number of "The Eagle's Eye." Second half, Dorothy Dalton in "Tyrant Fear."

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Tenth week of "Hearts of the World."

LYRIC.—Third week of "Pershing's Crusaders."

BROADWAY. — Herbert Rawlinson in "Smashing Through."

PARK.—Second week of "Sealed Orders."

Film Exporters Form an Association

Elect Temporary Officers and Discuss Ways and Means for the Protection of Their Interests

ACCORDING to schedule the exporters of films and cinematographic supplies—or, to be exact, most of those established in New York—and some of the Latin-American buyers in town gathered on the eighth floor of the Astor on June 6, at 12:30, to devise ways and means for the protection of their interests.

Those present were: J. M. Aragon, manager of film department of Gillespie Brothers & Company; W. E. Atkinson, export manager of Metro; B. Herrera, of Pairoa & Herrera, Chile; H. G. Kosch and S. S. Krellberg, of the Trans-Russian Film Corporation; Fred Thomander, of the A. B. C. Film Company; C. P. York, representing John Olsen of Sweden; Piedmont Pictures, represented by Joseph Lamy and H. R. Habicht; John M. Millander; K. W. Linn, export manager of the Universal; L. H. Allen, L. R. Thomas and C. L. Chapman, North American Motion Pictures, Inc., Argentina; L. L. Hiller and Jacob Wilk, of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.; Joe Lee, representing Reginald Warde; A. J. Bimberg, Popular Pictures; David P. Howells, David Russell, J. H. Hallberg, vice-president United Theater Equipment Company; R. P. Martin, Cuban-American Film Company, Havana; Miles & Manheimer, represented by E. S. Manheimer and Joseph R. Miles; Mutual Export and Import Company, Peru, Bolivia, Chile and Ecuador, represented by J. Hoffberg; L. Auerbach, Export and Import Film Company; Chester E. Sawyer, Caribbean Film Company and Central American Film Service, West Indies and Central America; John Carlson, Scandinavia; E. Wineberg and A. Schlesinger, African Film Trust, Ltd.; Manuel Zeno and F. H. Knocke, Medal Film Company, West Indies; Robert W. Priest, Merida Export Company; A. L. Godoy, Louis Burstein, King-Bee Film Corporation; William M. Vogel, of William Vogel Productions; Sidney Garrett, president J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.; Carl Hamburger, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

After a short preliminary address by Mr. Howells he was elected temporary chairman and Mr. Kosch temporary secretary.

The discussion took a rather peculiar turn. A minority, instead of going into the different matters that would form the scope of the proposed organization, seemed to doubt the wisdom of organizing at all. Mr. Atkinson advocated that the exporters should join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as individuals, while Mr. Schlesinger appeared to be in fear that the mere fact that such organization had been formed would tend to predispose the authorities in Washington against the exporters in general.

Mr. Garrett reminded the gathering that the merchants engaged in the export of film in Great Britain, France and Italy were already organized, not only for the purely selfish purpose of safeguarding their interests, but to help the government in all possible ways.

Mr. Aurbach did not think the gathering sufficiently representative, and insisted that the actions of the organization (if there was to be one. Mr. Aurbach was not quite sure of the advisability of organizing) would carry more weight when backed by the counsel and approval of some of the exporters absent from the meeting.

Manufacturers a Secondary Export Factor.

To a statement made to the effect that the manufacturers were the biggest exporters of all and should have been invited to the meeting, Mr. Kosch replied that, although the intention was to co-operate with them as well as with all other branches of the industry, it was a fact that the producing companies, with the exception of Pathe, Fox and Universal, had really very little at stake in a direct way, as their practice was to take no chances whatever on outside markets, selling their foreign rights to the different exporting houses situated in New York.

Mr. Schlesinger, in the course of the debate, remarked several times that he was not interested in generalities and wanted somebody to state his specific troubles. Although this request was not refused point blank, none of those present showed any inclination of complying with Mr. Schlesinger's wish.

Mr. Hallberg, as a vice-president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, advised the exporters to join that body as individual members, as he thought that better and quicker results would be obtained that way.

Mr. Vogel suggested that before definite steps were taken a committee should be appointed to approach the N. A. M. P. I. and decide the best method of procedure.

Mr. Krellberg stated the only effective method of meeting organized competition abroad, now and after the war, was by organizing in New York, the position of which, as the film export center of the world, would be seriously endangered if the exporters were to adopt a policy of indifference.

By this time most of those present had taken part in the debate, and the whole discussion had concentrated on two points:

Whether the exporters should organize as an independent body.

Whether they should join the N. A. M. P. I. as individual members.

On a motion from Mr. Krellberg, seconded by Mr. Garrett, the first proposition was put to the vote and passed by an overwhelming majority.

Messrs. Howells and Kosch were retained as temporary president and secretary respectively until the next meeting, which will be held June 13 at the same place and hour.

At the suggestion of Mr. Vogel the chair was authorized to select a committee of five for the purpose of interviewing the officers of the N. A. M. P. I. and arrive at an understanding as to the best means of co-operating with them.

Messrs. Howells, Chapman, Krellberg, Miles and Garrett were appointed members of the committee.

The meeting adjourned at 2:30 p. m.

Washington Officials Refuse to Discuss Situation.

A few minutes before the meeting adjourned one of the representatives of the Moving Picture World read the following telegram from the journal's Washington correspondent:

"War Trade Board officials refuse any information on Government's attitude on discontinuance of film exports. It is understood the whole film question is now under consideration, and until present investigations are completed no information is available. Officials refuse absolutely to talk. LINZ."

A Great Step Forward.

It was undoubtedly a great step forward to get forty odd exporters together. The tricks of the film exporting business were so primitive two or three years ago on this side of the Atlantic that the men engaged in it had to adopt secretive methods to survive and to discourage possible competitors.

Things have changed in New York. It now requires special training, standing capital and world-wide connections to do business in films in foreign countries. The age of mystery has passed, and the film exporters are quite willing to make as much noise as any other branch of international merchandising. Besides, during this short space of time, the interests of most of the exporters who met at the Astor have increased tenfold, and today they have something tangible to defend.

These are some of the reasons why it was comparatively easy to get them together.

The fact that an organization was formed and that the New York film exporters are already able to act as a unit indicates of itself a great deal, but, in our estimation, the first meeting was devoted to the discussion of a subject that is not as important as some of those present seemed to think. Some of the opinions aired on the lack of steamship facilities and the stand that the authorities in Washington would take in regard to the film industry bordered on the hysterical.

GIL-SPEAR BALLOONING IN CUBA.

Adrian Gil-Spear, former scenario editor for Goldwyn, has been busy since he left New York not only writing the stories for which he is noted, but soaring even higher. He has been ballooning in Cuba and expects soon to get his commission in the balloon section of the aviation corps once he succeeds in the final test.

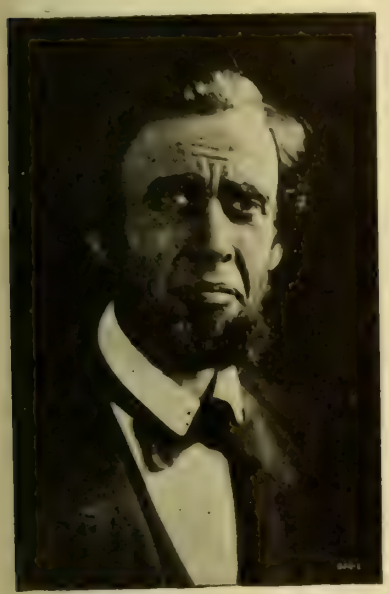
Benjamin Chapin Dead at Forty-Four Famous Impersonator of Lincoln After Illness of Several Months Succumbs to Tuberculosis.

SUCCUMBING to tuberculosis, Benjamin Chester Chapin, widely known as an impersonator of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he bore a remarkable resemblance, died at the Loomis Sanitarium, Liberty, N. Y., on Sunday, June 2. By a coincidence, Mr. Chapin's illness assumed its serious phase on Lincoln's birthday, when he ceased all activities and was sent to the sanitarium where he died.

It is a peculiar circumstance, also, that Mr. Chapin's series of ten motion pictures, "The Son of Democracy," in which he personated Abraham Lincoln, was released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the day he became ill and since that day the pictures have been and still are being presented with great success. By a strange perversity of fate, Mr. Chapin was not privileged to enjoy the financial fruits of his life's work, the profits of which to date are estimated at more than $500,000. Mr. Chapin was born in Bristolville, Ohio, on August 9, 1874, a son of Warren Ely and Catherine Taylor Chapin. He was graduated from the Bristolville high school in 1890, and from New Lyme Institute in 1892. From 1892 to 1898 he was a platform lecturer and entertainer, and in 1902 he entered vaudeville in a dramtic monologue entitled "Lincoln," in which he achieved a decided success.



Benjamin Chapin.

In 1906 Mr. Chapin produced a play in four acts entitled "Lincoln," which later he presented with success. His remarkable resemblance to the great emancipator attracted much attention and his success spurred him on to write his now famous "Lincoln Cycle" for motion pictures giving the human side of the man in a series of ten stories depicting incidents in the career of Abraham Lincoln from his boyhood until his death. This great work required five years of unremitting study and toil to complete, and though he frequently suffered severely from the malady that was slowly sapping his vitality, he never ceased his labors until the final story was picturized and released on the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday.

Mr. Chapin's lecture on Lincoln, as well as his crowning achievement, "The Son of Democracy," gained for him the degree of Doctor of Literature, which was conferred on him by Lincoln Memorial University at Harrowgate, Tenn., last month. He was a member of the American Society of Dramatists and president of the Charter Features Corporation of New York. He is survived by his mother, Mrs Catherine Taylor Chapin, his sister, Lucile A. Chapin, and brother, Warren T. Chapin. Interment was at Bristolville, Ohio. Arrangements for a memorial service in New York are being made.

Would Give Soldiers Free Admission

Cincinnati Councilman Introduces Ordinance Granting to Men in Uniform One-tenth of House's Capacity.

AN ordinance has been introduced in the Cincinnati city council of Cincinnati, under which soldiers in uniform will be admitted free of charge to all moving picture theaters, as well as to free rides on street cars. However, the author of the ordinance recognized that there might on occasion be large numbers of soldiers on the streets, and therefore limited the number to be admitted free of charge to the theaters to one-tenth of a house's seating capacity. There has been comparatively little comment on the free admission ordinance among exhibitors, and those who have been interviewed expressed their perfect willingness to admit men in uniform free of charge. However, it has also been pointed out that there is no reason to "pick on" the exhibitors, inasmuch as the same reasons which would make it proper to admit soldiers to their theaters free of charge should apply to other theaters as well, and, in fact, to all other forms of entertainment, including concerts and baseball games. Unless more interest is shown in the matter, one way or the other, the chances are that the measure will die a quiet death from lack of nourishment in the way of public support.

Mabel Normand Meets Mrs. Wilson

At Society Gathering in Washington Lady of White House Congratulated Player on "Joan of Plattsburg."

MRS. WOODROW WILSON asked that Mabel Normand be brought to her box at Crandall's Knickerbocker theater in Washington that the first lady of the land might speak to the star of "Joan of Plattsburg." It happened on June 4, when Goldwyn's patriotic comedy-drama was presented in aid of the Children's Year Campaign Committee of the Council of National Defense, an organization devoted to the welfare of babies. Miss Normand was in Washington at the direct invitation of this organization, of which Mrs. Wilson is the chief patron.

The audience, one of the most distinguished ever assembled to see a motion picture and meet the star of it, included, besides Mrs. Wilson, Vice-President Marshall and Mrs. Marshall, Secretary of War Baker and Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and various other ladies of the cabinet as well as Army and Navy officials and leaders in war work.

When she was called to the stage after the showing of the picture, Miss Normand told the audience how happy she was to be in Washington for the first time and how deeply she appreciated the honor paid her by the Children's Year Campaign Association in asking her to make a personal appearance.

Previous to this Mrs. Wilson had made known to Manager Arthur Robb that she would like to say au revoir to the star, and in the lobby of the Knickerbocker, surrounded by the crowd, most of them Mrs. Wilson's personal friends, the wife of the President expressed her enjoyment of Mabel Normand's work to the star herself.

NAVY PICTURE PRAISED BY OFFICER.

The United States Navy holds the shooting record of the world, and faces the coming naval Armageddon with perfect confidence, according to Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl, U. S. N. R. F., who addressed the Architectural League in West 57th street, New York, on Thursday evening, May 30, in connection with his showing of the Educational Films Corporation's new spectacle, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play." The navy has attained a record of 25 per cent. of hits at a distance of over ten miles (18,000 yards) at targets no larger in size than a railroad freight car. The average of hits in actual battle in this war has only been between 1 and 2 per cent. Three per cent. of hits is more than can be expected.

The lieutenant said that the Educational's "Your Fighting Navy" was the best navy picture he had thus far edited.

GEORGE KANN WILL REMAIN IN NEW YORK.

George Kann, chief assistant to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, will not go to Universal City as has been persistently reported in the trade for several weeks. The rumor was that Mr. Kann would be the personal representative of Mr. Laemmle at the production plant. This rumor was stifled recently at the New York offices of Universal by the announcement that Mr. Kann's duties in New York are far too exacting and his knowledge of the organization detail too comprehensive to think of sending him to the coast permanently. It may be that he will be sent West for a short time to look over the big plant of which he formerly was in charge.

COHN GETS PICTURES UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Jack Cohn, in charge of the Universal news weekly department, claims to have put across an exclusive on his competitors by obtaining motion pictures of the survivors of the vessels sent to the bottom by the Hun submarines.

He had several cameramen at the docks at which the survivors were landed only to find that the Government representatives had orders not to allow any pictures to be taken. For several hours the Universal representatives hung around the piers, eventually gathering together parties of the survivors and inviting them to the Universal studios at 1600 Broadway, where pictures were taken.

Hoffman Retires from Foursquare

Former Vice-President Sells Holdings to George Backer and Buys the Company's New York Exchange.

A RE-ALIGNMENT of financial interests in Foursquare Pictures, Inc., has been made. The holdings of M. H. Hoffman, who has been vice-president and general manager of Foursquare, were purchased by George Backer. Simultaneously Mr. Hoffman resigned and withdrew from the administrative headquarters of the corporation.

Mr. Backer, president of Foursquare, assumes active control of the organization and with his associates will proceed to extend its endeavors. With Jacob Wildberg, treasurer, Mr. Backer will not only direct the operations of the Foursquare organization but also select the pictures to be acquired for distribution.

Foursquare will secure for distribution, through its twenty-six exchanges and affiliated distributing companies, one feature photoplay each month. Every picture, in order to qualify as Foursquare product, must conform to a given standard of pictorial and box-office excellence.

Eight of these "specials" will be produced by the Bacon-Backer Film Corporation, which is confining its efforts solely to that number. Arrangements have been concluded with another producing firm for four, possibly six, features.

It is the purpose of Mr. Backer and his associates to apply to the conduct of the enterprise the constructive methods which are followed by large commercial institutions.

"Mr. Hoffman leaves us with every good wish for his success," said President Backer. "He has purchased from us the New York Foursquare Exchange, the terms of the contract specifying that he shall distribute in this territory our product. Mr. Hoffman, I am sure, will endeavor to operate the exchange upon a basis of serving the needs of exhibitors to the end of increasing the business and making it one of permanence and worthy of the good will of its patrons."

George Irving Joins Goldwyn

ADDED distinction is given Goldwyn's roster of directors in the acquisition of George Irving, who is to hold the guiding reins in Mabel Normand's production, the title of which has not been announced.

From his recently brilliant work in "Daughter of Destiny" admirers of George Irving look back on his successful career as a motion picture director and, before that, his thirteen years in Charles Frohman's stage productions. In passing it is worth mentioning that Goldwyn brings together two artists, each of whom rendered distinct service in the same stage play. Both George Irving and Pauline Frederick appeared with Francis Wilson in "When Knights Were Bold" some years ago, before either realized that the silent drama would offer them their greatest opportunities. Miss Frederick will soon be a Goldwyn star, and George Irving is a Goldwyn director.

George Irving.

Irving's first undertaking in this direction was the picturization of Booth Tarkington's "The Conquest of Canaan," and after a few more productions he scored his greatest success in visualizing Augustus Thomas' play, "The Witching Hour." His status as a director of unusual delicacy, keenness and strength was at once evidenced, and since then he has taken additional proof of these qualities.

In analyzing his methods of work the bystander does not have to search long to account for Mr. Irving's popularity with the players under him nor reason for the polished results he achieves. Quiet, exceedingly considerate under all conditions, his poise and authority are sensed before they are felt, and when work is actually begun his unerring sense of dramatic values, his searching eye for the pictorial quality of every scene and his never-failing grasp on the psychology of a character and the human nature underlying it make George Irving a director to whom the most exacting star gives fullest confidence.

Court Won't Interfere With Sunday Law

Supreme Tribunal of Ohio Refuses to Disturb Lower Court's Conviction of Standen for Operating on Sabbath.

THERE have been several decisions of the Supreme Court of Ohio during the past week or so of direct interest to moving picture exhibitors and to the public as well. The most important of these, and that which excited the greatest amount of comment, was that in which the court refused to disturb the ruling of a lower court convicting William Standen, of Medina, of operating a moving picture theater on Sunday in violation of the old Ohio statute forbidding amusements and numerous other things on the Sabbath. In other words, the court has again upheld the validity of this old statute and has affirmed its existence, which is not a secret to anybody. As it has frequently been pointed out, however, the statute is a dead letter in most of the cities, inasmuch as its enforcement would be directly against the desires of the public and the general sentiment of today, and it is consequently ignored.

Wherever blue-stocking agitators are sufficiently strong to force a case into court the court must recognize the existence of the statute, but exhibitors in Cincinnati and the other large cities, as well as in most of the other communities of Ohio, feel no apprehension of a general resort to and enforcement of the statute.

The two other cases referred to dealt with the power of cities to operate moving picture exhibitions themselves, and while the decisions were somewhat confusing to the layman, apparently one overruling the other, the opinion of the Supreme Court seems to be that Ohio cities may run picture shows if they please as a part of their educational activities.

Whiteside to Make Patriotic Picture

ARRANGEMENTS have been made between Walker Whiteside and Ernest Shipman whereby Mr. Whiteside will depict for the screen the part of a Japanese patriot and head of the Japanese Secret Service in America. The story is constructed along up-to-date lines, visualizing modern events in the most attractive form and showing the closest co-operation between the Allies and the United States Government, particularly the splendid friendship that is being formed between America and neutral governments. It will be manufactured along lines that lend themselves most thoroughly to a strong spirit of patriotism and will be released in the open market.

Walker Whiteside.

Walker Whiteside has not as yet had his full dramatic value and reputation exploited in pictures, although both of his past efforts have proved most successful from a financial standpoint. Mr. Whiteside's great success in "The Typhoon" not only in this country, but in London, stamped him as a most successful interpreter of Oriental roles. The selection of Mr. Whiteside for the part of a Japanese patriot and Secret Service agent is a happy one and should meet with the approval of buyers, exhibitors and the public.

One of the foremost organizations has already put its O. K. upon the theme and stands ready to purchase it when completed. Definite plans for marketing it will not be announced until the picture has been privately screened by the owners.

Ernest Shipman has left for Los Angeles to complete studio arrangements for the making of the Walker Whiteside picture.

Fox Managers Hold Fourth Convention

Representatives From Nine Countries Attend Four-Day Business Session and Are Entertained By Company's President.

WITH nine countries represented, the fourth annual convention of the managers and representatives of the Fox Film Corporation was held from June 3 to June 6, inclusive, at the Biltmore Hotel, New York. Close on the heels of his successful efforts as captain of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team in the Red Cross campaign, and his successes in the Knights of Columbus and Jewish War Relief drives, Mr. Fox at the opening session on Monday enunciated the policy of the Fox Film Corporation.

"The only job in the country today is the winning of the war," said Mr. Fox. "To bring this war to a successful conclusion the Government needs money, and lots of it, and the only way the Government can get this money is through taxation.

"Therefore it is up to the business men of the country to expand and push their business with greater energy and vigor, so that when the Government comes to collect its war taxes—whether they be 5 per cent. or 95 per cent.—it will find more money to levy on.

"It doesn't matter a continental whether we, as a corporation, have a nickel left after these taxes are collected. The point is that we have got to make enough money so that the Government can collect more money. That, gentlemen, is our job this coming year."

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, presided at all the business sessions. The countries represented, besides the United States, were Canada, Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Paraguay. After the opening business conference Monday afternoon Mr. Fox was host to the visitors in the evening at the Winter Garden.

The second business session was held all day Tuesday at the Biltmore, following which Mr. Fox entertained his managers and the others attending the convention at a beefsteak dinner at Murray's, in Forty-second street. Harry F. Campbell, of Boston, New England district manager, was toastmaster, and the evening was enlivened with humorous speeches and anecdotes by the various guests. Several vaudeville acts also were given, under the direction of Jack Loeb, and a jazz band dispensed music throughout the dinner. Flashlight photographs were taken of the diners, who were garbed in aprons.

The program Wednesday was a screening in the morning at Wurlitzer Hall and another business conference in the afternoon at the Biltmore. In the evening the visitors were again guests of Mr. Fox, this time at the Eltinge theater, where they saw "Business Before Pleasure." Later Mr. Fox took them to "The Midnight Revue" at the Century Grove.

Thursday morning saw another screening at Wurlitzer Hall and a conference was held in the afternoon at the Biltmore. The convention closed with final instructions by Mr. Sheehan at the home office, 130 West Forty-sixth street.

Throughout the entire convention the sessions were marked with patriotism and a desire for national service. At the opening meeting Mr. Campbell, of Boston, in a short speech, expressed the pride of the whole Fox organization in the war relief work Mr. Fox has been doing. In his response Mr. Fox announced that 312 employees of the Fox Film Corporation throughout the country are now in their government's service for the war.

On their arrival at the convention, the managers were presented with small gold American flags, which were worn in their coat lapels.

Those attending the convention were: District managers Harry F. Campbell, Clyde Eckhardt, George F. Mann, Vincent C. McCabe and Paul C. Mooney.

Managers and assistants, Sam Dembow, Jr., and G. Hoffman, of Atlanta; W. D. Shapiro, of Boston; Thomas Brady, of Buffalo; William Jenner and Harry Willard, of Chicago; Lester Sturm and Rudolph Knoepfle, of Cincinnati; C. A. Browne, of Cleveland; E. H. Wachter, of Dallas; R. J. Churchill, of Denver; Field Carmichael and Joe Kaliski, of Detroit; C. E. Penrod, of Indianapolis; C. W. Young and B. E. Edwards, of Kansas City; M. A. Walsh, of Los Angeles; E. S. Famous Players Announces a "Find"

Company to Back Lila Lee of Vaudeville with National Exploitation—Will Work in the West.

JESSE L. LASKY, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, last week announced a "find" for the screen in the person of Lila Lee, prominently identified for the past eight years with vaudeville in Gus Edwards attractions. This confirms the recent rumor that the big organization was about to announce a young star, who will be given a national exploitation that will aim to make her one of the big attractions of the screen.

Lila Lee.

In making his announcement, Mr. Lasky said: "The published rumor that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was about to announce a young star of unusual talent and beauty is confirmed in our engagement of 'Cuddles.' For more than a year our organization has been searching all branches of the entertainment world for just such a young woman and our hunt finally has been rewarded in the person of Lila Lee, widely known as 'Cuddles.'

"Little Lila was first 'discovered' by Gus Edwards, some eight years ago. It was the time of the first 'kiddie' show in vaudeville, when a certain song, 'Look Out For Jimmy Valentine,' demanded a cute tot properly to express the humor of it. Mr. Edwards sought and sought and found no one. Finally, riding along despondently in his machine one day, he spied a lot of little children playing in a street of Union Hill, N. J., where his act was to open. They all looked alike to him with the exception of one, who in her childish way and forceful manner immediately impressed the song writer as just the type he wanted.

"With the consent of her parents, Mr. Edwards put her in his act and the result was that the child 'ran away with the show.' Her subsequent work displayed further genuine histrionic accomplishments that were conceded to be unusual considering her youth. Lila has many friends throughout the country and her recent 'discovery' for motion pictures will delight those who have been charmed with her really exceptional work behind the footlights. She will be a Paramount star in photoplays that will strike a strong human appeal. Miss Lee is tall, faultlessly built, vigorous and athletic and is fully eligible for the heavier demands of the motion picture drama as well as the finer expressions. We have signed her for a period of five years. She will be surrounded in her work by the best artists, and nothing will be overlooked to make her name the household word of the motion picture patron. She will leave for the Lasky studios in Hollywood shortly."

ARTHUR BATES JOINS COLORS.

Arthur Bates, for years one of Essanay's leading character players, was called last week to join the colors. He left for Camp Wheeler at Macon. His best characterizations were as old man parts in "The Man Trail" and "The Kill-Joy." He played comedy parts with Chaplin in his early Essanay comedies and later played leads in the Essanay comedies directed by Arthur Hotaling.

Pathe Exchange Declares a Bonus

Company Executives Believe Spurt in Business Due to Selective Service Method of Booking.

FOLLOWING the presentation of two big Pathe features at the Rialto and Rivoli Theaters, a further indication of the prosperity attained by the company under Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, is seen in the statement that a big bonus has just been paid to employes.

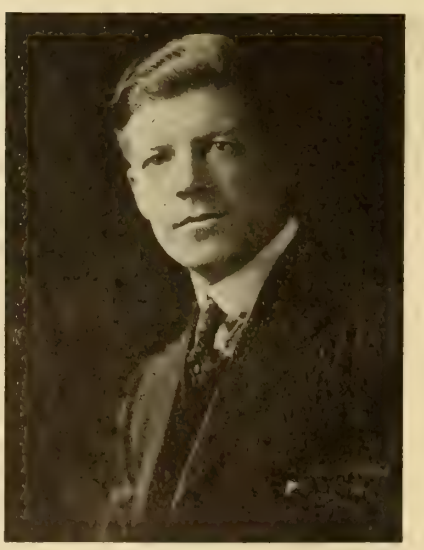
The double Broadway presentation is considered a demonstration of the big way Pathe is handling features under the new system, and the bonus, after an interval of more than half a year, follows upon the inauguration of Mr. Brunet as chief executive, as the benefits resulting from his broad business policies begin to be reflected in the biggest business transacted in the history of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Paul Brunet.

"No words could better show the prosperity of this company," said a Pathe official in discussing the trend of the industry, "than the single statement: Pathe has just declared a bonus. Nothing could more clearly indicate the great organization Pathe is building."

Among the Pathe employes who received the latest bonus are W. E. Raynor, B. Sanford, M. Marsh, A. M. Holah, Henry Laws, D. C. Stearns, E. A. Helouis, R. Shrader, Paul McDaniels, C. B. Haskett, F. W. Gebhardt, Leo Adler, A. Reinlieb, Miss M. Dougherty, M. Kohn, A. Goodman, J. W. Fuller, L. Lowe, E. E. Heller and Thomas Lark.

An enthusiastic spirit of co-operation is manifest in all Pathe branches. F. C. Quimby, sales manager, is now on a tour that will take him to Chicago, Minneapolis, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Denver, Oklahoma, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Charlotte, and his long trip is taken for the purpose of furthering the co-operation between home office and branches.



F. C. Quimby.

One of the first acts of the new chief executive was to establish the Pathe selective service method of booking features, and it is this policy which is responsible for the big results Pathe is now getting with its features which are hitting a high average.

The selective service system has all advantages of former methods without their disadvantages. For instance, it permits an exhibitor to select each picture and play it on its merits, to book in star series or to play the program, which last is often found the most satisfactory policy for the small house, while one of the other two is preferred by the larger.

In the immediate future the company will release in all exchanges the seven-reel Pathe special feature "Moral Suicide."

Another bix six-reel special on the way will be "Common Clay," the A. H. Woods stage hit, starring Fannie Ward. "A Japanese Nightingale" is another coming Ward play.

Pathe also will release "The Woman Eternal," a Ralph Ince picture. "The Narrow Path" is an A. H. Woods hit. "The Bells" and "The Orleans Coach." "The Ghost of the Rancho" and "In Wrong' are coming with Bryant Washburn.

"Caroline of the Corners" and "A Little Sister of Everybody" are two attractive Bessie Love vehicles on the way. "The First Law" is an Irene Castle play. "Annexing Bill" and "Waifs," starring Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale.

Baby Marie Osborne is represented in the list of coming feature attractions by "The Voice of Destiny" and "Cupid by Proxy."

Ragland Goes to St. Louis for Select

Old-Time Showman Was Four Years With Kleine and Later With Fox.

BEGINNING June 3 Select Pictures St. Louis Exchange came under the management of J. C. Ragland. Mr. Ragland was installed as the St. Louis branch manager by Field Manager J. S. Woody. Mr. Woody is spending some time at the St. Louis branch inducting Hr. Ragland into his office.

In the new manager, St. Louis exhibitors gain a friend who is an expert showman, and whose pride it is to help every exhibitor in his territory to succeed in putting over the pictures which he sells them. Mr. Ragland is both an expert showman and an old picture salesman. He has been prominently identified with both picture and theatrical concerns for many years.

Way back in the dim past, when George Kleine astonished New York show circles by putting on the first "dollar-top" picture presented Broadway, "Quo Vadis," at the Astor Theater, Ragland was the man at the helm. Already well known for his expert handling of theatrical attractions, he was chosen by Mr. Kleine to put over this daring experiment in picture presentation, and Ragland put "Quo Vadis" over with a will. In New York and on the road, first with "Quo Vadis," then with "Pompeii' and other similar attractions, off and on Ragland spent four years with the Kleine interests. And then his first love called to him, and he backslided to handling the attractions of the spoken drama once more.

Recently Mr. Ragland has been with William Fox enterprises. His success as manager of the Pittsburgh branch, in exploiting Fox's Standard Pictures, is one of the traditions of the "Smoky City." In the fall of 1917 he became Fox's manager in Cincinnati, which position he has held until recently.

W. W. Hodkinson Not in New Concern

Denies Statement That He Is Interested in Society Players Film Company.

IN a San Francisco report published in the Moving Picture World of June 15, W. W. Hodkinson's name was given as among others who were planning a large producing company to be called the Society Players Film Company and to build a great studio in that city. We have a communication from Mr. Hodkinson definitely and unequivocably stating that he is in no way interested in the concern. He also wishes it made known to the trade that should he enter or make connections with other business organizations, complete and full announcement will always come from his home office, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, 527 Fifth avenue, New York.

BIG LIGHTING EFFECTS IN WEHLEN PICTURE.

A scene in silhouette is one of the striking features of "The House of Gold," the Metro production starring Emmy Wehlen, which will have early release. Unusual and startling light effects are made necessary by reason of the developments of the story. "The House of Gold" was written by Katharine Kavanaugh and directed by Edwin Carewe, Eugene Gaudio is responsible for the photography, and he has been obliged to use every trick at his command to secure the results called for.

SEELY OUT OF ARROW FILM.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that Walter Hoff Seely is no longer connected with that company in any capacity. It is also reported that Robert Priest has also severed his connection with Arrow.

The Pictures and the Law

A Valuable Compilation of Leading Cases and Opinions the Newest Contribution to Our Literature.

By Epes W. Sargent.

MOTION pictures and the theater in their legal aspect is the subject of an exhaustive work by Louis D. Froelich and Charles Schwarts, just published by Baker, Voorhis & Company under the title of "The Law of Motion Pictures and the Theater." It offers a reasonably complete treatise of the laws governing the making and exhibiting of motion pictures so far as there are any precedents, with opinions as to the probable rulings where no precedent yet exists.

The work is not to be confounded with "popular" books of the "Law at a Glance" or "Every Man His Own Lawyer' type. This has its initial place in the law library, but is so carefully laid out that it also serves the maker and exhibitor of pictures as a guidance, the classification of chapters and their sub-divisions being so intelligently made that the law or opinion upon any phase of making or showing is readily accessible. It is broadly divided into sections on the author and literary rights, the actor and his rights, other employees of the producer, the distributor and exhibitor, the public and copyright.

Where such exist the leading cases in the various points are cited, many of them being briefed in the footnotes to give a sufficient understanding of the leading case as it applies to the point at issue. Where there is no precedent (and there are innumerable points yet to be passed upon by the courts) leading cases in dramatic litigation are cited as the nearest approach to a precedent, and inferences are drawn that are usually sound, though it is not probable that many of the decisions arrived at will be sustained when taken in connection with general custom.

As an example the authors are of the opinion that "there is a good consideration to the producer when a manuscript is submitted to him—namely, the opportunity of reading the manuscript," and therefore he will be held liable if the script is lost through his own or his employees' negligence. The only citation in support of this contention is an English case, in which it was decided that a printer could not be held liable for the destruction of plates stored without charge by them. This point would not hold in law against the prevailing custom, for scripts are submitted at the risk of the author, who is supposed to hold a carbon copy of the same and to sustain only the loss of time and white paper. There is a ruling to this effect in the California courts, where a thief who stole a script and sought to make a sale was discharged because he was held not to have taken anything of value. Along the same lines, basing upon dramatic usage, it is held that a company cannot materially change the script of an author without libel; a decision which, if sustained, would keep half the authors in the courts all of the time and the rest on part time.

Another point to be questioned is the statement that the actor, knowing that in filming a play it is frequently necessary to travel, is personally liable for his traveling expenses and support in strange towns if he agrees to take part in a picture without specifying that these expenses shall be paid by his employer. Here the citations are all based on theatrical usage, and the chief case is one from the English courts. Many actors receive no contracts, and it is general custom that a company shall pay traveling expenses, though usage differs as to the defrayment of board and lodging.

There are several other instances where the inferences drawn are distinctly bad, but in general the book is sound in its logic and valuable in collecting the various precedents. Some rather surprising facts are arrived at. Perhaps the most vital of these is the changing of a title or the presentation of a dramatized novel under another title destroys the validity of the copyright. If this contention is sustained by the courts then 75 per cent. of the novels from which plays have been made are now in the public domain and no longer under copyright protection. To use a concrete example, if this opinion be held good, then the Universal Company, in releasing Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel "K" under the title of "The Doctor and the Woman" (presumably acting with her consent), has destroyed all of her copyright rights in the novel, which has become public property. The importance of such a question cannot be underestimated.

The chapters of laws relating to the exhibiting end are more fully sustained by precedents along the same lines, and therefore are more authoritative than opinion unbacked by decision can be. These and the chapters on copyright are complete as they stand, and of value to house and production managers.

Taken as a whole the work is one of great importance to the industry, though it should be understood that none of the opinions contained therein are the final word. State laws differ, and a local lawyer should be consulted upon all important points, but the work provides him with the references he needs and, lacking a later precedent of contrary effect, gives him a working basis for his case preparation. The work is a book of nearly one thousand pages, and is the first to cover the ground comprehensively and with legal care. It should be in the libraries of all picture producers, managers and those lawyers who specialize in motion picture litigation, for it is the last, as well as the first, word on the subject.

Lawrence Grant Bears Likeness to Kaiser

Portrayer of German Emperor in Metro Production Is Well Known in United States as Actor and Lecturer.

LAWRENCE GRANT, who plays the important part of the Kaiser in the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "To Hell with the Kaiser," is as well as an English actor of distinction a noted traveler and lecturer, who has toured the world in many capacities.

At the beginning of the European war Mr. Grant was associated with Anne Morgan and Elizabeth Marbury on the lecture committee of the Women's Department of the National Civic Federation. Mr. Grant talked on "England and the War," a subject on which he is highly versed, having spent much time at the front in 1914. He also gave a series of illustrated travel talks, with motion pictures taken by himself on "Women of France in Time of War," which was given under the auspices of the American Fund for French Wounded.

Lawrence Grant.

Mr. Grant has made a special study of the Indian in his native life and preserved his impressions in Kinemacolor motion pictures which he obtained permission from the Government to take for lecture purposes.

As an actor Mr Grant is numbered among the best known English thespians. He was born in Bournemouth, Hampshire near New Forest, England. His stage debut was made in London in 1899. Eighteen months later he was made leading man with Mrs. Lewis Waller in "Zaza." He enacted the important part of Dufresne and was her leading man in five other productions. Later he appeared in various London productions with Kate Rorka. Then he succeeded Kyrle Bellew as leading man with Mrs. Browne-Potter, with whom he played in eleven successful productions. After this he was associated with Sir George Alexander at the Saint James theater, and with Arthur Bourchier at the Shaftesbury and Garrick theaters. Then he starred in the famous play by Henry Arthur Jones, "Joseph Entangled," in the same part played in this country by Henry Miller. Mr. Grant's first visit to America was with Olga Nethersole, in a repertoire of eleven plays.

As the Kaiser in the Screen Classics, Inc., big melodramatic production, "To Hell with the Kaiser," Mr. Grant makes his motion picture debut. His great likeness to this monarch and his talents as an actor made him the ideal player for the part. His experience in this character has been gained by three years of playing the role of the German Emperor in his two vaudeville sketches, "The Final Arbiter" and "Efficiency," which have attracted attention throughout the country.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

MOST effective picture seen here in weeks—"My Own United States," shown privately at the Fenway, and I hope it will be seen by millions all over the land, if only for its patriotic lessons. We have had this worked out in part in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," picturing Hamilton and Burr, and the duel scene, also the latter part of it well done, in "A Man Without a Country," opening similarly, but with due credit to the late Edward Everett Hale, who gave us this classic. Nowhere in this picture has he been given credit—a great mistake, easily rectified. The scenes portrayed in the book are cleverly reproduced. Arnold Daly lives up to his reputation as a painstaking actor. The greatest care has been taken by all concerned to give a flawless picture; the cast has been carefully selected. Know any other actor who could play Hamilton like Duncan McRae? He certainly looked the part, and very like the portraits seen. There were some high lights in the production. Now let William Sherrill, head of the Frohman Producing Company, interpolate a picture of Dr. Hale somewhere, as Nolan goes in the picture and give him rightful credit for the idea, anyhow. True, this episode does not appear early as many of the initial reels are given over to the historic sequence of events, leading up to the disastrous utterance of the unfortunate Nolan, yet it is only fair to the author. Daly is fine in the ship scenes, but they have not given him the correct lines in appealing to the boy to stand by the flag. A strong sentence was this: "Stand by her (the country) as you would by your mother," etc. And then he added: "Oh, if anybody had said that to me when I was your age!" Sentimental? Well, why not!

* * *

Glad to see J. Frank Glendon well supported as he was in "The Wooing of Princess Pat," for he and little Leslie carried the play along, as of itself there was not very much to chronicle, it being one of those small kingdoms eternally squabbling with their neighbors. The exteriors were fine, and little Gladys was quite a sport in her coasting stunts. William Dunn, whose work grows, had a thankless part. The finale was a delight, and as a whole it is well worth while.

* * *

If you like Theda Bara and Oriental or East Indian stuff, go for "The Soul of Buddha," beautifully staged in every detail, and a credit to Fox. Splendor with a capital "S" prevails. I saw it at the Park, and following it was "The Guilt of Silence," a Bluebird, with Monroe Salisbury doing some quite severe stunts like being snowed under, near death, emerging at the right moment (thanks to a passer-by), but minus the power of speech. He suddenly recovered it at the close, but seemed unable to hear the sound of his voice. There are many inconsistencies in this picture. As a woman said: "Where on earth did they get that six months' old baby, when its supposed mother had not been away from home and there was no indication that the stork was to arrive." Then the hero had his hands scalded, and bound up, only to remain that way until after said baby had to be born months later and brought into the picture—from where, is not indicated. There were wonderful outdoor snow scenes.

* * *

Florence Reed and Milton Sills struggled with "Today," which has no particular merit in story, is risque in spots, and not one to take the very young to see.

* * *

Glad to know that the work of Charles Miller, formerly of the Hub, is appreciated by Goldwyn and we anticiapte seeing the results in "The Fair Pretender," which Mrs. Ayer is giving us this week. We also congratulate that company on securing Herbert Rawlinson, the clever lead, for its forthcoming release, with Mabel Normand opposite. His personality is compelling and we have missed him for some time.

* * *

When one sits in front and sees one's own flesh and blood (a nephew), with other chaps, doing a big stunt along patriotic lines, it does clutch the heart. In one of the weeklies we had the Pelham Bay naval recruits spelling the word "Victory" in double quick time. The Great Lakes flag was some picture, with its 10,000 men, but we did not see it made, as in this case. Another picture in the same series showed the building of a pontoon bridge, 350 feet long, in exactly 37 minutes, the men doing flawless work—much to the astonishment of French Army officers and even their own. Some discipline here, a joy to witness!

* * *

"Mother"—what a play! Done in old England, directed by George Loane Tucker, put out by the McClures for our education and as a lesson in mother love and sacrifice. Here we get a throbbing story concerning the simple folks in rural England. Having seen Elizabeth Risdon on the speaking stage, in "Seven Days' Leave," I could hardly penetrate her make-up in this, although she was equally artistic in Hall Caine's "Manx Man," done on the Isle of Man—the author's son in the cast. All the players are English, but mother love is the same the world over.

* * *

"The Winning of Beatrice," featuring May Allison, with a new leading man in Hale Hamilton, a good-looker, and John Davidson returning to the screen after appearing in the spoken play, villain to the core in this. Baby Ivy Ward will make this picture one to be remembered. A young thing exclaimed: "Haint she cute, and, say, he's just grand!" Whether Hale or John I did not know.

* * *

Bobby Connelly has been making speeches at the Park theater for the Red Cross and incidentally being entertained by admirers. I took him to the Professional Women's Club last luncheon, along with Mrs. Sidney Drew and her clever leading woman, Maidel Turner, and the lad made a big hit with the many fans there. He is more attractive away from the camera and is unspoiled by adulation. He was accompanied by his mother, a comely woman. Then he was taken out to Concord by Manager Soriero to see rehearsals of scenes in "Little Women," being done there under Arthur Ashley's direction for the World Film Company, of which he is still a valued member. Ashley has made a big hit here in "The Man Who Came Back" at the Plymouth theater, and the dear young things who have seen him on the screen are going to the theater to hear his voice, as they did for the Drews, who made a distinct success, and are now back near Broadway to resume picture work. Speaking of the Drews—why "Pay Day"? Of course, we all went, hoping to see it, but one theater canceled the booking and the Park showed it only three days, and then substituted another picture. It is not a credit to these popular players or to the company.

* * *

Mrs. Ayer also gave us last week "Resurrection," splendidly put on by Paramount, reverently pictured, following the story of Tolstoi, to the delight of the class of patrons at this house, which has the call on the Back Bay set, now waking up to the value of the photoplay. Our old friend of the Castle Square theater, John Sainpolis, had a part unlike that usually assigned him, and was most satisfactory. In lighter vein we had that night "Up the Road with Sallie"—some picture, with the effervescent Constance Talmadge in the limelight, compelling close attention, especially when she was speeding with "auntie" down hills and around curves until we held our breath with fear. Good picture, with new plot and twists at the end!

Jack Pickford scores again in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," and for those who did not see and howl over the play with the only Taylor Homes and who are unfamiliar with the mummy stunt, the picture has novelties not seen on the screen this season. A man next me said: "I wonder what the drink was they gave him before the wedding—some dope to last so long!" On the same program at the Exeter I saw "The Doctor and the Woman," a very strong offering, certainly a "Jewel" of a picture, directed by Lois Weber, adapted from Mary Roberts Rinehart's book, "K." This picture was consistent, new in plot, and wonderfully well done.

* * *

"Unclaimed Goods," with Vivian Martin, had a new stunt, shipping a human being as an animal by freight and getting away with it—rather cleverly. Harrison Ford is one of my favorites. He is dependable always and clean-cut. Remember him in "Petticoat Pilot," when he sat down on the fly paper in a Cape Cod "corner grocery?" On the same program Marguerite Clark appeared in "Rich Man, Poor Man," good vehicle for her in all ways. Here we get another young lead of the Ford type in Richard Barthelmess, and Frederick Warde in his first Paramount. These players made the picture a success, as there was little new in any of it.

* * *

"The Seal of Silence," with Earle Williams and Grace Darmond, was seen at the Park, and proved diverting to a degree, with the professional side of the doctor cleverly shown. Glad to see Kate Price back making good.

Unpardonable Procrastination

Plain Facts Showing How Educational Pictures Are Kept from the Schools.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

"PROCRASTINATION is the Thief of Time." This old-time proverb is still true. There is, however, another which may now truthfully be used, entitled "Procrastination is the Thief of Education." Strange though it may seem it is nevertheless true that the greatest hindrance to the use of moving pictures in schools comes from the school principals and county superintendents. Taking them as a whole they are a most reactionary company. Every pioneer in the school use of pictures describes how he had to force his way through opposition, in every case finding himself vindicated in the course he had so violently to take. Some of these successful men have written us, proud of their successes, proud of the advance made in their schools, proud of the advance of their pupils. On the other hand, those who have ventured to put upon paper their slow use of the pictures would not like to see their excuses written on the pages of well-read journals or magazines. In every instance no good reason or cause is advanced, but always and only procrastination—a procrastination pardonable with a person lacking responsibility or leadership, pardonable under circumstances in which either promptitude or haste have no part; but entirely unpardonable when procrastination means the delay of some good. Under these circumstances procrastination becomes criminal and justifies the old-time truth—that to whatever it may truthfully and helpfully be applied procrastination is a thief. Before proving the guilt of the procrastinator let us try to realize the importance of that matter about which such unpardonable, if not guilty, delay is made. We are living in days when it is admitted that moving pictures are an essential. Opinions and debates die in the presence of facts. About facts there can be neither debate nor opinion. Facts are here to be dealt with. Whoever is guilty of debating with them when they concern progress is a pure, common, ordinary reactionaire. These are days of progress and nowhere is progress more required and demanded than in educational matters. Whoever is guilty of delaying the progress of educational matters is encouraging the retention of ignorance, delaying advance and hindering the progress of youth—a most unforgivable offense. There is not a field of endeavor in which the moving picture has not been tried, proved and accepted, with the result that it has become an essential.

In spite of all this there are school and other officials, whose opposition on forgotten grounds and whose prejudice on untenable grounds have been killed by the development of facts, who still drag upon the wheels of progress by the newly adopted method of procrastination, thereby robbing the youth of the country of the best means of education given to them since the discovery of printing. Some enlightened (?) educators put off the use of the pictures "until they are absolutely perfect" or until they are "accompanied by the talking machine" or, again, until they are "pedagogically arranged" or "conform to the school's curriculum." Others sin in waiting "for a more convenient season," or, say some, "until after the war." Of this latter it should be said that the period of the war is the one in which they are most to be desired. Now they can be of tremendous importance to the pupils. This is the very time in which greater haste and anxiety should be displayed to get the pictures installed while they are of such overwhelming importance, the war relating pictures are the greatest educators of the day, and, an up-to-date school principal should be nervously anxious to avoid any further delay which can rob his pupils of the great benefits of such manifold learning powers as are found possible with the pictures in these swift history-making times; to procrastinate now is an offence against the youth of the land, and a fearful dereliction of duty upon the part of those responsible. A strange vindication of the value of the pictures has recently been seen in Greater New York. In the Borough of Brooklyn the "Eagle" provides for weekly current topic talks and uses a current topic bee, which is well known as a contest. In the most recent bee those who failed did so upon topics familiar to those who keep themselves instructed by the very valuable current topics of the screen; these are far superior to the daily paper, in that the intense nature of the information they convey is invaluable, confirming the belief of all patriotic instructors of the American youth that every boy and girl in the land ought to be familiar with them, and whoever hinders them when it is his power to help, is in every respect unworthy of confidence, or trust, or responsibility. Most of the foolish and ignorant oppositions to the best uses of the moving picture have died (as they should) ignominious deaths, above all let us now and here kill that most insidious enemy—PROCRASTINATION.

"The Friendly Bee" (Educational).

HONEY and its makers forms one of the most interesting topics of the day, inasmuch as it is now being used in the treatment of wounds as well as for food. The Ditmars number, entitled "The Friendly Bee," gives us 500 feet of material, in which we are privileged to see the bee at work in its home. Close-ups of the honey and of the hive, and also of young women being instructed in the care of bees are shown. After seeing this picture it is easy to realize the congestion of population in a bee-hive.

"Raising Chickens" (Universal).

In the 75th issue of the Screen Magazine are shown some instructive views on the incubation of eggs, and the rearing of chickens. These views include close-ups of the egg and chick from the first evidences of form and life. This subject is very interesting and is well illustrated in this particular number of the Screen Magazine.

"Harvesting Bananas in Central America" (Universal).

Just how the great bunches of bananas are cut from the trees by the natives of Central America and landed on the ground without injuring the fruit can be seen in the 75th issue of the Screen Magazine. Then we see the harvesters on their way to the storage sheds laden with the fruit. The executioner of the irregular stem is also on hand and as the line passes along he deftly relieves with his long knife each bunch of any irregularity which its stem displays.

"Arms for Democracy's Defenders" (Universal).

The manufacture of pistols forms one of the most interesting subjects of the 75th release of the Screen Magazine. In this picture can be seen the various details of the making of the pistol from the original rough casting from which it is shaped, up to the inspecting of the magazine and final assembling.

"St. Thomas" (Pathe-Post Film Company).

The first of the New York Evening Mail Travel Series. It takes the observer on an intimate trip to the island of St. Thomas, purchased by this country from Denmark. The scenes are both picturesque and highly entertaining. Native life and customs are shown and points of interest are pictured on this former pirate isle, which lies in the North Caribbean Sea. The coal-carriers at labor makes an excellent feature.

"Winter Scenes in Southern France" (Beacon).

A pleasing series of views showing Southern France in its winter coat were shown at the Rialto theater during the week of May 25. These views included farm homes, showing the natives at their simple tasks, bridges, most of which have but one span, an old and picturesque water mill, mountain women in the Pyrenees doing their washing in the cold mountain streams.

"The Heart of Mexico" (Educational).

Mexico City is the particular portion of the land of our southern border which is shown us in the first of the series of pictures being released by the Educational Films Corporation of America entitled "Mexico Today." It opens with views showing the busy life of the Central Plaza, followed by a panoramic view of the city and the volcanos which stand guard over the valley. Chapultepec Park is another point of interest shown, and also the Paseo de la Reforma, the residential section where live the city's wealthiest residents. Independence monument, President Carranza's home, the ruins of the home of the late President Madero, the Citadel and other interesting features are included in the picture. This series is running at the Rivoli theater, New York City.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 5" (Pathe).

Hundreds of Britain's fishermen and their women-folk are shown in this informing number at the work of preparing nets and electrical cables for protecting sea travel in the submarine zone. Scenes are also pictured on board "drifters," mine-layers and mine-sweepers, which have played so important a part in the war. This entire number contains matter that will be of absorbing interest to everyone. It is an extremely good instalment.

"Character Analysis, No. 2" (Paramount-Bray).

Quite the most interesting series that has appeared in connection with the Pictograph is "Character Analysis." This time it deals with the facial features. By means of a chart and the faces of prominent personages the various evidences of good or bad are noted. Such men as President Wilson, General Foch, General Pershing, Theodore Roosevelt and General Haig are shown. In contradistinction to these splendid types of manhood the face of the beast Von Hindenburg is shown and analyzed.

"The Science of Weather Prediction" (Paramount-Bray).

Although there are many who maintain that weather prediction is more a matter of guess work than real knowledge, the 123d release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph shows conclusively that when the report goes out from the Weather Bureau that rain is in order for the following day, rain falls in ninety per cent. of the cases.

Perched more than four hundred feet above the street in a tower above one of New York's skyscrapers the "weather man," surrounded by all manner of complex instruments, watches day and night the automatically registered records that are made, each on long strips of paper running through the machines, and twice each day his reports are flashed to every paper and post office in the country.

The weather man has turned science to good account and his instruments are marvels of ingenuity and precision. One of them, the hygrometer, tells by the shrinking or expanding of a hair, whether there will be rain or sunshine, while another, the anemometer, catches every stray breeze, registers its velocity and at the end of the day leaves a written report of the direction and speed of the wind for the preceeding twenty-four hours.

Other devices, which record rain fall, hours of sunshine and darkness and in fact every feature of the weather changes, make the Weather Bureau a place of extreme interest.

Progress in Animated Drawing

Max Fleischer of Bray Studios Gives Startling Demonstration of Pen Plus Screen.

ONE of the most remarkable evidences of what the animated drawing has to offer in the way of realism is demonstrated in a simple bit of pen work by Max Fleischer in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 123. This work is entitled, "Out of the Inkwell," and is nothing more than a pen drawing of a clown performing some funny stunts; but the animation of said drawing is so remarkable that the movements of the figure are as smooth and easy as those of the human body. In a fade-out which finishes the cartoon the clown continues to wave his farewell until only the tips of his fingers are visible.

We would judge that one of the secrets of the realism of this work is a matter of a greater number of drawings to the foot of film than usual. After witnessing such an exhibition of artistic ingenuity it is hard to predict just what splendid future is in store for the animated drawing. Considerable has been accomplished already in an educational way with the animated drawing, and who knows to what instructional uses it may yet be put.

"The Story of Old Glory"

Strand Presents in Pictured Form History of American Flag —Especially Well Suited to School Curriculum.

E. G. LUTZ, 1110 Park avenue, New York City, is responsible for the arrangement and photographing of "The Story of Old Glory," which was presented at the Strand theater during the week of May 26 in commemoration of Memorial Day. This picture, which is in one reel, is particularly interesting by reason of its apparently accurate recording of historical facts connected with the development of our flag from the period of the three original States, New York, Virginia and Massachusetts. A map thrown on the screen at intervals keeps us acquainted with the order in which the stars representing the States were added to the flag until we come finally to a full explanation of the meaning of the 48 stars and the 13 stripes of "Old Glory" as she flies today.

Schools as well as theaters should welcome this clearly defined story of the national flag.

Gaumont Makes Coal Picture

Industrial Department of the Gaumont Company Makes Two-Part Production on Fuel Situation.

THE Industrial Department of the Gaumont Company has just made, in cooperation with the National Coal Association, a two-reel motion picture called "A Day in the Coal Fields." This picture, which opens with beautifully picturesque scenes in the world's greatest coal fields, shows the complete operation of mining coal, including grading, loading and shipping. It also draws attention to the necessity for a continuous supply of coal cars to insure a reasonable production cost. The picture is completed with a realistic animated drawing which impresses upon everyone that Uncle Sam says, "Buy your coal now!"

This picture will be shown not only to all coal operatives, but will be widely distributed and exhibited to users of coal all over the United States.

"Nations at War"

Newly Arranged Patriotic Feature Presenting History of the War Contains Eight Reels Covering Scenes at Home and Abroad.

ONE of the latest arrangements of scenes pertaining to the present war have been grouped into eight reels of film covering in all about 7,500 feet, by Joseph L. Dunham, Room 702, 320 Fifth avenue, New York City. These pictures, it is said, were exhibited abroad previous to their being brought to this country, and it is further claimed for them that they are among the best pictures from the scenes of battle that have been presented. W. J. Hanley is representing this feature in the capacity of booking agent, and has been booking towns along the Hudson prior to entering New England for an extended tour. According to information received these pictures have been passed by the Committee on Public Information at Washington, D. C., by the British, French and Italian consulates, and by the National Board of Censors.

These pictures have been brought up to date and have been given a more emphatic patriotic flavor by the use of scenes showing the activities of preparation on this side of the water, closing with a newspaper quotation lauding the work of the American soldiers at Cantigny.

Further information concerning these pictures can be had by communicating with Mr. Dunham.

Items of Interest.

Strand specials during the week of May 26 included, in addition to "The Story of Old Glory," the first instalment of the Bob Bakker animal pictures, entitled "Capturing Wild Mountain Lions Single-Handed." At each performance this was accompanied by an interesting talk by Mr. Bakker, in which he further illuminated the scenes of the picture. The fifth of the Outing-Chester series, entitled "A Jungle Joy Ride," which takes us through the wilderness of British Guiana.

* * *

The Rialto included in its Animated Magazines during the week of May 26 several unusually interesting features. Among these were "Educated Seals," "War Dogs," "A Military Horse Show."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Public Spirit.

SEVERAL years ago we began to urge Exhibitors to make themselves a part of the business and public life of their town or section. We pointed out that it was time for the Exhibitor to become something more than the man who runs the picture theater. Many Exhibitors have followed this advice and have raised themselves to positions of importance in their localities. No one man has done more in this respect than George A. Bleich of Owensboro, Ky. When the first Liberty Loan drive was started Mr. Bleich was on the committee. He helped the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. raise money. He was one of the solid citizens of the town to whom people turned when they wanted things done and done right. He was not a booster merely from motives of policy, or he never would have reached the position he now enjoys. He was a booster because he was built that way. And the other day the local paper came out with this editorial tribute:

NO. THIS IS NOT PAID PUBLICITY.

> We have had it in mind for some time to say something nice about George Bleich, the genial and hustling theatrical manager, but he is so modest that we have up to this time spared his blushes. Owensboro has not a more public spirited citizen in all her borders than George Bleich. If there is any soliciting to be done of funds for public enterprises, we all with one accord say: "Let George do it." And he is just as clever in performing these little tasks as we are in asking him to do them.
> Mr. Bleich is the manager of all the amusement places in the city. This is his means of making a living. But when there is a patriotic or educational function that needs a hall, he is always ready to allow the use of his halls. Frequently this is done at a financial sacrifice. Only yesterday the May festival of the pupils of the public schools for the benefit of the Junior Red Cross was carried out. It was necessary to have an exhibition hall, and there was no place fitted for it except the Grand. Manager Bleich had a musical comedy there all week, and yesterday was matinee day. But Manager Bleich and the manager of the company gave way in order that the children might have their play, and Bleich didn't charge them a cent for it. You don't find many playhouse managers like that.
> But it is all in the day's work. Bleich is not living in this town for the money he can make out of it. He knows that he is going to make a living, and at the same time he can be doing good to all around him.
> In addition to this being an absolutely free notice, George hasn't even heard about it yet.

That sort of thing counts. People seeing this editorial will have a greater respect for Mr. Bleich and for the moving pictures with which his name is connected. Mr. Bleich started with one house. Now he has three. He controls the amusements of the town, and he is one of the leaders of the town's business affairs. His connection with the pictures gives them a solidity in the minds of the readers. They look upon pictures with increased respect. Mr. Bleich did not donate his house to get a press notice, but he got a press notice that could not be purchased by donating the house. Train yourself to work along the same lines, and train yourself to mean it. To be effective you must be sincere.

Not the Way.

A private correspondent remarks that the other day he went to see a new Pickford release, and between the second and third parts a Liberty Loan rally was held, "which rather interrupted the continuity." This is not the right way. It is a patriotic duty to open your house to the four-minute men, the loan workers or any others who seek, with proper authority, to advance the aims of the Government, and it is up to the individual exhibitor to supplement their efforts, but primarily the picture theater is a place where entertainment is sold, and not even a Liberty Loan speech should be permitted to break in on the chief feature, or presently there will be no audience to talk to. The idea is probably that the audience will rush out at the close of the feature and not remain to be talked to, but this does not hold good argument. Let the speaker get out and hold the audience before they have a chance to slip away. It can be done.

Toledo Talks Back.

C. P. Tefft, of the Toledo Times, writes relative to the comment on the Toledo advertisements shown in the issue for April 13. He says in part:

> I, personally, write all the ads that appear in the Toledo Times for the theaters which you criticized. I, therefore, know the conditions that exist, and know how hard it is to secure good illustrations for these advertisements. Take for instance the Temple ad in "Scandal." This is a Selznick picture, and the Temple theater had but four stills of this show of which the two appearing in the "Scandal" ad are the best. In the case of "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp" they had a few stills, but none that would make up well in an ad. The lower cut in this ad also came with the still photograph on "Jack and the Beanstalk," which was showed some time previous to "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp." It is not one time in a dozen that we are able to secure a picture that tells the story as well as the illustration used in the "Auction Block." You must remember the conditions out here are a little different than in New York, where the exhibitors can secure the stills which they need from the main office of the producer.
> A little educational plan to the producer telling him what photographs the exhibitor should have in order that he may advertise the producer's picture and thereby put it over in a successful way both from the appearance of his advertising and from a box office standpoint might do a world of good for the exhibitors who have the same conditions to contend with as the local motion picture man.
> I am writing this letter so you may know what we have to contend with in trying to write advertising for the local motion picture exhibitors. If you will inquire of Manager Gerstle, of Loew's Valentine; Mr. Zorn, of the Temple theater, or Mr. Horater, of the Alhambra, you will be able to verify these facts.

"A little educational plan" to the producer will not do a bit of good. He has been talked to and talked to in the trade papers and out of them, and the average manufacturer of motion pictures is turning out just as rotten stills today as were turned out ten years ago, and for the same reason that the average manufacturer doesn't know his business and is afraid to talk back to those whom he thinks does. He tells his press man to get good stills. If his press man happens to be a live wire he tells the directors to turn in better stills, the director tells his camera man, and they individually and collectively tell the dear boss to go to Tophet, and the boss doesn't talk back because he's afraid of them. With most companies, and this goes for the biggest as well as the smallest, the good still picture is an accident and not a matter of design. Sometimes the exhibitor can get no stills at all; particularly those houses further West, and conditions are worse in some exchanges than others. But the point is that the advertisement does not HAVE to carry a still. It does not HAVE to be a drawn design. If proper stills are lacking—and they will be so long as present conditions continue—why not use a good type display in preference to a meaningless cut that takes space and gives no return? If Mr. Tefft writes the copy for all the advertisements he must have his hands full. It's bad enough to have to write the copy for one house, with such aids as the average exchange affords.

A Revolutionary Poster.

The revival of "The Still Alarm" by the Selig Company brings to the fore again a historic poster, for the paper issued for the state rights proposition duplicates the paper used for the original play some thirty years ago, and old timers will remember the sensation this striking paper caused in London when the play was first shown there. It was so superior to the best English work of that time that for the first few weeks people stood before the boards admiring the paper, and the improvement in English show print paper may be said to date from that time, for it set a new standard across the water. It still stands up with the best of the paper of today on either side of the water.

The Rivoli Booklet.

Someone—we suppose it is Hamish McLaurin—has gotten out a booklet on the Rivoli, reproducing a story in the New York Post. It is one of the best examples of efficient publicity we have seen in some time, and it is the more efficient in that it does not smear the house name over every page. You read with interest the entire story, and do not come to the name of the house or even Rothapfel until the very end of the story. A page announcement of the theater follows, and that is all. In typography and preparation alike it is a model.

Expanding.

Walter Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., is using special folders and booklets in addition to his model six-page folder. We have already spoken of his special work for the Chapin films, and now he comes out with a neat four-page for "The Blue Bird." If you pay a special rental for a special film it pays to add a couple of dollars for special advertising, and if you can, with a small investment, make a special of some regular priced attraction, it pays even more.

We Don't Like It.

The Fenray theater, Martins Ferry, West Virginia, has recently increased the size of its program to a 7 by 10. They should do better with the larger page, but we confess that we do not like the appearance of the new sheet as well as we did the old. The choice of type is not so good, being largely the old style of face on a larger page, and the absence of rules gives the pages a jumbled effect. The reproduction shows the two middle pages. Those dot leaders cannot replace a well defined rule.

Wastes No Space.

The Hill theater, Newark, N. J., believes in wasting no space. Its four-by-six program is not only closely printed in the proper spaces, but there are legends on all four sides of the type page, and we think they would print on the edge of the sheets were there sufficient thickness. The Hill is a five and ten-cent house and perhaps plays to a patronage that is impressed by the crowded program, but we think that even here a more open composition would be appreciated.

Starting On Its Third.

The Regent theater, Montreal, is now in its third year, having passed the second milestone on March 8. The Regent is a high class house, in the residential section, and makes appeal to the better class of patron, with a well chosen program as a complement to the films. A specially good program was arranged for the anniversary, with a double orchestra and several soloists. It was made a real occasion, and not merely an advertisement unbacked by action. The program—a four-pager—was nicely laid out, but presents no novelty in make-up. The Regent is the type of house that helps the business generally. May it long continue!

An Anzac Folder.

Phil Hayward, of the Strand, Auckland, New Zealand, sends in some more of his clever house organs, and this time gives us a couple we can reproduce. The pages are 5½ by 8¾ and form a six page railroad style. The front form gives a page with portrait cut and a double page for the current week's attraction. This permits the use of a really well-planned display with cuts as well as type, and gives a better layout than would two single pages. The example shown was printed in a two-tone green-to-brown ink. The inside form has three regular pages with some house talk and enough miscellaneous matter to take the curse off and get it read all the way through. The reproduction shows the folder for "The Auction Block" and gives about half the space to that attraction, with some film chat. Mr. Hayward doesn't like the stock the organs are printed upon, but realizes that he is lucky to get any sort of print paper with the war going on. He sends in a three elevens from the Sunday paper on "The Auction Block": thirty-three inches at $1.25 an inch. The main attractor is the cut of the lead made familiar through its very general use over here, but in this advertisement a circle has been drawn in into which project a hand holding an auctioneer's gavel and other hands offering coin and bills for the victim. The text falls below. The original drawing is in line work with the figure in half tone. It is not precisely artistic, but it is vigorous and compelling, which counts for more. Mr. Hayward is also using the "We dare you to show this to your wife" sealed envelope, worked some years ago over here. The idea is in Picture Theater Advertising, but if you have not your copy yet, the idea is merely to give out sealed envelopes printed across the face (preferably in reproducer typewriting), "We dare you to give this to your wife." Mr. Hayward improved this by adding in a fine line below, "If you haven't a wife, give it to someone else's." But better still, on the flap, as the recipient starts to open the envelope, is printed, "Now then, play the Game!" Inside there is merely an invitation to the better half to visit the Strand to see the picture named. It is an old idea, but it is still a good one.

Still Likes Throwaways.

Just to show that he still likes throwaways, Steve Farrar sends in a whole bunch of them, and we note that below each large "Tonight" there follows the day and date. You can't go wrong with Steve on dates. He knows it pays to use that extra line, just as he knows he can reach some people to the best advantage with newspaper publicity and others with the cheaper form. He uses both and gets both. That's Steve in a nutshell. He goes after all the business there is in town, and he knows that to do so he will have to use the two mediums.

A Joke.

In a certain town a new and fine house was recently opened. It opened with a feature and five acts of vaudeville, and the other managers tore their hair. Pretty soon it brought in a 10-20-30 show, and charged 15-25-50; half the house being the latter price, and the once proud kings tore their hair some more. They cannot seem to realize with glee that a house with fluctuating prices and motion picture-vaudeville is builded upon the sands even if those sands do happen to be on Main street.

Doubled Up.

For Marguerite Clarke in the "Seven Swans," John C. Green, of on the front would have greatly helped the display, and it could have been gained with no additional cost; indeed, there would have been a saving, both on the make-ready and the number of impressions. On a run of five thousand, for example, but ten thousand impressions would have been charged instead of fifteen thousand.

Whitcombe Philosophy.

Here are a couple of bits by Philip Wright Whitcombe from late London Triangle booklets:

GIVE YOUR CINEMA A DISTINCT "PERSONALITY."

Decide on a distinct tone for your theater. Keep to it. Make attendants, advertising, decorations all harmonize with it.

But even when you've seen, chosen and booked the best films your job isn't done.

You must show the best films in the best way.

Then your cinema will be one of the best liked and you will make best profits.

There is a lot to that last paragraph. It is not sufficient merely to have the best subjects. You must give them the best projection in the best surroundings if you would clean up.

Ruff Stuff.

Ralph Ruffner wants to know what we think of advertisements with the signature top and bottom, and sends in an example to show what he means. The sample is four columns wide, full length of the page.

We think that a smaller signature at the bottom might look well, but to box in top and bottom with a signature 2½ inches deep is a little too heavy. A page-deep advertisement is sufficiently well held together by its size. It has to fight nothing. A top and bottom signature would work better in a half page or less where there are other heavy ads to be met. Then we would use the two cuts, not quite so high, and run a six or even a twelve point rule down the sides to hold them together. Generally speaking, however, we think that the double signature is a waste of space. A single signature, properly placed, will do all that is necessary, and if a second is used for a tailpiece it need not be as large as that at the top. The cut for "Playing the Game" carries Gordon H. Fullerton's trade mark; an arrow piercing "100 per cent.," for Ruff finds himself picking about the same stuff that Fullerton uses, and so he buys the mats and saves money. Trained advertising men are apt to hit upon the same cut as being the best attractor, and we are surprised that there is not a greater interchange of ideas. We like the smaller advertisement for "Bunker Bean" much better than the Ray advertisement. The cut is really typical of the picture and the wording is good selling talk. Ruff sends in another photograph of his usherettes. Instead of loading them down with fifteen dollars' worth of near-gold lace he has dressed them in neat little house dresses of gingham. Each girl has two dresses, to provide for frequent laundering and Ruff thinks that the effect is to give one a feeling of ease to the patron. There is a lot in this. The stiff ushers at the New York Rialto have always oppressed us, just as the general atmosphere of the house is oppressive. Informality in dressing, if it still makes for uniformity and effect, is much to be preferred. But Ruff adds that they use good quality dresses, that keep on looking good after their first bath.

Program Copy.

L. W. Carroll, who used to have a house at Lancaster, N. H., is now with the General Film's Bangor branch. He sends in a couple of pieces of copy prepared by W. P. Sherburne, of Dover, Maine, for Central Hall. One is straight text, and reads:

> The battle for Democracy must be as hard-fought on American soil as in the front-line trenches. America's boys—our boys—are over in France giving all. They can't win the war alone. War is a 50-50 proposition. A tremendous responsibility is ours. The greatest of all is the folks at home—the fathers, the mothers, the workers, all of us—must be kept in the right frame of mind. The motion picture exhibitor must do his part. President Wilson has said so. General Pershing has said so. It is just as important to project the right sort of picture as to fire the right sort of cartridges.

This is used both on a throwaway and also on a neat card program for a Belfast house managed by George C. Thompson, with the text and house name on one side and the weekly program on the other. The second piece of copy is a nonsense throwaway that runs:

$5 REWARD.

LOST. A small boy about the size of a man, barefooted, with his father's shoes on. Hungry, with a loaf of bread in his pocket. When last heard of he was sweeping the sun off the roof of Central Hall to get the price of admission to the pictures.

This is sufficiently idiotic to attract attention, and played up in the regular reward style of throwaway will bring business in small towns and perhaps the larger ones as well. Stuff like that will be passed from hand to hand where more serious argument will be read by the recipient and thrown down.

Getting the Talk.

The publicity man for "The Eagle's Eye" tells how A. J. Mack, of the Hill theater, Newark, made a patriotic talk after each showing of "The Eagle's Eye," dwelling on the spy menace and urging his hearers to talk to their neighbors about it. Of course they did, and they could not very well talk without mentioning the Hill, and the house came in for a good deal of word-of-mouth advertisement that beats the skin off newspaper advertising. The scheme will work with other attractions, but this serial lends itself particularly well to the idea.

Imagination.

THIRTY years ago visitors to to the National Capital will recall the Potomac Flats, an oozy, odorous mudbank between the harbor channel and the channel of the river almost directly back of the Executive Mansion. It was a breeder of malaria conditions and a thing hideously ugly. Most persons saw only the mudbank until someone with more imagination than the rest saw the possibilities of this waste swamp. The river needed dredging. The liquid mud pumped up was drained onto the flats until high land was made. The channel was dredged to a proper depth and the flats became the now beautiful Potomac Park. Bids were asked for dredging a certain portion of the Delaware River. One bidder made a price so much lower than the rest that he was given the contract. He dredged onto a tract of swamp he purchased instead of carrying away the material by scows. He made a profit on the dredging operation and found himself possessed of an amusement park for which he paid swamp land prices. Others saw only the dredging job. He saw the possibilities. He had imagination to see beyond the immediate work. It is the same way with plot getting and development. Learn to see beyond the immediate idea. Most persons will see in a story only the plot they have imagined. The successful writer may see something so wholly different that the original plot is not used at all; it is merely the stepping stone to something better. This quality of imagination is inherent, but it must be trained and developed to be of value, and some who do not realize that they possess imagination might, with care, develop into brilliant thinkers along one line or another. But to achieve the proper stage of imagination, the imagination must be constantly employed, and not merely brought into use when a plot is needed. Imagination is not a thing to be kept at beck and call. It must be given free rein. It cannot merely be used when ideas are wanted. It must be permitted to bring ideas even at inopportune moments. Learn to exercise the imagination at all opportunities and in time imagination will require no effort. If you are on a street car, look at the different people. Try to weave stories around them. One man may have a scar on his cheek. It may have been the result of football playing, but try to weave a romance around the scar. Another may be lame. Make a story about that. They will not be very good stories at first, but as time passes you will find that your imaginary histories will become more and more vivid. Presently you will have your imagination so trained that the slightest happening will start a train of romance that, with development, which is merely an intensification of the imagination intelligently applied, you will have a worth while story. But remember that the imagination must be constantly employed or it will grow stale. You must keep in the habit of thinking stories or you will be under the necessity of again learning to think them. Story writing is not wholly a matter of inspiration, however. It is inspiration systematized to business-like methods. That is the thing that many would-be writers do not realize. They seek to run upon imagination alone and not upon an imagination trained to do its work properly. Train your imagination to think along the right lines or you will get much chaff with your grain and are liable to overlook the grain.

The Surest Way.

For a great many years now we have been listening to authors tell how they did it, and there seems to be one method that gives the best results. This is the analysis of the story; the study of the film upon the screen. This does not mean the viewing of the picture and the formation of snap judgment. It means the close study of a subject through several viewings and then a dissection of the good and bad points. Several writers have reduced the film plays to what they imagine the synopsis to have been. Some have done it from memory and others have used shorthand. One man got a job as usher so that he could see the plays repeatedly. But in the end it all gets down to this one point: The student has learned how to produce an effect through screened action. He sees what makes audiences laugh and cry, grow sympathetic or indignant. He studies the effect of the picture upon the spectator until he knows how to produce those same effects himself, not through the use of the same action, but by application of the same methods. He knows that a certain style of scene should bring a laugh and another create sympathy. He knows how to build his play. He cannot show much of this through the synopsis only, but even here he can line his action to get practically the desired effect, because he knows how it should be done. It is better for the student to see one play six times than six plays once. The trouble is that the average student makes his studies the excuse for seeing plays rather than for their study. He wants to see as many plays as possible rather than one play as many times as possible. One dramatic writer has told how he used to see the same play night after night in order to see just how to gain an effect. It is the same with the photoplay. See the same production as often as possible and study the handling of the effective scenes from every angle. Do not see a play once and form a "snap judgment. Verify your deductions through repeated viewings. It is impossible to do proper analysis from one viewing. In these days of two and three day runs it is possible to make a more intimate study of the play than when there was a daily change of program. Nothing will advance your knowledge further than the repeated viewings of some good play. For every author who has arrived at success through some other means there are ten who have studied effects, and those who think they have found some other road to success will find that in the end their different methods merely arrive at a study of cause and effect through some other means. You must know how to move your audience just as surely as the painter knows that to blend certain colors will give certain effects. Until then you are writing by guesswork and you are bound to guess wrong most of the time. Know why you do a thing instead of stumbling upon it by accident and you will be able to repeat.

Letting It Wait.

We know a man who has an idea he wants to write, but he cannot find the time to give it proper attention, and so he is letting it wait until he can do it properly. He is not going to dash it off some night instead of getting his proper sleep. He is not going to write it piecemeal as a few spare minutes offer. He knows that he will stand no chance of making a good synopsis until he gets the time to write it deliberately and properly. He needs the money his story will probably bring, but he is willing to wait until he can present his story in such an attractive form that it will stand a proper chance of selling. He knows that to do poor work on the synopsis will spoil his chance of making a sale now or later on, and so he is waiting until he can offer it in its best form. There are a few authors like that, but not enough. Too many get the story down in an incomplete form and expect the editor to supply the missing inspiration. It is not being done now, and it is far better until you can get the inspiration yourself, and you have full inspiration only under proper writing conditions.

Mechanical Work.

If you cannot take an interest in your story, how can you hope to interest others? So many stories sound as though they had been ground out by a tired brain. There might be the germ of an idea there, but the idea has not been expanded into a plot. The synopsis reads as though the author had striven to get the story out of the way in order that he might tackle the next one and make up in quantity what his ideas lacked in quality. Even in these days of slow markets the story really above the average will be bought, but it must be above the average, and the standard is not what shows on the screen, but what shows on the script before the director gets a chance to spoil it. Do not put a story out until you are certain that it stands a chance. Do not even undertake to make a final draft until you have become so engrossed in it that you simply must write it or lose sleep. If you merely grind out your material you will produce a labored script that will tire the editor to read it just as it tired you to write it. It will not sell, and it may get you a reputation for writing poor plots. Wait until you can see the story clearly. The plot that seems flat to you today may seem better than usual if you will put it away for a few weeks and take it up fresh. Give yourself a chance to partly forget it and it will seem new to you when you take it up. You cannot eat the same dinner day after day. You seek a variety in food. In the same way, if you stick to a story too long you are bound to lose your enthusiasm. When you do, drop that story and give it a chance to freshen up, meanwhile giving your attention to some other item in your literary menu.

Hold on to the Dead Ones.

Do not throw away a story because it seems to be of a type gone out of fashion. Hold the idea until the fashions change again. The fashions keep changing, and the story that is hopelessly out of date may be the very type most in demand three years from now. It is a bad plan to throw away any manuscript idea. Keep it, and keep it where you can see it now and then. You never can tell when a crude melodrama and your immediate frame of mind will work into a charming heart-interest story. You may have read the same idea dozens of times before without getting an idea from it, but sooner or later you will get a suggestion that may lead to a far better story. For this reason it is well to keep your suggestions in such a form that you can handle them easily and with the least possible wear and tear. If you cannot afford the loose-leaf system you can at least afford a five-cent paper clip of the spring type, and with a stiff pasteboard backing you will have a good enough "book" to serve your purpose. Make a point of reading all your old ideas at least once every month or six weeks, selecting some day when you are not brain-tired and are at peace with all the world. You will find that it pays.

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars- and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

T is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat boklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Non-Citizen and Enemy Alien Projectionists.

It has been suggested to this department by a Federal investigator that the matter of non-citizen and enemy alien projectionists is one well deserving of our attention. That this is true is proven by the fact that Federal investigators have already discovered that there are some non-citizen and even enemy alien projectionists working in the projection rooms of Greater New York City.

This is a matter which should be checked up immediately and the license of every man who cannot show proper Federal registration card should be revoked forthwith. This for several reasons. The very fact that a man carries a license card sealed with the seal of New York City, or any other city or any state, is presumptive evidence that he is "allright." Personally I know it would not occur to me to question the citizenship of a man holding a proper license, evidenced by a card sealed by, let us say, the State of Massachusetts. This feature in itself is distinctly bad in times such as these, when the enemy guns are today working havoc just off our coast, and hundreds of thousands of our boys are facing the Hun in France. Personally I am not inclined to be lenient with or look with any but a cold, fishy eye, upon the non-citizen projectionist when, however improbable, it is entirely possible that a shell may drop down on the roof of my domicile as I write this, blow a perfectly good roof to smithereens and reduce me to small and widely scattered fragments. These are war times, and the chap who does not want to become a citizen should, in my humble opinion, be led down to the shore of the Atlantic and invited to swim back to where he came from, said invitation to be backed with a cocked, hair-trigger smoke wagon, aimed straight at his most vital spot. I was agin the war before we got into it, but we're in it now, and the time has arrived to cut out all foolishness, get down to hard-pan and use every shred of effort we have to WIN, and one bit of effort is the elimination of the non-citizen and enemy alien. There is no darned excuse for them. The non-citizen ones may mean no harm, but, if so, lettum prove it by the speed they show in eliminating the objection. As to the enemy alien, why the sooner we put every blasted one of them in confinement the better for us. We are at WAR, gentlemen, and war isn't refined tiddle winks or anything like that. It is just plain, simple hell, as the German has so ably demonstrated by his fiendish treatment of women, children, Red Cross nurses and helpless prisoners.

But to get back to our subject: It has been found by Federal investigators that in at least one case a New York City projectionist had no Federal registration card, claiming he was not yet 21 years of age. Inasmuch as New York law prohibits the licensing of any one under 21, he was immediately removed. It later developed he was an enemy alien and he was interned.

It is not only wrong in principle to have the places of our loyal men, drafted into the army or navy, filled by non-citizens, who may even be enemy aliens, but it is also dangerous to have men who may be enemy aliens in such positions. They might, under some circumstances, do serious damage and cause a lot of trouble.

The Department is already working with the Federal Government and if it be possible I would respectfully suggest that steps be immediately taken to revoke the license of every projectionist in Greater New York City who cannot produce a Federal registration card, and that the same action be extended all over the country, modified only by the fact that in some places men of less than 21 are permitted to project pictures. Under this condition those under age should be made to prove their citizenship by other means. The motion picture industry has no room for, and cannot, at this time, afford to harbor any other than loyal citizens of these United States of America, excepting, of course, citizens of France, the British Empire, Italy and our other allies. The one I'm after is the Enemy, and I'm after him good and strong. I devotedly wish he, the enemy, had just one neck, and I was within reach of it with a good, sharp axe.

From New Zealand.

Lesley W. Fowler, Hastings, Hawkes Bay, New Zealand, write interestingly and at some length, with regard to various matters. Says food waste and profiteering go merrily on over there, and that our methods of setting down on those things excite admiration among the few who know. He expresses surprise that United States newspapers have not cultivated the New Zealand field. Says the United States and its people are much misunderstood in New Zealand and Australia. Says the best war illustrations he has seen have appeared in the New York papers. Says my comment on his last letter was re-printed in New Zealand daily papers. Novelties in connection with theater advertising, such as film cartoons, are quite unknown there. Says there is a field for what they call "Cute Yank notions." He then continues:

> Since my last letter the Powers and Simplex are doing well in the machine market, and they tell me shipments are coming forward very well now. But the prices ($500.00 to $600.00) are too high for small country shows, which are constantly on the lookout for second-hand projectors at $150.00 to $200.00. (Might be a field there for Power's No. Six.—Ed.) The Metro films, I neglected to say in former letter, are extremely popular here. Neither "Mr. Slacker" or "Draft 258" yet released here. And now here is something for the National Carbon Company. Several of us have tried the one-inch positive on 60 and 75 volts (Presumably meaning a 60 or 75 volt arc.—Ed.) and have turned them down. We ascribe the lack of popularity to the fact that the core is so much smaller than that of other makes. The bottom carbon is "bonsor," which means real good. (Wonder if he means the Silver Tip?—Ed). Would the National people let us try a carbon with a larger core?
> I had a resistance with five rows of coils in series, and seven series, with a switch for each series. On a 90-volt supply this gave me 9 amperes per series. With all seven series cut in this gave me 65 amperes. Wanted to get the same amperage at 65 volts. Consulted some theorists, who said: "Add more wire." Under practical test, however, I had to cut out three coils on each of five series, and four each on the other two, making a difference of twelve coils. (He says "wires" where I have used the word "coils," but think he must mean wire coils.—Ed.). Would never have imagined that 25 volts less would have meant such a large reduction in quantity of wire. In closing let me add just a word of praise for the splendid topical gazettes your film firms are turning out.

As to the larger core, I will refer the matter to the National, but believe your objection is not well founded. The core in a projection carbon is placed there merely to stabilize the arc. It accomplishes this by supplying a comparatively large quantity of gas, as compared to a similar area of surrounding carbon, and a gas of different quality, having greater conductivity. Having accomplished the stabilization of the arc there is nothing else the core can do, and anything above the core area necessary to accomplish the desired result is objectionable, because every bit of added gas makes for flaming and light absorption; the first named preventing the bringing of the arc as close as it should be to the lens. The National has a core of ample dimensions to accomplish reasonable stablization of the arc. True, a larger core might possibly make the arc somewhat easier to handle, but if so it would, I think, be at the expense of efficiency. If I am in error in my setting forth of the case let some carbon manufacturer correct me. As to your resistance problem, it seems to me you set up an electrical impossibility. You might lower the arc voltage by reducing resistance (by eliminating coils you, of course, reduce resistance), but you would at the same time very greatly increase amperage, and your proposition was to lower arc voltage, with amperage remaining stationary. I do not myself just know what would happen to the arc voltage if you cut out all that resistance, but it is a cinch that as you increase amperage you would have to increase arc length in order to maintain satisfactory projection light conditions. It really seems to me that, whereas you may have lowered arc voltage, with a given arc length, by increasing amperage, still as soon as you increased arc length to what it should be with the new amperage, you would have about the same voltage you had before. I have never actually made any such experiment, but will ask the National when I write them about the other matter, to test the thing out and report results. You will doubtless hear from the National direct.

Answered the Last Call.

Fred Knoll, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, sends in bad news. He says:

> Have just finished reading the letter Mr. Olson, late projectionist of the Strand theater, this city, wrote you (May 18 issue.—Ed.), and wish to say that Mr. Olson was a high-class workman in every respect. I am, however, sorry to record that some weeks ago he answered the Last Call and passed into the Great Beyond. Pneumonia was the cause.

I am now working in the place his death left vacant, and will say I never, in all my experience, saw two machines in better condition than those formerly handled by Mr. Olson. I also fully endorse his good opinion of the manager of this theater. There could not possibly be a better manager as to repairs and projection speed. And now for a trouble I am having. When I strike the second arc in changing over the one operating almost goes out,, while the second one takes about three minutes to get up to normal brilliancy. Have a Fort Wayne motor generator set. Use 40 amperes with a fifty-volt arc. Am using ⅝-inch cored upper carbon and same below. Can you advise as to what is wrong?

I am sorry indeed to hear of Brother Olson's death. But after all, he has merely set forward a little in advance along the path you and I, and all of us must very soon travel.

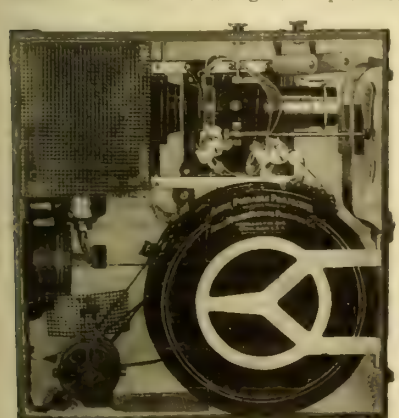
Would advise, first of all, that you use a solid carbon below, either Silver Tip or Holdark. Get a few of each from your dealer and try them out. As to the motor generator trouble, you have not set forth one very important item, viz.: capacity of the set. I suspect you have a 35-ampere set, which is operating normally at 40. It should work for a short time at 100 per cent. overload, or 70 amperes, and might work for, say three minutes, at 80 amperes. However, it is quite possible that something is wrong, which makes it very slow to pick up on such heavy overload. I could name a number of things which might cause this, but on the whole think it better to refer your letter direct to the Fort Wayne folks for attention. You will hear from them long before this letter is published. My compliments to your manager. He must be a member in good standing in the Reg'lar Feller's Club.

Acme Motion Picture Projector.

President H. T. Edwards and our old friend J. H. Hallberg of the United Theater Equipment Corporation have been doing so much blowing about the Acme Portable Projector that it was with considerable degree of curiosity I visited the factory where it is made, over in the Windy City by the Lake.

The machine is made by the Acme Motion Picture Projector Company, and is the invention of O. J. Holmes and L. B. Larsen. While at the factory I had the privilege of meeting C. M. Swan, O. J. Holmes and L. B. Larsen of the company, all of them energetic business men, and gentlemen whom I am glad to add to my list of friends.

The Acme factory is on the Northwest Side in Chicago, and is still somewhat in the state of building. The company's present difficulties consist principally in getting out enough machines to satisfy the demand. The Acme is contained in a substantial wooden case, lined inside with sheet asbestos and outside with imitation leather. The case is 17 inches by 18 inches by 7¾ inches in size, made in the form of a suitcase. In the lower left hand corner, as will be seen by the illustration, is the driving motor (which is universal, and may therefore be used either on alternating or direct current) on the top of which, behind a perforated metal guard, is the ventilating fan which runs 12,000 revolutions per minute, drawing air in through an opening in the bottom of the case and forcing it out at the top, thus providing ample ventilation to dissipate the heat generated by the illuminant. In the upper left hand corner, behind the metal guard, is the illuminant, a 400 watt, special designed Tungsten film incandescent lamp. In the lower right hand corner are the reels and films, contained in a double magazine, or perhaps I might better say in a single magazine opening in its center, either side containing one of the reels. The path of the film through the mechanism is easily followed in the illustration. Tension at the gate is provided by the usual tension shoes and suitable springs. The aperture plate tracks are of spring steel and are instantly detachable for renewal in case of wear. Rewinding is accomplished by motor, without removing the reels from the magazine and without operating the mechanism. The machine uses a two-wing shutter. The machine has all the necessary adjustments for speed control, framing, focusing, etc. The mechanism frame is aluminum casting with phosphoric bronze bushings. The oiling system is by means of oil pipes leading to the various bearings, so that all lubrication may be taken care of merely by sliding back a metal guard cover at the top of the case, which discloses the ends of all the oil pipes. Electrical connection is had by means of a countersunk slip connector. There is also a very simple attachment by means of which wear in the intermittent movement may be taken up without removing the machine from its case; it is merely a matter of loosening four screws, moving a small lever slightly and retightening the screws. The intermittent is of the familiar star and cam type, is glass hard and runs in an oil well. The optical system consists of a two-lens, three-inch diameter, plano convex condenser, the component lenses being 4½ focus, and a standard objective lens of suitable E. F. The lamp is a "G 30" bulb, 4½ inches in diameter, its edge being right up almost against the condenser, which places the filament about 2¼ inches from the lens.



All together the Acme is a well built, serviceable projector for use in offices, factories, homes and in fact for a multitude of uses to which the moving picture has already been or will be applied. The machine is not designed for use in theaters.

Experting That Don't Work Well.

From the World Publicity Department comes the following:

> World Pictures have established at their studio at Fort Lee a laboratory that occupies the same relative position to the film industry as does the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research to medicine, or the Carnegie Foundation to the furtherance of a higher degree of educational efficiency. This laboratory at the World studio is presided over by men of experience who study and pass on claims for damage growing out of injuries to prints during their exhibition. The one question that arises more than any other is as to the scoring along sprocket holes. On this point an extensive discussion has long been waged as to its cause, effect and its value as an excuse to exhibitors in the adjustments of film damage. In order that this controversy be settled by an unquestionable authority, the subject has been given exhaustive study in the World Laboratory, and the decision made there by World experts is as follows:
> Scoring along sprocket holes does not to the slightest degree affect the wearing quality of film, weaken the sprocket holes or affect projection. As this scoring or scratching is always on the emulsion or "printed" side of the film, it only affects the emulsion or the emulsion and coloring.

We would respectfully suggest to these "men of experience" that they guess again, at least in so far as applies to their statement that the thing named does not affect projection. That it does not in some cases injure film is also not true. Given some types of tension spring and a tight enough tension, I have myself seen emulsion deposits on the spring, or shoes, cut right down into the celluloid. True this will only occur under certain conditions, and then at comparatively infrequent intervals, but the fact remains that it can and does occur, for I have myself seen many examples of that kind of injury, and I am a great believer in what I see. Moreover, emulsion or tension springs, or shoes DOES affect projection, and that very seriously, especially in case of worn intermittent movement. Then, too, with old type springs the emulsion deposit causes them to "clutter" and jump, and that in turn is very apt to cause unsteadiness of the picture.

But anyhow, such advice spread broadcast is nothing short of pernicious. Many unthinking projectionists reading a statement of that sort, emanating from supposed-to-be competent men, will at once become careless as to preventing emulsion deposit, or removing that which forms promptly, and the net result of such action will be most anything but good. Men who presume to give advice of that kind must not only be practical projectionists who "know the game," but they must be familiar with all types of machines, because a thing of that kind does not act the same with them all; also, he must know actual conditions in the projection rooms of theaters of all types. It is very easy to give advice. The woods are literally full of "experts" with bushels of advice they ache to give away. But to give advice which will FIT THE ACTUAL CONDITIONS FOUND IN ACTUAL PRACTICE, which same are very different indeed from those found in laboratories, is something else again. Yea, verily, it is very muchly something else again, as many who have hoisted "projection expert" signs have discovered to their sorrow.

My own advice to projectionists is to keep right on preventing that emulsion deposit with every means at your command, and the heavier your necessary tension the greater the need for clean shoes. The World "men of experience" tell us nothing new when they say that ordinary scoring does no harm to the film (though it may, and is apt to to the projection). The trouble is that it does not always stay "ordinary," and, take it from me, Pauline, when an emulsion deposit occurs and hardens, and then a bit of the right kind of dirt catches in it just right, you watch the fireworks when the film goes back to friend exchange. I have been there, and I know.

The Mazda Lamp and the Screen.

In considering possible results with the Mazda lamp the prospective purchaser will do well to very carefully consider the type of screen surface he intends to use. The Mazda lamp demands a bright surface—a semi-reflective surface, if you please. On a kalsomine surface, a painted surface, a plaster wall or a cloth screen, the Mazda gives its minimum illumination result. The light from the Mazda when projected on a screen of that kind is distinctly yellow, and returns its minimum of result in picture illumination. In many instances where the Mazda lamp has been used with plaster, cloth or kalsomine surface with but indifferent results, satisfactory results have been obtained by the substitution of one of the modern metallic surface semi-reflective screens. I repeat: exhibitors contemplating the installation of Mazda projection lamps will do well to very carefully consider the type of screen they have or propose to get, since it will be of vital importance to the result.

Motiograph Installation.

The operating room of the New Howard Theater, Rogers Park, Chicago, seating 2,300, is to be equipped by the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., which company will install two De Luxe Motiographs, one dissolver, one spot light, and a motor rewind. The operating room of this theater will be of ample dimensions and of modern construction. The Howard is owned by Seavers & Zoller, who own a number of other Chicago theaters. Mr. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, informs me that the installation will be thoroughly up to date in every respect, which means that if it is placed in charge of a competent projectionist, the Howard may expect high-class results on the screen.

The placing of the installation was under the direct supervision of Messrs. Gill and Hahn, Motiograph salesmen.

Another Disciple Gone to Fight the Hun.

Harry Bowman, whose name is known to our readers, writes from Madison Barracks, New York:

> This is to inform you that another of your disciples has donned the uniform and is rehearsing for the big show. I volunteered in the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps. There is a fine bunch of fellows up here, some of them from the big producing studios of Los Angeles. They are drilling us very hard, but it is a great life and not one of us would be anywhere else from choice, except Over There. Was hoping maybe you might be up-state and drop in to see us, if only for a short stay. (Wish I might. Ed.) The Y. M. C. A. is operating two well-patronized shows, free for the boys, on nights when they can get pictures. They have Motiographs at both places; use A. C. We will remain in Madison Barracks until our military training is over, then we are off to Rochester for training in photography. When I get my first furlough, if I get one, I want to come to your town and see you, but don't take that for a promise.

Glad to have you. My domicile is sort of a soldiers' home anyhow. When we are not entertaining one or more visiting Uncle Sam boys, friend wife is generally out rolling bandages, working in Coney Island canteen or otherwise helping the Red Cross nurse proposition. Me, I'm getting to be a dandy cook, getting my own meals; also, if the war isn't soon over, I'll be able to darn the holes (I damn them already) in my socks. It's a great life—if you don't weaken. And say, son, you needn't think you soldier chaps have ALL the trouble. We remain-at-home soldiers get ours too. Grass widowers we are, most of the time, while the wife is out (and we're glad of it, mind you) working for the Red Cross, or something else for you boys; also, we can't stick our noses outside the door without being boned for contributions, Liberty Bond investment or what not (which we're proud and glad to give, mind you), and they give us the glad smile for shouldering the burden (and it is s-o-m-e burden, too, mind you) until a uniform heaves into sight, whereupon we are danged small potatoes and scarcely any at all in a hill until aforesaid uniform passeth from view. Yea, verily, we, the ordinary burden bearers of the war, have troubles of our own. Come on, Old Man, we'll be glad to see you.

Has Delivered the Goods.

W. L. Henderson, Des Moines, Iowa, writes:

> Just received the question booklets and find I can only fully answer a comparatively small number of the questions; also, can only answer some of the others partially, and some not at all. Will study up on them at once. Would like to have the answers if they are published. (They were published, one each week, in the department, covering a period of 150 weeks. Ed.) Have been in the "game" for five years, on the West Coast and in Canada. Have succeeded in delivering the goods to the satisfaction of all the managers I have worked for to date. (Um, and did you deliver the goods to your own satisfaction? Ed.) Have studied both the second and third editions of your handbook and consider them as being invaluable. Would not sell mine at any price, if I could not replace it.

Good luck to you, brother Henderson, though "good luck" usually comes to those who go out and surround it. Am glad you like the books. It is significant that of all the thousands upon thousands of my books which have been sold, there has, to date, not been one single purchaser who has expressed dissatisfaction, whereas I could not even estimate the number who have spoken words of commendation, many of them in terms of enthusiasm. It is said one cannot hope to please everyone, but surely in this matter I at least do not seem to have displeased any one. And, believe me, a book must have real merit when it sells for four dollars and satisfies the purchaser.

The Airdome and Daylight.

Herman Altmyer, of the Bon Ton theater, Cincinnati, Ohio, is in trouble as to its airdome and daylight, which is set forth as follows:

> I have heard that airdomes in New York City are projecting pictures in broad daylight. As you will understand the additional hour of daylight is seriously affecting our airdomes, and I would ask your assistance in solving the problem confronting me. Please advise as to how the New York airdomes are projecting pictures in daylight. We project a 15-foot picture at about 110 feet. The sun, setting in the west, throws its rays directly on our screen. We are seriously hampered by using A.C., hence do not get a very bright picture as it is.

First, I have no knowledge of New York airdomes "projecting pictures in broad daylight." However, I have been absent from the city and it may all be very true. But if it is true, there can, I think, be no mystery about it. It is done by the application of very simple, easily understood rules. First: Install a metalic surface screen having as "bright" a surface as you can get without objectionable fade-away. Second: reduce your picture as much in size as is practical, since for a given amperage you will materially increase picture brilliancy by reduction in size. I would suggest a 10 or 11 foot picture during the period of daylight, changing to a larger one when it gets dark if you think necessary. This may be done as follows: use your present lenses for projection after dark and get another pair projecting a 10 or 11 foot picture during daylight hours, substituting the other lenses when the time comes, between reels, of course. This will involve some expert condenser and lamphouse juggling, but it can be done. Third: Make a false black border for the screen, of black cloth or light, thin lumber, which can be rolled up, set into place and removed or hinged at top and swung up out of the way when it is desired to substitute the larger picture for the smaller. This change of borders is very important, since it is highly essential that the black border come right up to the picture where daylight projection is attempted. Fourth: Increase your A. C. amperage to seventy amperes, at least, using Speer Alterno or the National Carbon Company Special A. C. White carbons. This latter (kind of carbons) is also important. Fifth: Build a canopy and side-flare at least ten feet deep, as per figures 13 and 314 of the Handbook, painting its inside dead (non-gloss) black. Sixth: If it is impractical to change the location of your screen, then there is nothing you can do which will give you a decent result unless you can build a screen which will cut off the direct rays of the sun from the picture screen, which same might not be impractical. The sun will, I think, be very low when you start and a screen of canvas or lumber might be erected at the rear of the airdome which would shade the picture screen from the direct sun rays. I do not say this can be done, but it may be practical. That would be a matter for you to decide. You most certainly cannot get results with direct sun rays striking the screen. Provided you can keep the direct rays off your screen, either by changing its location or as suggested, then if you follow the suggestions I have outlined faithfully you will get a very good picture. But let me caution you to make the top canopy deep and almost, if not quite, flat, and to bring the side wings in at as sharp an angle to the screen as you can without cutting off the view from your seats.

Clock Face Illumination.

J. B. Middleton, Portland, Oregon, manager Home Telephone and Telegraph Company, says:

> I notice on several occasions the objection you make to the clock face being too brilliantly lighted. The thought just occurred to me that you could put radio light on the hands and numbers, similar to the way wrist watches are treated, and dispense with a light altogether. This chemical is now obtainable at any reputable jewelers. In fact, a jeweler recently offered to put some on the hands of my watch. He said, however, that the Waltham people, and, in fact, all the best watch manufacturers had hands and dials already prepared to fit on the standard watches. I have no doubt that clock manufacturers have the same, and the change could be made for a very nominal sum, probably it would be better to go direct to the manufacturers, as they have it prepared correctly so it will give a maximum brilliance. Has this idea ever been suggested? I would be glad to be advised as to what you think of it, and give it publicity if you think it is meritorious.

Yes, the thing has been suggested, though quite some time ago. I have not, however, approved of the plan, for two reasons: (A) As I understand the matter, all these paints require the application of light to their surface for an extended period at fairly frequent intervals, else they will not be luminous, or at least only very faintly so. (B) I very much doubt that the luminosity of the paint would be sufficient to make the hands and figures sufficiently visible at a distance, especially if placed close to the screen, where there is considerable diffused light. If any one has actually tried the plan out we would be glad to hear from them, with full data as to distance of seats furthest from clock, location of clock (whether in a very dark place or a place of comparative light), whether or no it is necessary to apply light to the paint, and if so, how often and how long.

Nothing Doing.

A correspondent sends in sample of carbon branded "Plania A. C.," and wants to know where he can secure a supply of them.

Sorry, brother, but it can't be did. The carbon in question was (note the "was") the product of a German factory. And that is quite amply sufficient for the present, and I hope for quite some several moons in the very distant future. But, anyhow, the manufacturers in these lil' ole United States, have rose up on their hind legs and produced carbons equal to anything the Hun ever made; also as applies to A. C. carbons we have gone the German not only one, but several better. Try National White A. C. Special or Speer Alterno. Use either of these as directed by the manufacturer, and I have faith to believe you will never allow another German carbon within seven miles of your theater. See our advertising pages for where you can gettum.

Cheyenne Projectionists Now Organized.

Recently a committee from Denver Local Union 230, consisting of Ed Shields, President, J. Dooley, Vice-President, H. Kintusky, Recording Secretary, George Thomas, Business Representative, and Tom Costello, former Business Representative Local Union 306, New York City, now located in Denver, at the urgent request of the Cheyenne Trades Assembly journeyed to that city and effected a 100 per cent. organization of the projectionists of the city, which same are under the jurisdiction of Local 230. The men were well pleased at their accomplishment. Incidentally Costello is getting along all right, and I predict that he soon will again be a well man, for Colorado's wonderful sunshine, air and climate works near-miracles in health restoration.

Systematizing the Laboratory.

By Gerald A. Prager.

ALMOST every executive has asked himself this perplexing question, and well he may. It is therefore the purpose of this article to show the reader that with proper co-operation between executive and employee a simple yet efficient system may be devised whereby we may eliminate certain leakages and wastage which are apt to occur in the daily routine.

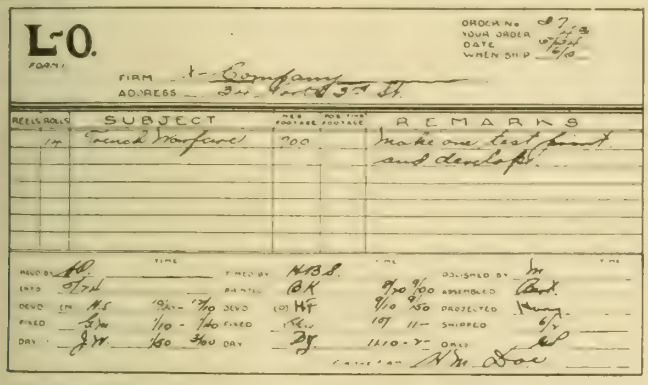

Fig. 1.

It is surprising how little attention is paid to this important branch of the motion picture industry, due in great part to the ill-advised slogan among representative concerns, "Spare no expense." However, while this may be true to the proper production of a picture, it does not apply to the motion picture laboratory any more than we would apply it to the automobile or kindred industries.

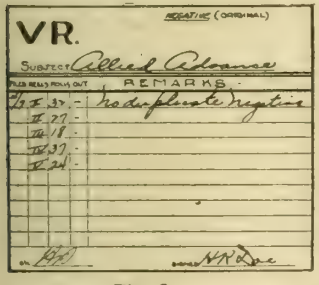

Fig. 2.

The writer has in mind one prominent concern in the film industry that practically relies on the say-so of its laboratory manager as to such vital questions as these: How many feet of positive stock have passed through the developing room today? Or how many feet of film were reprinted this week, and why were they reprinted? Inquiries of this type are of common occurence, and we can safely assert that a very small percentage of executives ever receive authentic information.

The writer will not go into the details of laboratory construction but will confine himself to a few simple record forms that may be applied in most every instance.

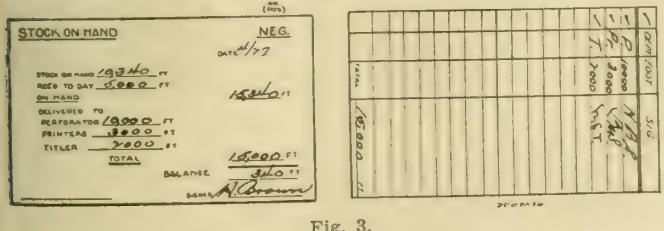

Fig. 3.

The chief shortcoming of every laboratory, with a few exceptions, lays in its total inability to deliver prints when specified, which often results in the losing of an account or creating a loss of confidence. We believe these records may help to eliminate a number of minor difficulties in production.

For example—The X Co ships us five cans of negative to be developed and a test print made and returned the following day. Let us follow it through the plant by the following checking system:

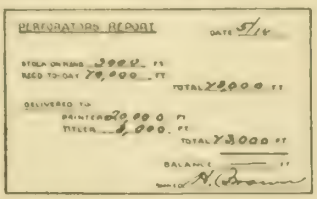

Fig. 4.

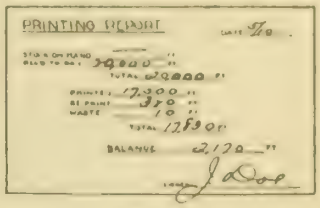

Fig. 5.

Having been received by the receiving clerk it is recorded in a triplicate book. See Fig. 1.

Two copies of these are then sent to the general laboratory office.

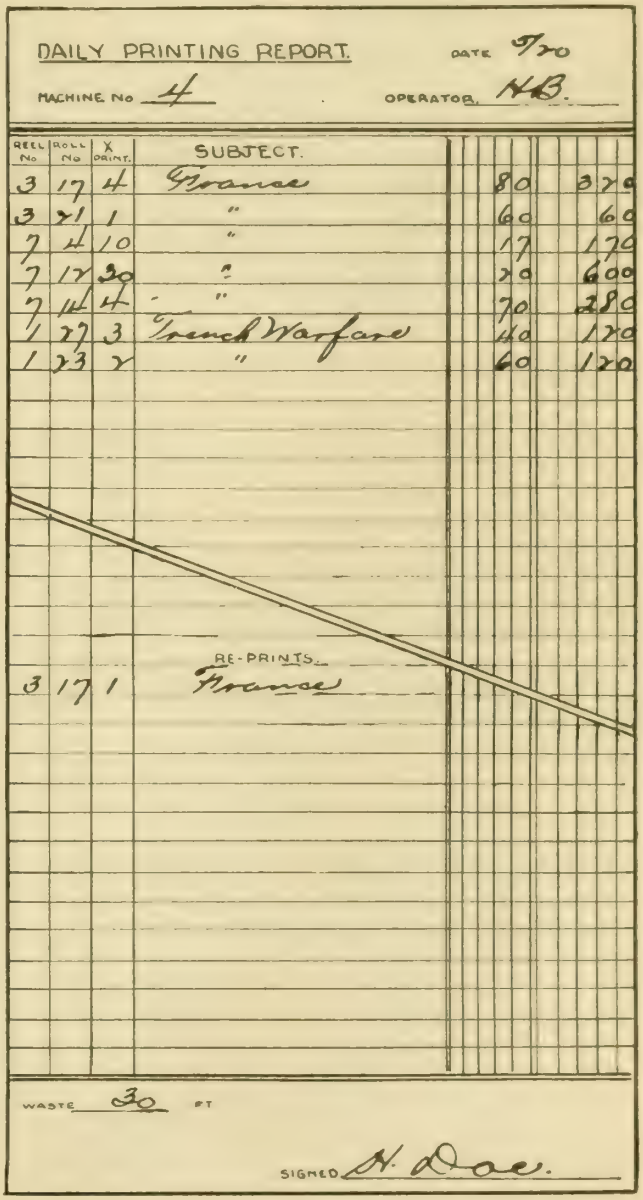

Fig. 6.

*Copyright, 1918, by the Chalmers Publishing Co.

the remaining copy kept by the receiving department as a matter of record. In the office of the manager the necessary instructions are added, such as date of delivery, number of prints, etc. One copy is then sent to the shipping department, a second goes to the developing room with the cans of negative or to the printing room in the event that a print is wanted, the person in charge of the developing room upon receiving the slip enters the time and his initials in the place designated, after being developed he again signs the time. This procedure is carried out in the fixing, washing and drying rooms and so on through the various stages until completion; the shipping department having at all times a record of all work in process for the day, for the purpose of billing and shipping.

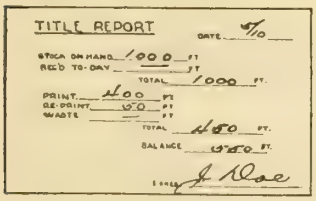

Fig. 7.

It may be noted that the above procedures require no difficult or intricate work on the part of the various employees, yet at the completion of the negative or print we have an accurate and concise record.

We may suggest that the time record is not essential in every instance except when a print or negative is wanted within a prescribed time.

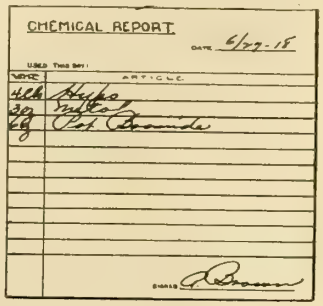

Fig. 8.

We now come to another important part of laboratory records, that of having an accurate report (daily) of negative and positive stock used in the course of the day; amount of footage used in the making of positive prints; the number of reprints; amount of wastage; total amount of footage made in the title department; quantity of chemicals used; these important facts and others are absolutely essential, if we are to draw an accurate production report. Above are a number of record cards that are self-explanatory:

It may be seen in each instance that the line "STOCK ON HAND" is entered at the beginning of the day from the general office; using for its base the report of the previous day, the balance being filled in by the various departments.

With card No. 5 an individual slip No. 6 is filled out by the person in charge of the printing room. These are returned at the end of the day to the general laboratory office for further completion.

FIG. 9.

Fig. 9 is a typical weekly report sheet, data being obtained from the individual record cards.

There are a number of equally good routing and checking systems similar to the one described, but we find from practical observation that this one is sufficient for the needs of the average busy laboratory that desires the maximum of efficiency with a minimum of labor expended.

For the busy executive who desires a ready reference chart, pertaining to the weekly production of his plant, we suggest the following graphic chart, the information being tabulated from the daily report records of each individual department.

NOTE: The perpendicular numbered squares indicate the footage and the horizontal squares the successive weeks in the year. The solid black line follows the amount of positive printed, the dotted line the amount of negative developed and the black line at the bottom records the percentage of positive waste.

Quick Lens Change for Box Type Cameras.

W. Wallace Clendinin sends a drawing of a very handy front board by which lenses of different focal lengths may be quickly substituted for each other. He writes as follows:

Editor Photographic Dept.

Dear Sir:

In answer to W. W. B., Cleveland, Ohio, in issue of May 11, 1918, you advise me to buy a reversing prism for use in making temporary titles from typewritten copy. He says he is using carbon paper for his impression. The answer is one of those simple things that have a peculiar faculty of being overlooked, and, I have no doubt, has been called to your attention by now. Let W. W. B. use a thin paper, and put his carbon paper on the under side of it, face up, thereby obtaining reversed lettering that can be photographed in the ordinary way, with the emulsion side of the film towards the lens. If the thinner paper has any tendency to photograph slightly darker on account of any dark backing, a white glazed paper is very satisfactory, as the thin paper in front entirely kills any shine.

I am sending a sketch of a sliding lens board that could be built very easily for any type of box camera. I have never seen any arrangement similar to this, and I see no reason why it should not be practical.

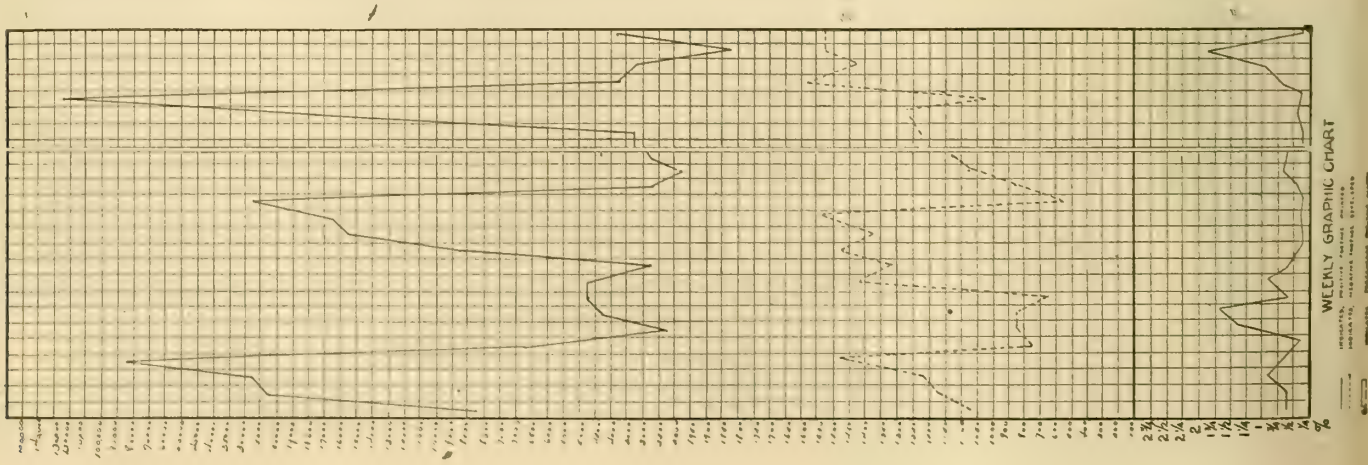
I would like to ask if you have any knowledge of the "Kronig" or "Chronig" camera. I think I have seen it or heard of it somewhere, but I can't remember anything about it now. I understand it to be a professional camera, and as I know most of them, I would like to know this one too. I would appreciate any information you could give me concerning it.

Your suggestion in regard to reversing typewritten matter with carbon paper is a very good one, but would, of course, be of no use for printed or sign written titles. Typewritten titles are a makeshift at best and should never be used except where it is impractical to use better methods.

In regard to the camera of which you speak—you are probably referring to the Provex camera manufactured by the Chronik Bros. and sold by the Motion Picture Apparatus Co.

This camera is comparatively new and only a few have yet been made. It is somewhat larger than the DeBrie or Gillon types which it resembles. The department hopes to print a description of these cameras in the near future.



Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON.

Notice.

QUESTIONS regarding music, addressed to this department, will receive a carbon copy of the department's reply by mail, when 4 cents are enclosed. Special replies by mail on matter which cannot be answered in this column $1.00.

The Star Spangled Banner.

A BILL proposing to make "The Star Spangled Banner" the official national anthem again provokes inquiry into the history of its author, the debated origin of its music and the various attempts to induce Congress to adopt the hymn of the American nation. Numerous musicians have proposed alterations of the music with a view to simplifications, but none has ever been officially recognized. The most recent endeavor to provide a uniform form of the music was made by the distinguished committee of three musicians, O. G. Sonneck, J. P. Sousa and Walter Damrosch.

This new version shows no change in the essential features of the anthem. The tune is practically the same, but altered slightly in rhythm. There are a few minor changes in the harmony and the bass progression has been rewritten to conform to the rules of harmony and theory. It is decidedly superior in every way to the old form. It has breadth and majesty. It flows more freely and requires less effort to sing it. It can be had in orchestral form and though you may be accused of misplaying the national hymn, we would advise every leader to get it. There is a tendency to look around for something as a substitute for this unofficial national anthem and we feel that every musician should do his part towards the official recognition of our traditional song, "The Star Spangled Banner."

It has a peculiar history. About the year 1775 a poem called "To Anacreon in Heaven" was written by one Ralph Tomlinson, and set to music by John Stafford Smith. This song was sung for years by the Anacreontic Society of Ludgate Hill, London, England, and shortly gained vogue in America. It took preference over the old English glees and madrigals because of its simplicity and inherent strength.

About the year 1814 Francis Scott Key wrote a patriotic poem, which at first bore no title, but found much favor because of its fervor Autographed copies were much sought after, and as the demand grew Key named it "Defense of Fort McHenry," later changing it to "The Star Spangled Banner." The poem was used everywhere and became one of the classics of American literature of the time.

Judge Joseph Hopper Nicholson, a brother-in-law of Key, is credited with the printing of the poem and singing it to the tune of "To Anacreon in Heaven." The melody fitted the meter with a little stretching and he so liked the effect that he had it put into song form. This forever wedded the music and the words, and we were given the hymn which we now sing as our national anthem.

J. Norris Hering, the music critic of the Baltimore Star, has been for many years devoting his energies towards legislation that would give the United States an official national air. Baltimore being the birth place of "The Star Spangled Banner," and naturally the clearing house for all data regarding it, we can well hold him as an authority on the subject. He claims that six measures have been introduced in Congress since last spring calling for official recognition and adoption of "The Star Spangled Banner" as our national hymn, but for various reasons they have been referred to Committee and quietly shelved.

We can never expect to get what we want unless we ask for it. Asking once is not sufficient, for sometimes we must obtain it through our very importunity. Let us become importunate to the nth degree and gain the much-needed official sanction of one song which we can call our national anthem without fear of argument.

Music for "When Men Betray."

They say that any fool can pull down a house, but it takes a good architect to build it again. We fully appreciate this trite saying, and always keep it in mind when called upon to criticize the work of others. We try to be constructive in our reviews of the music that is set to pictures, always keeping in mind the fact, that only by close and analytical scrutiny can we hope to elevate the music for the motion picture industry.

The musical setting given to the feature "When Men Betray" proved most pleasing in the main. Long selections were used with just sufficient melody to hold the ear and keep the interest in the picture. The sad scene fitted with Gabriel-Marie's "Lamento" proved very effective and the double theme idea was carried out with a judicious intermingling of lighter music that in no wise confused the mind as to who was represented. There was a splendid opportunity for realistic effect during the scene showing the ingenue dancing to a tune from a phonograph. If a Victrola had been used behind stage, properly timed, and accurately operated, the scene would have lived in the minds of the audience. Behides the possibility for a real effect it would have lent orchestral coloring.

Speaking of effects, we were surprised to hear Mr. Telephone ringing every time an artist picked up the receiver. This belongs to the "stone age" of pictures and long has been regarded as clap-trap by those striving to raise the standard of picture music. We are inclined to believe that the drummer must have sprung this on our friend, Mr. Lutz, at the last minute, as his selection of music, with a few exceptions, showed an uplifting trend. Especially was this noticeable during the vision of the marriage ceremony. Most leaders would have introduced the much-abused Wedding March and killed the scene, but Mr. Lutz properly regarded the scene as irrelevant.

The two outstanding errors in judgment seemed to be the "Prelude," by Rachmaninoff, and "The Tempest," from the Overture of "William Tell." Mr. Lutz could not be guilty of these gross misconceptions and we feel that they were forced upon him by ""The Shakespeare of the Screen." A wordy argument in no way should disrupt the elements and call forth the thunder and lightning of the storm, evident in "The Tempest." The climax of the picture needed a very heavy dramatic selection, but because of the accepted interpretation of the "Prelude" and its well-known associations, a more appropriate number should have held this spot.

Looking at the general effect produced by the music we must say in all justice that it fulfilled its mission and, but for the two exceptions mentioned, never transcended the picture.

A National Conservatory of Music and Art.

There is a movement on foot for the establishment of a National Conservatory of Music and Fine Arts to be established by the Government. This is a step to the right direction, and every musician and music lover should further this movement in every way.

This is not a case of "filling a long felt want," it is not a political move to make another position on the long list of "Government jobs," nor is there behind the movement any motive of self aggrandizement. We need a Conservatory officially sanctioned and properly controlled by the Government. We need a standard curriculum of studies that a pupil must follow, and, before receiving his "sheep-skin," pass a stiff examination therein. We need a Minister of Fine Arts whose duties will consist in attending to such legislation as will further the interests of art, protect the real artist from the charlatan, and educate the masses to a higher appreciation of music, paintings, sculpture, architecture, and other allied though lesser arts.

Schools and conservatories for music abound all over the country. Some are good, while some are decidedly bad. Anyone can start a conservatory. The diploma simply states that you have finished the course prescribed in that school. If the curriculum be light, naturally the pupil gets little real value for the time spent, and the diploma does not represent the completion of a thorough course in the branch of music undertaken. This leaves the way open for teachers of mediocre ability to foist on the pupil untenable theories and turn on the public half-baked musicians. This condition is largely to blame for the slow advance of Americans in musical fields. The grounding they receive so frequently is entirely wrong, and years must be spent in unlearning those things which they were taught to believe.

Music as taught in our public schools should have the attention of a capable supervisor. No definite plan is followed to instill into the minds of the children the elementary principles of music. Many of those teaching it as an added subject, could not pass an examination in rudiments, and are in no way qualified to class themselves as musicians. They are wasting their time, the money of the taxpayer, and distorting the minds of young America so that they hate the name of music.

France has its Minister of Fine Arts, why should we be so little interested in this phase of our national life? In England music is taught in every school, and is a compulsory subject. Music teachers must prove their ability by passing an examination set forth by one of the universities controlled by the Government. The text books prescribed for this subject are as carefully considered as those used for mathematics. Can we afford to jeopardize the future musical knowledge of our children by slip-shod methods?

We appeal to every musician in the picture playing cohorts for help for taking up this good movement for the betterment of his art. The Moving Picture World will send in your name along with thousands of other petitioners requesting that Congress establish a National Conservatory of Music, and that a Secretary for Fine Arts be appointed. Don't let this opportunity pass. No action can be taken unless we have the active support and co-operation of every musician in America. Let the picture industry be well represented in this mighty movement for good.

Wanted—Military Precision.

Colonel G. is a fine commander, but not a musician. He sent for the chief musician of his regimental band one day and delivered this scathing criticism:

"I notice a lack of uniformity about the band which must be regulated. Yesterday morning they were out on parade, and the largest man in the band was playing a little bit of an instrument—and you had the big drum played by a small man. That sort of thing doesn't look well, and must be attended to. I want the small men to play small instruments and the big men the big instruments. And another thing—I want the trombone players to slide their instruments in and out in unison. It annoys me to see them all out of step with their hands."

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

BRAVEST WAY, THE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest "The Kingdom of Flowers"—Ringleben, "Valse Slave"—Savasta, or "Lady Picking Mulberries"—Kelly.

This is a Japanese picture calling for a complete Japanese setting as far as possible. To help the leader we submit the following list of Japanese music that may prove beneficial:

"Japanese Patrol".....(March) by Tobani
"Veil Dance".....(Ballet) by Friml
"Jap's Tattoo".....(March) by Lawrendeau
"Fuji Koe".....(Intermezzo) by Shelley
"The Bombardment".....(March) by Heed
"Japanese Reverie".....(Andantino) by Bartlett
"The Kingdom of Flowers".....(Valse) by Ringleban
"Poppies".....(Romance) by Moret
"A Night in Japan".....(Suite) by Brahm
"Japanese Sunset".....(Meditation) by Zamanick

Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

BRIDE'S AWAKENING, THE (Universal—Six Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Dans Les Roses"—Barthelmy, "Basket of Roses"—Albers, or "Dance of the Rose Maidens"—Brahms.

Light music will fit this picture throughout with the exception of a hurry in the first and fourth reel, a fox-trot in the fifth and some dramatic tensions in the last three reels. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Universal Exchange.

CABARET, THE (World—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Serenade"—Chaminade, "Sparklets"—Miles, or "Whispering Willows"—Herbert.

La Boheme selections will fit this picture admirably. Nothing could be more effective as a general delineator of the characteristic studio scenes here shown. Note the cabaret scene in the opening, using selections of popular song hits and the stage performance in the third reel. Here you need a tango. There is a strong dramatic value that must receive careful consideration in your musical setting. The use of a guitar soloist would enhance the picture. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film Exchange.

CONFESSION (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Unnecessary.

Open with the "Pique Dame Overture," followed by Lohengrin's "Wedding March." Next you will need an allegro, agitato and Valse lento, a slow andante, a misterioso, agitato and "Reverie" by Vieuxtemp. The balance of the picture is decidedly dramatic to the end. Note the silence effect when the Governor tells of the execution. Cut sheets can be obtained from the Fox Exchange.

DESSERT WOOING, THE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Tempo di Valse. Suggest "Amarylis"—Vecsey, "Estellita"—Herbert, "I Am Waiting for You, Darling"—Williams.

The story is dramatic, but not entirely so. There are many opportunities for pastorale music and bright andantinos. Note the pistol shot early in the fifth reel. A few good numbers that will fit this picture are as follows: "The Wooing Hour"—Zamecnik, "Woodland Whisper," Czibulbeu, "Ballett Sentimantal"—Zamecnik. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

DESTINY (Metro—Five Reels)—Theme—Valse Lento. Suggest "Golden Hearted Daisies"—Williams, "Just a Little Love"—Silseu, "Waters of Venice"—Von Tilzer.

This is a tense drama that requires careful handling for a proper musical interpretation. Nothing popular or well known should be used outside of the cafe scenes. Many religiosos are needed and the general trend of the music should be sombre. During the introduction of the allegorical characters, lust, avarice, rum, passion, etc., special themes should be used symbolic of these attributes. Organ can be used effectively at T. "Dawn till" T. "In the Palace" and from D. "When boy enters convent" to T. "The Hand of Time." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro Exchange.

MATING OF MARCELLA (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Italian Folk Song. Suggest "O Sole Mio," "Maria Mari."

This holds Italian atmosphere throughout and the music should be distinctive. Choose only numbers that have the flavor of Italy in them. You will need a fox-trot and an agitato for irregular stuff. A list of Italian music that can be used for this picture follows:

"Serenata".....Tarenghi
"Songs from Italy".....Langey
"A Day in Venice".....Nevin
"Two Venetian Songs".....Tanara
"Gitanella Suite".....Heinrichs
"Carnival Venetian".....Benjmein
"Le Romance De Pierrot Et Pierrette".....Bengmein
"La Columbe".....Gounod

Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

WHEN MEN BETRAY (Graphic—Six Reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Elysium"—Speaks, "Evening Devotion"—Kohler, or "Meditation"—Leigh.

This story is dramatic society atmosphere. You will need waltzes, serenades and bright intermezzos. Long selections will meet your needs and no hurrys or agitatos are required. A few dramatic tensions and some big stuff can be fittingly used. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Graphic Film Co.

VIVIETTE (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Tempo Rubato. Suggest "Al Fresco"—Eteenne, "Under the Leaves"—Thome, or "Mock Morris"—Grainger.

This picture is very light and lively in the main, but there are some moments of sadness and dramatic intensity. Note the explosion early in the first reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount Exchange.

Leaders Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q.—What do you think of using one of the musicians out of the orchestra and "spot-lighting" him as a soloist between shows?

A.—It is an excellent idea and one that has been used with great success in the Rialto and Strand Theaters of New York City. If you have the facilities greater results can be obtained by using a "baby spot" upon the face only, of the artist.

Q.—Would you suggest linen suits for the orchestra during the summer months.

A.—Some theaters have tried the experiment and have found that, unless the orchestra is completely hidden from a direct line of screen vision, there is a degree of reflective light upon the picture. It would be better to have them dressed in black alpaca.

Q.—I have composed some special music that I think could be cued in on most pictures, and would like to know where I can find a good arranger to make orchestrations. Do you know of any? Is there any demand for such music and would a publisher be interested in buying such compositions?

A.—Already the market is flooded with such stuff, but if it be of exceptional merit and suitable for arranging in album form, it would have a chance of a publisher's acceptance. However, we would advise you that it is a hard row to hoe and, at the best, would bring but small remuneration for your creative ability and hard work. Regarding arrangers, we are in a position to offer you names of many who are considered experts in their line. If you desire such information, an addressed envelope and four cents in stamps will bring it to you.

Q.—There's a woman across the street from me studying voice, who screeches five hours daily, and there's a fellow on the floor above who is ambitious to become a cornetist and strives untiringly to get a "lip." Is there not some law to regulate such nuisances, or send them to the South Sea Isles?

A.—We are not a legal department, and confine our efforts solely to the interests of the exhibitor and his orchestra leader. However, as man to man, we would advise that if you are fortunately of a healthy and robust stature and combatative nature, the best plan would be to "clean house."

* * *

Q.—Will musicians be classed as non-useful in the new selective draft amendment—"Work or Fight"?

A.—They certainly will, unless they hold regular and steady positions in theaters.

Q.—What is the usual pay for musicians at summer resorts and are union men allowed to accept "board and lodging" as part pay?

A.—For non-union musicians the salary depends on what they are willing to accept. While there is a regular rate authorized by the union for such engagements, if the salary and the regular rate of "board and lodging" equals the minimum union rates per week, we do not see where there would be any complaint from the union. Be on the safe side and ask the Secretary of your local.

Q. Is there any diminution in the interest shown for singers at the larger theaters in New York?

A. In New York the singers have become part of the show and are here to stay. Judgment has always prevailed in employing only the best talent, and you can readily understand that with the price of admission so small the opportunity of hearing good songs well sung is not passed by. In smaller cities it has been found that local talent have a splendid drawing capacity if not used too frequently. The style of song most popular at present is the old fashioned ballads well staged with lighting effects.

Q. I am beginning to build my library along the lines of the works of the individual composers, that is, getting every available number composed by a certain one before proceeding to the next. Of course, I must have variety for every-day use. What composer would you suggest first?

A. Get the works of Tschaikowski. He was a prolific writer, and no composer ever lived that was so varied in style and atmosphere. His Russian music exemplified in symphonies, overtures and songs, are typical, while his Oriental numbers breathe of the East. Grieg should follow, as his entire writings are most suitable for pictures.

Q. Can music be procured for a saxaphone quintet in sufficient quantities to use for pictures?

A. No. There is little if any music written solely for saxaphones, but if you wish to introduce the instruments into your orchestra, the baritone saxaphone readly plays from a cello part, the alto from a clarinet part transposed, and the soprano from the violin part. As an innovation we imagine it would be immense, but might become too "Jazzy" as a regular thing.

* * *

Q. What is the best instrumentation of a seven-piece orchestra for a small theater playing pictures?

A. Piano, harmonium, two violins, flute, clarinet and cello.

Q. Can I get a list of music that can be played free?

A. We refer you to our printed lists in the issues of November 10, November 24, December 1, December 29, January 12 and January 26. If you cannot readily procure these we will be pleased to send you a copy of them upon your request.

Maypole Ordinance Is Referred Back

City Council by Vote of 54 to 16 Postpone Action in Deference to Request of Acting Chief Alcock.

AT the City Council meeting Monday afternoon, June 3, the Maypole ordinance was referred back to the judiciary committee for further consideration, after a spirited debate. This procedure was doubtless due to the request made by Acting Chief Alcock last week that action be deferred by the Council until he had opportunity to study the measure. The Council also directed Corporation Counsel Ettleson to submit an opinion on the validity of the proposed ordinance.

Alderman A. A. McCormick, leader of the forces against the ordinance, charged that under its terms the owners of vicious pictures could exhibit them in the city and be gone before court action could be taken to prevent their showing.

Alderman Maypole made a convincing speech in support of his measure. He declared that one-man censorship had proved a failure and directed attention to the fact that his ordinance would crease a board of twelve censors to have absolute authority to pass on all pictures.

"I have made an exhaustive study of censorship and at no time was I opposed to it," he said. "I challenge anybody to prove this ordinance is sponsored by moving picture interests.

"It would work a hardship on producers who send offensive pictures to Chicago. Sex and other pictures shown before will not be tolerated under this ordinance, as it eliminates the pink permit."

It must be remembered that the vote of 54 yeas to 16 nays, in favor of returning the Maypole measure to the judiciary committee does not express the views of the members of the Council on its passage. The vote merely expresses compliance with the request of Acting Chief of Police Alcock to delay final action on the ordinance until he had time to examine it personally. Indeed, many aldermen favorable to its passage voted to delay action.

The members of the Chicago Political Equality League are in favor of the Maypole ordinance, after discussing it with Alderman Maypole.

"Jack" Wheeler Off to London

He Will Have Charge of Distribution of All Official War Films in Allied and Neutral Countries.

LUCIEN C. WHEELER, formerly editor of the Selig-Tribune for two years, and for some time past manager of the Selig company, has been appointed special representative of the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman, to take charge of the distribution of all United States official films in allied and neutral countries, with headquarters in London. He accepted the appointment Friday, May 31, and will leave in the near future to take charge of his duties.

While the Signal Corps photographers are busy taking films on the battlefields in France and Italy, showing war action of all kinds and other activities in the carrying on of the war, the Signal Corps and the Committee on Public Information at Washington will be busy taking pictures of all war activities in America.

The headquarters for the production of pictures taken on European battle fronts are located in Paris, in the Signal Corps laboratory there. All war films produced in America and abroad will be edited and assembled there, under the direction of Herbert C. Hoagland, who has charge of production in Paris. Mr. Hoagland had long experience with Pathe Freres and with Pathe Exchange, Inc., and afterward, for some time, was manager of the Selig company.

J. A. Berst, for many years vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., will have charge of the distribution in the United States of all United States official war films taken on the battle fronts in Europe, and of those showing other activities, such as the arrival of American troops and their camp training, etc., before going to the front. Mr. Berst's offices will be located in New York, in the Times Building.

The entire product, taken abroad and here, it is understood, will be distributed in all allied and neutral countries.

"Jack" Wheeler, as he is best known by his wide circle of friends and acquaintances, spent seventeen years in the United States Secret Service. Ten of these were spent at the White House with Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, and one year during President Wilsons' first term.

During his stay with the Selig company Mr. Wheeler gained valuable knowledge of the film business and added scores of new friends to the old list. Every one of them will miss him keenly, just as all of them wish him great success in his new field.

Mr. Wheeler expressed great regret to me over severing his connections with the Selig Polyscope Company and its genial head, Colonel William N. Selig.

The Wheelers' Chicago residence will be discontinued, and Mrs. Wheeler and her two sons will spend the summer in the Adirondacks.

Regarding Major Funkhouser's Suspension.

Major Funkhouser has sent letters to several members of the City Council denying emphatically that he had employed his investigators at any time, while serving as special deputy superintendent of police, to shadow aldermen and city officials. He charges that published stories to that effect were used to prejudice the Council and city officials against him.

"Any statement to the contrary is made with malicious intent and is an absolute and consummate falsehood," says the major.

It is expected that charges will be filed against Major Funkhouser within a week or ten days from the time of writing.

"My evidence is not in shape yet to be used in the trial, but my investigation is revealing additional proof for my reasons in suspending the second deputy," says Acting Chief of Police Alcock.

A protest against the suspension of the major was made in resolutions adopted recently at the eighty-first annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of Chicago, and sent to City Clerk Igoe for presentation to the City Council. These resolutions stated that emphatic protest had been made by the convention against any action by the City Council abolishing or weakening the present moral safeguards enjoyed under the existing ordinance.

John S. Miller, for over twenty years the leading lawyer of Chicago, has been engaged in defense of Major Funkhouser.

The A. A. A. Made Permanent and Officers Elected.

A meeting of the members of the Allied Amusement Association was held in the Masonic Temple Friday, May 31, in response to a call sent out to discuss the Maypole censorship ordinance. Attorney Herbert J. Friedman, who represented the Film Exchange Managers Club, delivered an address explaining the ordinance and urged exhibitors to see their aldermen on this important matter.

A motion was then moved and carried to effect at once a permanent organization of the Association and proceed with the election of permanent officers.

This, however, was ruled as being illegal, due to the fact, that the call sent out for this meeting was for the sole purpose of considering the censorship ordinance. It was then agreed to meet Tuesday, June 4, at the same place to elect permanent officers.

The following officers were elected at the Tuesday meeting: President, Peter J. Schaefer; first vice president, M. A. Choynski; second vice president, Sam Gold; treasurer, Robert R. Levy, and secretary, Sidney Smith.

The board of directors of the organization is comprised of the officers mentioned and fifteen other members. Among the latter are W. Johnson, Alfred Hamburger, Sam Katz, Herman Schoenstadt, A. J. Krug, H. A. Newell, Aug Zilligen, Nathan Ascher, Harry Lubliner, Louis Marks, Ike Bergson, H. A. Dutton, Max Hyman and Harry C. Miller.

Hartman at Work for Boston Convention.

Fred W. Hartman, assistant manager of the National Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Boston July 13-20, received notice last week to begin work soliciting prospective space buyers in the trade here. He started in Wednesday, May 29, by sending out mail to likely patrons and began his personal canvass Monday, June 3. Mr. Hartman has had long experience in this work, having held the position for the past seven years. He can be reached at Room 1224, Century Building, his phone number being Harrison 608.

J. M. Feldman Leaves for Jefferson Barracks.

Joseph M. Fieldman, who has been in the trade for the past thirteen years, left Saturday, June 1, for Jefferson Barracks, Mo., for training. Mr. Fieldman, during his career, has been associated with Metro Pictures Corporation, the World Film Corporation, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Standard Motion Picture Company and Unity Photoplays Company. Before entering the army, he was special representative in this city for Unity Photoplays Company and for the Standard Motion Picture Company in Kansas City, St. Louis and Omaha.

Dorothy Dalton Pays Chicago a Visit.

Dorothy Dalton arrived in Chicago Monday morning, June 3, from San Francisco and remained until Wednesday forenoon, when she left for New York. On Tuesday afternoon Miss Dalton held an informal reception in the grand foyer, mezzanine floor of Orchestra Hall, when she greeted a large number of her personal friends and admirers.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Very Successful.

"Pershing's Crusaders" closed its second successful week and its run at Orchestra Hall Sunday, June 2. H. E. Voegeli, assistant manager of Orchestra Hall, states that extraordinary business was done with the U. S. war film. The second week surpassed the first in attendance, and the pictures grew more popular every day.

Frank L. Browne Will Locate in San Francisco.

Frank L. Browne, formerly manager of the Allston Theater, Boston, passed through the city Wednesday, June 5, on his way to San Francisco. The Allston changed hands last January and since that time Mr. Browne has been engaged in the business in various capacities. He will be connected with the business on the coast, but could not state in what capacity. Mr. Browne is a member of Boston Local, M. P. E. L. of A., and when he goes to Frisco he will immediately get in connection with the local organization there. He is a strong admirer of the World, which he has read since he became connected with the moving picture business.

"Prunella" at Orchestra Hall.

"Prunella," which opened at Orchestra Hall Monday evening, June 3, and which features Marguerite Clark, is reported to be doing gradually increasing business. The patronage is representative of the best class of people in the city and the daily press has been very kind in its treatment of the picture. Kitty Kelly, in the Herald and Examiner, has this to say. "It is a quaint and lovely bit of imagining and it is presented in form as quaint and lovely. Maurice Tourneur's 'Blue Bird' was a beautiful thing, bigger and more pretentious than this, but in this, it seems to me, he has drawn some of the most exquisite camera scenes he has ever done."

Katherine C. Melcher Organist at Auditorium.

Miss Katherine C. Melcher, the well-known organist who has gained an enviable record in playing accompanying music for moving pictures, was selected about six weeks ago to play the large organ at the Auditorium with the grand opera orchestra during the run of "Belgium—the Kingdom of Grief." She has played continuously since then with "The Unbeliever" and "Restitution," and is at present playing the accompaniment to "Over the Top." Miss Melcher's talented playing of the big instrument has made her very popular with patrons of this theater.

Fraternity Hall New Meeting Place for Chicago Local.

The members of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., will henceforth hold their meetings at Fraternity Hall, 19 West Adams street. This hall is centrally located and is easy of access. The regular monthly meeting was held Friday, June 7, when only the regular routine business was transacted.

Nazimova Popular in "Toys of Fate."

Nazimova has proved so popular in "Toys of Fate" (Metro) at the Playhouse, on Michigan avenue, that the feature was continued for a second week at this house.

Campaign Films for Congressman McCormick.

The Selig Polyscope Company has arranged with Congressman Medill McCormick to make special films which will be used by him in his campaign for Senator for Illinois, on the Republican ticket, this fall. Work was started on the films Thursday, June 6, and they will be completed about the middle of July.

"Over the Top" Goes to Orpheum.

"Over the Top" leaves the Auditorium Saturday, June 8, after a most successful run of two weeks. It will be shown at the Orpheum, State street, June 12, 13, 14 and 15. Manager Chatburn, of Vitagraph's Chicago office, is enthusiastic over the large volume of bookings for this popular war film.

Sidney Abel of Select in Town.

Sidney Abel, special representative of Select Pictures Corporation, came in from St. Louis Thursday, June 6, and left the following night for New York. Mr. Abel has been visiting some of the Select exchanges in the middle west.

"Cleopatra" Continues Popular at Colonial.

Manager Field, of the Colonial, reports continued satisfactory business with "Cleopatra." With the exception of several very hot days, the house has been filled to capacity during the second week's run.

Willard Holcomb

WILLARD HOLCOMB is a stormy petrel of publicity who usually appears on the scene when there is something big doing. In fact Holcomb is better known as a dramatic and musical critic, dramatizer of such successes as "St. Elmo" and producer of plays, but having been baptized in printer's ink he just naturally can't keep out of it.

Moreoverover Holcomb has a habit of keeping his fine publicity hand concealed in a camouflage glove, so that some of his friends do not know how ambidextrous he is. For instance last season Morris Gest wanted somebody to excite Boston over "The Wanderer." Will A. Page introduced Holcomb, who had just adjourned with congress after a special engagement on Capitol Hill, where he served years on the Washington Post. Gest knew Holcomb as a musical critic, but asked Page about his experience. "He taught me the business," replied Page, and Gest guessed he was "Ho-Kay."

Willard Holcomb.

Therefore when Holcomb hitched onto the Fox publicity staff a few months ago it was known there was "something doing." When he wrote a couple of Fox bulletins and half a dozen press books, including the new Zane Grey series, that was only a preliminary bombardment. Then when Mr. Fox was appointed captain of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team it was Lieutenant Holcomb who emplaced the publicity big guns in the reformed "Heidelberg" Building, which became the campaign headquarters, and kept up such a Red Cross fire of press shrapnel that there was no escaping it.

No wonder the drive went "over the top," and the fact that Holcomb hid behind Theo. Mitchell, John T. Kelly and other volunteers didn't conceal his work.

SELECT'S BUFFALO CREW DECORATES ROGERS.

The sales force and other employes of Select's Buffalo Exchange surprised and overwhelmed their retiring manager, Charles R. Rogers, on Saturday, June 1, when they trapped him in his office and presented him with a strikingly handsome seven-piece desk set. The articles in the set are made of solid bronze with decorative medallions in relief.

The occasion was in the nature of a double celebration. The gift was a token of appreciation to Mr. Rogers from his office force at the moment when he was leaving to assume charge of another branch, and also marked the conclusion of Rogers' first year in the Buffalo Exchange.

Sweeping Changes at Triangle Studios

H. O. Davis Retires and H. E. Aitken Takes Active Charge —Company to Open Its Own Employment Agency —Culver City Again Becomes Storm Center.

THINGS again have happened at Culver City. Turbulent and stormy has been the career of the former Ince plant, but this time a regular cyclone struck the West Coast studios of the Triangle Film Corporation, apparent by the arrival in Los Angeles of Harry E. Aitken, president of the company.

As an evident result H. O. Davis, general manager, has departed to New York, and though no definite statement has been given out by the officials of the Triangle corporation it is generally conceded that Mr. Davis has retired and is out of the Triangle Film Corporation altogether. E. G. Patterson, assistant general manager, left with Mr. Davis. Harry Aitken is in absolute control and in active charge of the big West Coast plant. O. L. Sellers has been appointed assistant to the general manager, and will be in charge when Mr. Aitken, in a few days, goes to New York. About fifty employees have been dismissed and many others are likely to receive the blue envelope. The following statement has been issued by the Triangle officials:

"H. O. Davis, former manager of the Triangle Culver City studios, has left for New York, where he took 'The Servant in the House' and where he will be engaged in various activities in connection with the film industry for some time.

"In the management of the local studios Mr. Aitken will have as assistant O. L. Sellers, who has been connected with the Triangle Pacific Coast studios for many months.

"One of the first changes to be made with Mr. Aitken and Mr. Sellers in charge is the cutting down of the stock company. Already more than thirty players have been given their notices. The new management expects to keep only the prominent leads.

"In the future the Triangle will cast almost entirely by the picture, and with this in view a Triangle employment and booking agency will be opened in Los Angeles, with Benjamin Singer in charge.

"All players wishing to register with the new Triangle exchange will be welcomed by Mr. Singer, and no fee will be charged if they are cast for a Triangle picture. This will mean that many people with screen ambition will be given a chance, and the new policy should result in the unearthing of 'finds.' Also it will guarantee a change of faces in forthcoming Triangle productions and eliminate sameness of types cast in character roles."

The official communication is somewhat vague as to the retirement of Mr. Davis. It is reported that the former general manager was given full ownership in the picture 'The Servant in the House,' which, as remembered Mr. Davis personally directed, for his interest in the company. Patterson follows Davis to exploit the picture, it is stated.

Charles F. Stocking, author of several well-known novels and a former newspaperman, has been appointed head of the scenario department, and with him as associate editor is another newcomer to Triangle, but by no means a stranger in scenario work. He is Dr. Daniel Goodman, also a well-known author and scenario expert, who has been associated with both Griffith and H. E. Aitken.

In an interview with this paper Mr. Sellers gave the following information with regard to present and future activities of the Triangle: "So far as is known we will continue to make program pictures, while our new policy may also include the manufacture of some special superproductions.

"Christy Cabanne, a director of long experience, has been engaged by Triangle, and is now rehearsing a large cast on a special picture, which will probably be an eight-reeler.

"Working with Cabanne are Ralph Lewis, who will be remembered for his Stoneman in 'The Birth of a Nation'; J. Barney Sherry, Jack Curtis, George Pearce, Wilbur Higby and Louise Lester."

With Stocking in charge of the scenario department the reading department is now headed by Miss Nan Blair. The other readers are Ralph Westfall and Dorothy Yost. Staff continuity writers include Charles J. Wilson, Catherine Carr and George Elwood Jenks, while Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton is expected to continue to contribute to the scenario department.

With the changes in the scenario department also a change in the research department took place when George Ingleton was put in charge.

New Regulations for Film Plants Planned by City Council.

Regulation of the motion picture plants within the city limits rather than the removal of any of them is the prophesied policy of the city council. On May 29 the Public Welfare Committee heard both sides of the mooted question and finally decided to take it under advisement and request the city attorney for advice as to the legal features involved.

Little or no objection was raised to the location of the studios, but some of the persons living near them complained about unusual noises. The city attorney said that most of these objections are of no consequence because they can be remedied by merely applying the present laws.

William Mead, representing the Chamber of Commerce, urged the council to take no drastic action, pointing out that the motion picture industry is one of the biggest in Southern California and should be encouraged.

Mr. Mead said, however, no one would object to an ordinance which will permit the enlargement of the studios upon a limited scale.

It is believed more than probable that the zones will be left almost as they now are, and the motion picture producers will be compelled to go into the one big zone south of the Hollywood cemetery if they want larger quarters.

Wallace MacDonald to Join the Colors.

Wallace MacDonald will finish his Triangle contract at the conclusion of "Marked Cards," and leaves at once for his home in Halifax, where he will become a private in the Tenth Siege Battery of the Royal Canadian Artillery, Fort Cambridge, N. S., C. E. F.

MacDonald has been with the Triangle since November, coming from the eastern Vitagraph. He enlisted in the Royal Flying Corps on February 12, but was rejected on account of eyesight.

Find "Spirit of '76" in Plumber's Room.

Found with a considerable amount of "The Spirit of '76" film, the picture which resulted in the conviction of Robert Goldstein, the promoter, by a federal grand jury, Lee C. Miller, thirty-four years old, a plumber, was held May 30 by the police war squad on a charge of suspicion of violating the Espionage Act. Miller was arrested at 846 Francisco street by officer Lucas, who had been watching the man for several days.

According to the war squad operatives Miller also had two books by Pastor Russell and a considerable amount of literature published by the International Bible Students' Association.

The portions of the film, which, the police say, are those stricken out before the picture was shown at Clune's Auditorium because of their flagrant violation of the Espionage Act, have been held by Miller for several months.

Clifford Photoplay Company Enlarging Activities.

With the announcement by W. H. Clifford that the Clifford Photoplay Company will shortly put into production another series of comedies, headed by a well-known comedian, in addition to the company's Shorty Hamilton comedies, it is evident that this concern will soon take its place among the most productive of the motion picture organizations in Los Angeles.

W. H. Clifford has won a reputation as a photo-dramatist, and it is due entitrely to his skill in his chosen field that the Shorty Hamilton comedies have been so successful. Mr. Clifford has now put into production his greatest effort to date—a multiple-reel, state right production, entitled "The Black Boomerang," which was written by him as an answer to "The Clansman." In it are depicted the struggles of the black race from the time of their leaving Africa as captives until they gain freedom and educational possibilities in America. Interwoven in the story is a strong love theme between two white people of the North and South, with a background of the strong fealty of the negro for his white master and mistress.

James Young Engaged by Haworth.

Under the direction of William Worthington Sessue Hayakawa has completed his first picture for the Haworth Pictures Corporation, entitled "His Birthright," and production will soon be started on the second Hayakawa feature, which has been given the name "The Temple of Dusk." The story was written by Frances Marion.

James Young, who recently directed Hayakawa at the Lasky studios, has been engaged to direct Hayakawa's second picture, and will alternate with Director Worthington in the production of these features.

"His Birthright" soon will be released on the Mutual program.

Unique Theater for Arcadia.

Using eucalyptus logs and palms to produce a rustic effect and yet to provide a quiet elegance, Mrs. Ruth Cassill, proprietor of the Colonial theater in Monrovia, will construct a moving picture theater in the little town of Arcadia, Cal. It is expected construction will start about June 3.

The theater will follow the general style of an airdome. Inside the entrance will be a pergola, where soft drinks, sandwiches, pastry and candy will be served. This will be set with palms and hanging baskets. An orchestra has been obtained and will play at each performance. The theater will cater particularly to the men who will be quartered at the Aviation camp and will be known as the "Outpost." The seating capacity will be about 800.

Friend of King Albert of Belgium Visits Miss Bara.

Judge Louis Lazard, of the Brussels Board of Commerce and an intimate friend of King Albert of Belgium, paid a visit to Miss Theda Bara.

"She is a remarkable woman," said the judge after leaving Miss Bara, "and I have occasion to know that she is the idol of the Belgian populace, especially among those who are at the present time in England and have the opportunity to see Miss Bara in the pictures."

Premiere of Dustin Farnum Picture at Ritz-Carlton.

What will be one of the most elaborate presentations of a screen feature ever made has been arranged by Harry A. Sherman, president and general manager of the Sherman Productions, Inc., for the premier presentation of Dustin Farnum's first picture, "The Light of the Western Stars."

The picture will be shown in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York before a specially invited audience.

Dustin Farnum, the star; Winifred Kingston, his leading woman; Mrs. Kingston, her mother, and Charles Swickard Mr. Farnum's director, will be taken to New York by Harry Sherman in order to attend the preview.

National Association Chiefs Confer

Listen to Reports on Accomplishments of the Year and Plan for Enlarged Activities in the Future.

THE most representative gathering of officials of the film companies held in over a year took place at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Wednesday, June 5. The session was called for the purpose of reviewing the present condition of the business and incidentally the activities of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and its various committees. Special reference was made to the patriotic and efficient cooperation rendered to the various departments of the Government in the prosecution of the war.

President William A. Brady referred to the aid given by the film and screen in floating the Third Liberty Loan and in the Red Cross Second War Fund drive. It was announced that individuals and companies identified with the industry bought ten millions of Third Liberty Loan bonds and that upward of one hundred millions in bonds were sold to the public through the splendid cooperation given by the motion picture theaters throughout the United States.

Many other accomplishments were referred to and an invitation extended to some of the companies which were represented and were not members to join so as to participate actively in the counsels of the organization, which comprises forty-five producing companies, twelve distributing corporations and eighteen supply and equipment concerns.

President Brady announced that meetings of each of the five branches of the National Association would be held during June to nominate directors to be elected at the annual meeting of the association in Boston during the week of July 13-20. The directors elected at Boston will elect the officers of the National Association for the ensuing year. This meeting will be held coincident with the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Motion Picture Exposition in Mechanics Hall.

William Fox was invited by President Brady, with the consent of all present, to take the chair, and after setting forth his own views in regard to the status of the industry at the present time, called upon the film company executives to offer any suggestions or ideas with a view to securing unity of action, and for the purpose of coordinating the various branches of the industry for action upon any matters in relation to Government cooperation. Among those participating in the discussion were President Brady, P. A. Powers, Walter W. Irwin, Samuel Goldfish, Arthur S. Friend, J. Robert Rubin, Lee A. Ochs, Ernest H. Horstmann and Alfred S. Black.

Waterson R. Rothacker of Chicago, who recently had been appointed by President Brady as chairman of the membership committee for the Middle West, announced that there were several companies represented which desired to join the National Association. Among these were the Mutual Film Corporation and the Essanay Film Company of Chicago, Educational Film Corporation of America, Baumer Films, Inc., Haworth Pictures Corporation and the Art Film Laboratories of New York. Immediately upon receiving this splendid report from Mr. Rothacker President Brady stated he would appoint Mr. Rothacker as chairman of a national membership committee, which designation was promptly accepted.

This is the biggest membership gain by the National Association at any single meeting since its inception two years ago, and the month of June will establish a new record for additions to the membership rolls of the association. Mr. Rothacker announced that he would remain in New York a few days to perfect plans for the national committee and upon his return to Chicago would leave at once for the Pacific Coast for the purpose of lining up all the companies which are not identified in any way with the association through Eastern connections.

With a view to perfecting the plans for providing closer relationship with the Government activities and to render every possible aid to the various Federal committees, a committee was appointed with one representative from each branch of the industry, which is to be known as the committee on ways and means and which held its first meeting at the office of the association on Thursday, June 6. The committee comprises the following: Producers, Arthur S. Friend; distributors, Walter W. Irwin; supply and equipment, Edward Earl; laboratories, W. R. Rothacker; exporters, David P. Howells; National Exhibitors' League, Lee A. Ochs; American Exhibitors' Association, H. B. Varner.

A plan was adopted for proving adequate funds to carry on the work of the association by the appointment of a finance committee composed of the following: P. A. Powers, Arthur S. Friend, William Fox, Richard Gradwell, J. E. Brulatour and James M. Sheldon.

It is the purpose greatly to extend the scope and activities of the National Association this year by coordinating various branches of the trade which are not in any way connected with the five branches of the national organization. It is contended that two thirds of the work at the association's headquarters in the Times Building is devoted to patriotic endeavor and to Government cooperation, entailing expenses which must be provided for.

The association has outgrown the present quarters, which have been occupied for two years, and it is not improbable that a readjustment of the offices will be made in the near future to provide room for the addition to the executive staff and in other ways carry on the constantly growing needs of the association, which since its inception, two years ago, has done so much to advance the interest of the industry and place it upon a parallel basis with the national organizations representing the other great industries of the nation.

Western Theaters Is Now United, Limited

Amalgamation of Canadian Concerns in Million-Dollar Corporation—Aim to Secure Larger Attractions.

ONE of the largest deals put through in Canadian theatrical circles was completed June 1 when an agreement was entered into whereby the Western Theater Company, Limited, amalgamated its interests under a new million-dollar corporation, to be known as the United Theaters, Limited.

The combination was not brought about through the desire of any of the parties in the deal to dominate the situation in Northwestern Canada, but all agreed that conditions existing in the territory made it absolutely necessary for the big exhibitors to pool their interests in order to secure the best possible attractions for their various theaters.

The officers of the new company are: J. R. Muir, president; M. J. Barr, vice-president; J. A. Schuberg, secretary-treasurer, and W. P. Dewees, general manager.

Any one who has followed their successful records in the theater business in Western Canada for the past eighteen years will have little doubt as to the future success of this new and gigantic enterprise.

Mr. Muir is one of the pioneer moving picture exhibitors of Vancouver, having started in the business here when it was in its infancy, and through successful management has succeeded in advancing his interests to such an extent that at the time of this amalgamation he was in control of three of the most successful theaters in Western Canada—the Dominion theater of Vancouver, the Dominion of Victoria and the Dominion of Nanaimo.

Mr. Barr, who is one of the associates of Mr. Muir, has not been actively engaged in the moving picture business in the past, but is one of Vancouver's best known and most successful business men.

Mr. Schuberg is one of the best known and most successful moving picture exhibitors in Western Canada, having in the city of Winnipeg alone theatrical holdings which will aggregate well on to half a million dollars, besides being heavily interested in the western theater enterprises in Vancouver. Taking into consideration the fact that these interests are practically allied at the present time the new company has an additional strength when it comes to buying power that it is believed will be impossible for any other such concern in Western Canada to equal.

Mr. Dewees, the general manager, upon whom falls the responsibility of securing attractions for the various theaters, is one of the best posted film men in the dominion, and his reputation for square dealing and his widespread connections in the film centers will assure this new company of the hearty support of all the film concerns both in Canada and the United States. This combination will in no way affect the present arrangement under which the various theaters are working with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited, of Canada.

SPEIRO IS OFF FOR SPARTANBURG.

Called to the colors under the draft, Gerald B. Speiro, who has been in the publicity department of the Fox Film Corporation for the last two years, has been sent to Camp Wadsworth at Spartanburg, S. C. Early in the war Mr. Speiro, who is a graduate of Columbia, volunteered for the aviation section of the Signal Corps, but was rejected because of defective eyesight. Before his departure, Mr. Speiro was presented a wrist watch by his friends.

Universal to Make Films for Government

Under Authority of Creel Committee Will Issue Fortnightly Series Devoted to War Activities.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has again been designated by the United States Government as the agency through which to discharge one of its most important and necessary war-time functions. Ever since we have been at war with Germany and more particularly recently there has been a desire to know what we are doing to win the war—what weapons we are using, how they are turned out, what are the actual conditions of training, how the boys live, how they fight and how they play. There are many things that cannot be told about our war work, but there are many, many things that can, and every government realizes that the telling of these is the greatest force which can be exerted in creating and increasing the morale of a great army.

There are only two ways to build up this morale—through the newspapers and on the motion picture screen. The Government has already utilized the animated weeklies extensively in waking up the country to the reality of war. The Agricultural Department entrusted to the Universal a most important contract dealing with its activities. A great official recognition of the essential character of the motion picture screen is the placing with Universal, through the Committee on Public Information, of a commission to film a series of single-reel features on "The Wonders of Our War Work," and to circulate them through the medium of the Universal exchanges, one every other week.

The first five of these subjects already have been suggested and written by Rufus Steele, the magazine writer and novelist, and known as the author of "The Eagle's Wings," a film which played a part in preparing this country for the industrial mobilization which is to win the war. Mr. Steele was drafted into service, and is now a member of the division of films, Committee on Public Information.

Mr. Steele is selecting a list of authorities on other Government activities. These men will write seven or more features in the series, all of which will bear the official sanction and authority of the Committee on Public Information. The release date of the first subject will be announced as soon as it is finished and sanctioned. It will be available also through the company's twenty foreign offices, for the Government desires these films to circulate in foreign countries as well as in America.

Sennott to Open Sherry Exchanges

General Manager of New Service Will Cover Eastern Territory, While D. J. Savage Tours Western.

NORMAN J. SENNOTT, general manager of the new William L. Sherry service, has left New York to open nine exchanges. He departed May 23 for Cleveland. Mr. Sennott will cover the country east of the Mississippi River and including the Mississippi Valley. He will open exchanges in Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Atlanta and either Washington or Philadelphia. In each case a completely equipped exchange will be installed, each office to conform in size to the territory allotted to it and will be patterned after plans laid out by Mr. Sherry regarding size of floor space, vault space, inspection room, etc, etc.

While Mr. Sennott is working his way through the eastern and central portion of the country, D. J. Savage, formerly with Mr. Sherry, will cover the west and arrange offices at principal distributing points there. Both will be gone from New York at least a month and possibly two months.

Among the latest accessions to the Sherry forces are Jack Goldstein, formerly of Paramount and more recently of the United Theaters of America, and E. H. Wells, who has been with Triangle. Mr. Goldstein will manage one of the exchanges of the Sherry Service, and Mr. Wells will be in charge of the Detroit exchange. P. H. Smith, now with Triangle, will join the Sherry organization on June 17, as general salesman for New York City.

Exchanges of the new service have now been opened in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Kansas City. The general manager, N. J. Sennott, and the general sales manager, Daniel J. Savage, are busily engaged in visiting the principal distributing points of the country and opening exchanges.

During the last few weeks Mr. Sherry has received a number of applications for immediate distribution of pictures. These he was unable to take care of because there had not been time to get his organization in shape. Now, however, he announces that he is ready for business. His first release will be the Frank A. Keeney picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," which will be ready for showings about the middle of June. Mr. Sherry says he believes this production will "go over big."

Jones a Believer in War Films

Chicago Exhibitor Says Box Office Figures Show They Have Done a Lot to Boost Business Generally.

AARON JONES, chief executive of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, First National franchise holders in Illinois, who has a directing finger in a score of Chicago's amusement enterprises, spent several days in New York recently and predicts that the silent drama will score as often as Ty Cobb this summer. He thinks it will be one of the best seasons on record, both for the downtown and outlying houses.

"I saw a line extending two hundred feet out into Randolph street during a heavy downpour of rain last Tuesday," said Mr. Jones, "and if people can stand a drenching to see a picture I do not think a little torrid weather will bother them. Of course 'Cleopatra' is an unusual picture, and I think I'd take a little ducking myself if I couldn't see this Fox masterpiece otherwise, but the report from motion picture houses generally is most encouraging. 'Tarzan of the Apes,' which also enjoyed a record run at the Colonial, will have one of the largest bookings locally of any picture in which I have been concerned.

"The war films have done a lot to boost the picture business, too. Some people may say that the public gets enough of the war from the press and from personal relations and prefers light comedy for its amusement, but box office figures do not uphold this argument. The war films are educational and inspiring. Truthful delineation on the screen and stage of the European horrors awakens the public to the real situation and the desperateness of it. It inspires them to 'get into the game,' or, if they cannot actually get into it, to give for the support of those who do.

"Much credit is to be given to men who produce such film masterpieces as 'Gerard's Four Years in Germany,' 'The Unbeliever,' 'Hearts of the World' and 'Over the Top.'

"There is no doubt, too, that the popular price of the motion picture is appealing to the masses these days. We should be glad that we can get such entertainment at from 15 cents to a dollar, and I am quite sure that the public is going to take that view of it throughout the coming warm months."

Sherry to Distribute De Luxe Pictures

Exchangeman and President Deitrich Make Agreement Whereby Latter Is to Produce Four to Eight Subjects Yearly.

OF especial interest to exhibitors is the announcement that William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, and Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., have entered into an agreement whereby all of the Doris Kenyon pictures will be distributed through the new Sherry organization. These pictures are said to be of an artistic character. They are being produced by Miss Kenyon's own company, of which Mr. Deitrich is president and general manager. The first release will be "The Street of Seven Stars," described as "a superlative, six-reel photoplay." It is by Mary Roberts Rinehart, from her story of the same name. The popularity of the story is demonstrated by the fact that it already has had a sale of more than 250,000 copies in book form. The picture was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien.

Under the terms of agreement between Mr. Deitrich and Mr. Sherry a minimum of four pictures and a maximum of eight will be produced each year for an extended term of years, with Miss Kenyon as star. Mr. Deitrich now has the motion picture rights on stories by half a dozen of the foremost authors of the world.

"I am convinced Mr. Sherry will not merely make a success of the Kenyon pictures," said Mr. Deitrich, "but also of his new distributing agency. He has wide experience to build upon, and he is getting together a force of men well versed in all the details of the marketing end of the business and absolutely loyal to their chief. Mr. Sherry is also distributing the Frank A. Keeney pictures, with Catherine Calvert as star, but will not allow the distribution of the pictures of either concern to interfere in any way with those of the other. As in the case of the Keeney pictures, no pains or expense has been spared to make the Kenyon pictures first class in every particular."

Hutchinson Offers Big Money for Scripts

American's President Announces He is Ready to Pay as High as $25,000 for a Story.

PRESIDENT Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company, Inc., has thrown his hat into the scenario market. He announces that he stands ready to pay anywhere from $1,000 to $25,000 for stories from which future American productions will be made. He asserts that the very best is none too good for him; that he wants to receive stories, scripts, scenarios, etc., from America's foremost authors; that he well realizes he will be expected to pay unusually high prices for the best work of America's best authors, but that he is eager and willing to pay almost any price if he can only obtain the high type of story he is seeking.

"I am convinced the story is the thing," said Mr. Hutchinson. "We all know the story is the foundation of every big motion picture success. The best director and the best star in the world are handicapped from the start when called upon to work with a mediocre story. The better the story the better the finished picture, providing the star and the director are worthy of their opportunity.

"We have determined to go after the finest stories that have ever been screened," continued Mr. Hutchinson, "and if money will bring them to us we are going to get them. We are prepared to pay anywhere from $1,000 to $25,000 for stories from which to make forthcoming American feature pictures. We invite the foremost authors of the entire world to submit the children of their brains to us. We bar none. There is no author living who is too big, too well known, too famous, for us to consider purchasing his story. By that I mean whose work is beyond our price. We shan't accept anybody's story solely because it was written by this or that author of note. The author's name means nothing to us. His fame won't sell his story to us. The story will be chosen purely on its merits.

"We will consider not alone the works of famous authors, original manuscripts, etc., but will be willing to buy the motion picture rights to proved stage successes, famous books, or simply a big idea for a play. It's the story, the plot, the theme we are after. We place no restrictions upon the author. We don't specify he shall write a drama or comedy, or a comedy-drama for us. We'll consider them all. He isn't required to submit a script for a five or a six or an eight or a ten reel feature. We'll decide how long the picture shall be after we buy the story. The stories don't have to be fitted to the personality of any particular star. We will go after the necessary stars if we haven't them already on our payrolls.

"Authors may rest assured that adequate production will be given their stories. We would never think of offering such prices for stories unless we were prepared to spend a proportionate amount upon staging the play properly. It would be folly to invest $1,000 or $5,000 or $25,000 in a story and then set about making a mediocre film. Ample time will be taken with each production to make certain that we properly present it. But first of all we must have the stories. We expect to be ready to release these subjects some time in the fall."

Perret to Make Patriotic Series

Pictures Are Designed to Illustrate the Growth of Fraternal Feeling Between France and America.

ONE of the interesting happenings of the past week was the occasion of the commencement of the production of a patriotic series of films when on Friday afternoon, June 7, before a gathering composed of representatives of the press and prominent persons, including M. E. Ratisbone, chief of the French photographic division; M. Aimel, editor-in-chief of the French publication The New France; M. Gaston Liebort, French consul; M. Maracine, French vice-consul; M. Guy, head of the department of French propaganda in the United States, and M. Lucien Muratore, the French opera star, one of the big scenes of the first of the series was enacted by a cast headed by Dolores Cassinelli and directed by Leonce Perret. The scene of the gathering was at the Leonce Perret Studio (Pathe), 134th street and Park avenue, New York.

This series of films is intended to portray the growing fraternity between the peoples of the United States and France which has been brought about by the war. One of the points upon which Director Perret will dwell in the making of the series is the manner in which our American boys are being received in French homes.

The particular set, which was erected for the occasion, was unusually elaborate, and viewed either from the gallery of the studio or from a point of vantage on the platform, which commanded a deep perspective, which included a drawing-room scene in the front with deep staircase and ballroom in the rear, was very impressive. If the series lives up to what might be expected from Friday's demonstration it will surely be something worth while.

Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln acted as hosts, and served the guests with refreshments. A stirring address was made by M. Ratisbone, in which he paid tribute to M. Perret and his company, and also read a letter from Captain Henry Tardieu, head of the French High Commission to the United States, offering M. Perret every official co-operation on the part of the French Government toward the success of his venture.

Hodkinson Optimistic on Return of Trip

After Absence from New York Film Man Expresses Confidence in Industry's Future Welfare.

RETURNING, after a trip of over four months, W. W. Hodkinson seemed very pleased and well satisfied to be back at his office at 527 Fifth avenue. After expressing pleasure in the appearance of his offices, which have been extensively enlarged and altered in his absence, Mr. Hodkinson replied to the usual questions of what his opinion was after making his trip by saying:

"I see no reason for the pessimism expressed by some members of the industry. My observations and results obtained while in the field have brought to me a sense of optimism and confidence not only in our own success, but also in the future welfare of the entire industry.

"As everyone is already aware, the Hodkinson co-partnership plan has embraced practically the entire western half of the United States, and the biggest and best exhibitors of that territory are with us.

"While compared to the mushroom (so-called) growth of some new schemes in the market this may not appear in its true perspective, but experience teaches us that any project of merit built on principle and right is slow rather than swift in its advance, yet, with all its development, just as with our plan, is sure and steady.

"A sense of responsibility to the exhibitor led me to delay certain plans of my own in order to see that the product which at present forms the basis of Hodkinson Service was made sure and settled. The results obtained in the reorganization of Paralta have made us all feel reassured and satisfied that in the future our plans will go ahead, and we shall be able to supply the exhibitor with the standard quality of product that we have assured him.

"Probably but one thing that will be most evident to the exhibitor as an earnest of our good faith and desire to give him only the best lies in the institution of a new series featuring Miss Glaum."

Select's Eastern Managers to Meet

Conference in New York Will Inaugurate Series of Similar Sessions to Be Held Throughout the Country.

A SUMMONS to a conference of Select branch managers, to be held in the home office June 12 and 13, has been issued by General Manager Arthur S. Kane. This meeting will be attended by branch managers whose exchanges are near New York. It will be followed by a similar conference held with Chicago as its central point, and this will be followed by other conferences to be held in other parts of the country, which will in the end have embraced all of the Select branches.

The New York conference will be attended by Henry Siegel of the New York Exchange; Max Wilder, Philadelphia; Charles R. Rogers, Boston; S. S. Webster, Buffalo; V. P. Whitaker, Washington; Leo F. Levison, Pittsburgh; Sam E. Morris, Cleveland, and T. O. Tuttle, Atlanta. J. S. Woody, field manager, will come on from St. Louis, and for the home office, besides General Manager Kane, President Lewis J. Selznick, Treasurer Morris Kohn and others will attend the conference.

This is the first occasion since the organization of the company that the Select Corporation has brought its branch officials together for a confab. Therefore, many of the branch managers will become acquainted with managers in other exchanges for the first time, and also this will mark the first visit to the home office of some of the men.

The second of the series of conferences will be held at Chicago, where Select's office is presided over by Fred Aiken, June 19 and 20. President Selznick and General Manager Kane will go to Chicago for that purpose.

First National Gets "Pershing's Crusaders"

Committee on Public Information Announces That Distributing Company Will Handle Government Production.

THE Committee on Public Information has just made another important move. Announcement is made by Charles S. Hart, director of the division of films, that the contract for national distribution has been awarded to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc. With reference to this matter Mr. Hart said:

"In placing 'Pershing's Crusaders,' the first official feature, for distribution through regular motion picture channels, our purpose is to have it reach the largest possible number of people.

"While the First National Exhibitors' Circuit will handle this picture, nationally, it has been necessary to withhold the states of California, North Dakota and Michigan because of contracts which already existed to handle United States war pictures through their State Councils of Defense. Exhibitors in these three states will apply to their State Councils for bookings.

"The circulation of 'Pershing's Crusaders' to the public, reaching as it will peoples of all nationalities within the United States, should have, and without doubt will have, a most beneficial effect.

"The primary object of the United States official films is to publish information of our Government's war activities. Hardly a home in the land but has sent at least one boy to the front; then each has contributed money to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., bought Liberty Bonds and in other ways supported war enactments. Naturally, these patriotic citizens want to know how their boys are being cared for and what is being done with this money. United States Official War Films tell the complete story. They depict more graphically than words the actual facts.

"It seems unnecessary to add that the sole purpose for the existence of this division is to help win the war. It helps by making pictures such as 'Pershing's Crusaders' and then arranging for their most thorough and rapid distribution to the waiting public.

"Other feature films will be released from time to time. Several of these are already in preparation. Like 'Pershing's Crusaders,' they will be played first by this division in the large cities and then released by contract on bids for distribution through the motion picture agencies. A war review will also be another form of film release, arrangements for which are not fully consummated."

WORLD PRODUCES MARAVENE THOMPSON STORY.

The first motion picture to be written by Maravene Thompson, the famous writer, whose stories appear in leading periodicals, and whose novels are best sellers, has been made by World Pictures. This picture bears the title of "The Heart of a Girl," and it will be published by the World on July 1. Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings are the stars in this production.

"The Heart of a Girl' is refreshingly novel in theme and presentation. It will receive much attention throughout the industry because of the fact that it was written by Mrs. Thompson and because Barbara Castleton, the newest World star, is the star of the production. It was directed by John G. Adolf.

Don't Forget Flag Day Is June 14

President Laemmle Passes on to Exhibitors the Request Made by Patriotic Societies.

PRESIDENT Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Company has made a personal request of all of the motion picture trade papers that they concentrate in their news columns in order to call the attention of the exhibitors of the country the importance of properly celebrating flag day on June 14 next, the one hundred forty-first birthday of the Stars and Stripes.

The appeal by Mr. Laemmle was sent out at the request of several patriotic societies, among them the National Security League. The appeal from the latter says:

"We are extremely anxious to have the motion picture houses take up Flag Day, as we think it would have a good effect upon their patrons, it being the first time in a long time that an appeal was made to patriotism which at the same time was not an appeal to the pocket book."

Mr. Laemmle suggests that for June 14 every motion picture in the country decorate its lobby with the Stars and Stripes to the exclusion of every other flag. He also suggests that the screen might be banked with American flags kept rippling continually with breezes from electric fans.

Mae Marsh, Philosopher

MAE MARSH is as varied in her moods off the screen as she is on it, and always she is a delightful, appealing girl, beloved by her associates at the Goldwyn Studios and adored by her family, her friends and her servants. Success has not spoiled her, nor has she lost one whit of her enthusiasm over appearing in motion pictures.

"Success in any other field of endeavor brings hardships," she said to a visitor at the studio the other day, "but with me everything is ideal. Life is glorious, and just the joy of living and being young and knowing that my efforts are appreciated—it is all too wonderful.

Mae Marsh.

"All my life I have read biographies of actors, singers, artists and workers in various fields, and I learned—even before I dreamed of being an actress myself—that success is never achieved without sacrifice. Think of the writers, the scientists and the great figures in the world's history who have toiled for years without a tithe of the material success we girls in motion pictures enjoy. Indeed, many a great genius has passed on with no reward at all. Not that I call myself a great genius, but I do enjoy the reward."

Rarely does Mae Marsh go to the theater. She prefers to spend her evenings receiving her girl friends or trying her hand at sculpture, an avocation in which she shows real talent. Public restaurants do not know her, for when it is necessary to seek refreshment away from her home Mae Marsh makes her way to her natural environment, a charming tea shop. To keep herself unknown to the public, except through her work on the screen, might be said to be her mission in life.

E. C. JENSEN JOINS THE ARMY.

E. C. Jensen, who for some time has been western manager for World Pictures, with headquarters in San Francisco, is among the World men now in the army. Mr. Jensen answered the call of the last May draft from his board in Brooklyn, and was assigned to service at Camp Upton, Long Island. Mr. Jensen, who is but twenty-three years old, has covered America from coast to coast and from Canada to Mexico in the interests of World Pictures, during the past two years. His genial smile and his ready humor has endeared him to hundreds of exhibitors, who will hear of his army service with much interest. It is said of Mr. Jensen that he personally knows as many exhibitors as any other man in the film industry.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

MAURICE TOURNEUR rises to protest against the screen vampire. "The vamp is psychologically all wrong," declares the producer. "I do not believe that any man, unless he himself wills it, can become the victim of any woman after the fashion of the hypnotized slaves of the film vampire. This idea that the vampire can make a captive of any man by merely rolling her eyes in his direction is as far from life as the Kaiser is from success.

"In the first place, the very makeup and dress of the vampire would put any man upon his guard. That's why I protest against the sneering, wriggling, cigarette-smoking vampire of the films. There ain't no 'such' cold-blooded being in real life. On the other hand, the really deadly female is the little ingenue type of cutie who radiates innocence and guilelessness. There are more men led astray by pure than by impure women.

"I understand that a play called 'A Fool There Was!', based on the Kipling poem, started the vampire craze on the stage and that it soon spread to the movies. The studio demand for tiger-skin rugs, peacock feathers and cigarettes has been appalling. We've had vamps everywhere. And only last season a certain stage comedy advertised its baby vampire.

"The authors of that piece had the right idea. Let wives look to the bolts of their windows and doors when the guileless baby vampire approaches."

Once in a blue moon a man of authority, experience, sound judgment, and full mental equipment, tackles a screen problem and disposes of the matter so completely that no room is left to say one single word in addition thereto. Certainly it would be wrong for a space-killer of such immature experience as The Rambler to attempt any comment.

But we are quite willing to contribute any or all of the good white paper that has been assigned to our meanderings; to open this department to a full and fr discussion of this vampire business that it may be officially, finally, fully and authoritatively settled once and for all.

Let any and all who have defenses of the vampire to submit, speed their screeds by first post or special messenger.

Cerberus Changes His Location.

Henry Warwick, who has been associated with World-Pictures since last fall, nearly succeeded in emulating the achievement of the master who painted grapes so naturally that the birds pecked at them. Under the direction of Travers Vale he is playing the part of a distinguished foreign diplomat which calls for a full square beard, in the manhandling of which Mr. Warwick excels.

Coming across on the Fort Lee ferry for location in New York Mr. Warwick left the motor car to stretch his legs and fondle his beard. Frock-coated, silk-hatted and dark-spectacled, he strolled, inadvertently, into the ladies' cabin, where he continued puffing a cigarette.

Cerberus, in the shape of the colored porter, approached and observing the distinguished foreigner flirting with my Lady Nicotine in prohibited area, he deferentially removed his cap and with many bows and quirks thus addressed the "diplomat":

"Beg pardon, boss, beg pardon!—'scuse me for mention it boss—but dere am a regulation which do not permit" * * *
